TUESDAY AFTERNOON, April 2, 1872.

Ancient Predictions Concerning the Events of 1872.

To the Editor of the New York World:

SIR: When two months ago, M. Villemessant, editor of the Paris Figaro, called on the Comte de Chambord at at the Schweitzer Hot, Lucerne, with the view of inducing that personage to make a fusion with the Orleanists, he was answered by a magnificent wave of the hand and a royally emphatic denial. "Mine is the white flag forever, and the lillies will bloom forever on my escutcheon," proudly exclaimed the last of the Bourbons. Really M. Villemessant ought to have known better than to expose himself to such a rebuff. For once the Parisian barber was not so shrewd as his namesake from Seville. He must have forgotten that Henri, Comte de Chambord is the man of destiny; that to him all the prophecies of the last 500 years point as the great King, and that he cannot compromise his cause by allying it in any way with the revolution. It must have escaped him, more especially, as this year is the holy year of fulfillment, and that, at length, after forty years of weary waiting, the grandson of Charles X. is to be rewarded for his fidelity to principle by entering on the enjoyment of his crowd. Yes, the year 1872 is to be the glorious year of the modern world.

IT IS DESTINED

to open a new era, or rather to be the beginning of the end of times. To be convinced of this we have only to sum up the incredible marvels of which it is to be the witness.

I. A frightful civil war will be waged between the three great parties of France—legitimists, republicans and Bonapartists. This war will certainly take place within the year 1872.

II. Paris will be destroyed after terrible struggles wherein blood will flow in streams.

III. The Comte de Chambord will be declared king of France under the title of Henry V.

IV. There will be civil war in England, Italy, and other states of Europe.

V. The civil war in Europe will be quelled by Henry V.

VII. Alsace and Lorraine will be restored to France.

VIII. The French under the command of Henry V. will march through Europe as conquerors and even penetrate into a portion of Asia.

IX. Ireland and Poland will be freed; England and Germany will return to orthodoxy, and Islamism will be destroyed.

X. A great battle, called "the battle of the binch tree," will be fought, in which Henry V. will annihilate the the armies of Russia and Prussia.

It is not ascertained at what precise date some of the latter events will take place, but it cannot be very long after the ascension of Henry V. because that Prince is now fifty-two years of age, and, although the prophets give him multitudinous victory, they do not seem to have accorded to him unusual longevity. We shall examine now a little in detail the grounds on which all these wonderful events are thus clearly and boldly foretold. For this purpose it is not necessary to enter into dry archæological researches.

THE GREAT KING AND THE GREAT PONTIFF.

Clear vaticinations about the advent of a great king and a great Pope at the end of the ages are constantly met with in early mediæval literature, and fragmentary traditions of the same are to be found among all European nations, and stranger still, among all the peoples of the far East. About this fact there is no doubt among scholars. The trouble among commentators has been to determine who the great king is and when he is to make his appearance. Now, however, the point seems be happily decided to to the satisfaction of all patriotic Frenchmen. He is to be a Gaul or Frank, and behold the proofs.

REMIGIUS TO CLOVIS.

So far back as the sixth century St. Remigius said to Clovis: "Learn, my son, that the kingdom of France is predestined of God to defend the Roman Church, which is the sole true Church of Christ. That kingdom will one day be great among the kingdoms of the earth, will embrace all the limits of the Roman Empire; it will submit all other kingdoms to the sway; it will last to the end of time."

The Venerable Bede, in the seventh century, commending this prophecy, sought to corroborate it by the ancient Sybilline oracles. Raban Maurus, abbot of Falda, wrote in 828: "Our Doctors say that one of the kings of France will reign over the whole of the Roman empire. This will be at the end of time, and he will be greatest and the last of all kings." He then adds that after a glorious reign, the great king will go to Jerusalem and lay down his crown and his sceptre on Mount Olivet. "This will be the end and consummation of the Holy Roman and Christian empire."

The monk Adson repeated this tradition in the tenth century, and it gradually became so popularly known that Tasso celebrated it in his "Ottave." Cæsarius, whose prophecy is found entire in the "Liber Mirabilis," printed in 1524, wrote these remarkable words: "After the entire universe, and particularly France, and in France the provinces of the North and East, especially Lorraine and Champagne, shall have fallen a prey to gigantic miseries and the greatest tribulations, these provinces will be succored by a prince, banished in his youth, who will recover the crown of lillies. This prince will extend his dominions everywhere, and will rule the whole earth. At the same time there will be a great pontiff, very holy and very perfect. He will have with him that great king belonging to the remains of the most saintly blood of the kings of France. This great king will help the great Pope to reform the world." Jerome Botin wrote in 1410: "After a little more than four centuries shall have elapsed, the earth will be desolated and the church reduced to mourning; the shepherd will be struck and the flock dispersed, but the dew of heaven will fall and the altars of Beelzebub be overturned and the workers of iniquity will be scattered and perish. There will be a child of the blood of the kings produced by the people of Artois (Henry V. is grandson of Charles X. Count of Artois), and he will govern France with prudence and honor."

THE PROPHECY OF THE LILLIES.

This ancient prophecy is preserved by David Parcus in his commentary on the Apocalypse, printed at Heidelberg, 1616. The following is the most striking passage: "Toward the end of time there will appear a great monarch of the nation of the most illustrious lily; he will have a large forehead, high brows, great eyes and a beaked nose. He will gather a powerful army and will crush all the enemies of his kingdom. He will subdue the Turks and the barbarians and none will be able to resist him, for the arm of the Lord will be ever with him and he will rule the whole earth. His reign will be called the paradise of good Christians." Through Jacob Boehme and others it seems evident that the same prophecy was current in Germany, where the era of lillies or lilienzeit is well known. A similar remark may be made with regard to Italy. I need quote only from the Placentian prophecy, so called because found in a manuscript of the Placenza library. The following verses are certainly worthy of attention, as making distinct mention of the tricolor:

Post decimis jam labentibus annis
Bella, fames, pestis, francos * * *
* * * Gallorum terna colorum (Rex magnus)
Sternet humi, reduces statuet pen propria regna.
* * * In terra * * * Sanctus et æquus—Pastor erit.

EASTERN PROPHECIES.

All the people of the East, without exception—Abyssinians, Armenians, Arabs, Turks, Syrians, Indians, Cochin Chinese—have traditions dated from the most remote times, perfectly analogous to these of the West. The Turkish traditions are naturally the most curious of these, inasmuch as their invariable burden is this: The destruction of the Ottoman Empire by the Christians or Franks, and these Franks are to be led by a great King, who will submit the whole Orient to the religion of the Christ. These Oriental traditions have always been so popularly credited that the Arabs and Turks of Jerusalem walled up the gate by which the prophecy indicated the great King of the Franks is to enter when he comes to subjugate the East.

An English chronicler of the twelfth century relates that the golden gate of Stamboul bore this inscription: "When cometh the blonde king of the West, I will open of myself." The Greeks had walled it up, and the Latins did not pass through it in 1204, but set up an equestrian statue representing the future great King, with all the minute facial features described in the prophecies.

THE GREAT BATTLE OF THE WORLD.

Strange to say, it is in the German prophecies that we find the details of the first victory which the great King of the French is to win over the Germans. These prophecies were collected and published at Cologne by the monks of Woerl. The points in which they all agree are: A general war in Europe, preceded by political convulsions and particular wars—the heterodox East and North fighting against the orthodox West and South. The definitive victory of the latter under the great King, who rises all at once and triumphs in a great battle delivered in autumn, at the Birch-tree Crossroads, between Woerl and Cologne, in Westphalia, that is on the banks of the Rhine. Here German prophecies repeat that the color of the conquering King and of his army will be white. They add, however, that he will be lame of the right leg, and will mount his horse by the left foot. Unfortunately, we believe, the Comte de Chambord has not yet seen fit to fulfill this condition.

IS IT THE KING OF PRUSSIA?

Some presumptuous German has thrown out the suspicion that it is, perhaps, Wilhelm, king of Prussia, who is pointed out by the seers as the hero of such triumphs. Has he not been saluted in the German Walhalla as Wilhelm der Siegreich? But let the Germans beware and tremble, for so far from enjoying such honor, Prussia has risen high only to fall to the lowest depths. The versified predictions of Friar Hermann on the destinies of Prussia have not even the oracular merit of a double meaning. They are plain, blunt, ferocious. They announce the greatest misfortunes for King William, who will be the "last of his race," and for the kingdom of Prussia, "which will melt away like snow before the sun." Contemporaneo..y with the great King liberator, the same prophecies declare "that there will be a great pontiff who will recover his flock; that the wolf will cease to lay snares before the Lord's fold; that the ancient abbeys will rise from their ruins, and that the clergy will be re-established in all their virtues and former glories."

BATTALIONS IN THE PLAIN.

In Poland there is any number of traditions similar to the above. The one predominating over the others is that of a great battle which is to decide the fate of Europe and the resurrection of Poland, and in which France, under a great King, is to take a decisive part. The date of this battle will be synchronous with the canonization of the holy Bobola, a Polish martyr, who, in a vision, painted an immense plain covered with innumerable battalions, where all nations were combatting, with the French at the head. Then explained Bobola: "When the war will be over, Poland will be re-established, and I will be recognized as its principal patron. Confidence! You will soon see these marvels." Now the blessed Bobola, as it happens, was canonized at the last Petrine Centennial, in 1866. From the foregoing, therefore, it appears that those who love the emotional will have plenty of it in this eventful year. They need not go in search of it; it will come readily to their hand. Let them watch the march of events in Europe; especially let them not take their eye off the Comte de Chambord. Events perfectly unintelligible hitherto will become relatively plain in the light of these prophecies. A special recommendation I venture to make is, to indulge in no irreverent nineteenth century skepticism. If there be a little delay in the work of fulfillment, let us have patience. If there is a hitch somewhere in the combination of circumstances, then a little charity will be necessary. But in any case don't be too hard on the venerable seers. Take a lesson from the following example: There was a prophecy about the last French-German war that the Prussians would not enter Blois, whatever they might do with Tours, Orleans, Chateaudun, and other adjacent towns. But the impudent Prussians did enter Blois! Ah, then, what about the prophecy? Only—a mistaken interpretation; it did not apply to the last war, but will apply to the next. However, we must not scoff altogether. There have been prophets before to-day, and their predictions have been terribly fulfilled. To say nothing of older events, there is not the shadow of a doubt that the great cataclysm of the French revolution was distinctly foretold by different seers centuries before it took place. It is well known that Nostradamus foreold that event with wonderful precision. Johann Muller, Bishop of Regensburg, who died in 1476, also left a prophecy in Latin verse.

This is the most remarkable prophecy which I know of, because it points to the very year of the event foretold. If one prophet could thus speak true, why might not others speak true also?

SI NON E VERO.

MONTREAL, February 25.

Work and Win.

The above heading is taken from a political article; and I thought on perusing the stirring enthusiastic appeal for party interest and policy, that if we as a people who believe we are the generation on whom the "ends of the world are to come," had half the zeal and practical working of the political parties of the present day, we truly should see different results for strength, union, power and victory.

And this has set me to wondering whether, "the children of this world are not wiser in their generation than the children of light," or in other words are they not in systematic work and earnest efforts and activity in their course far ahead of the church?

I will quote a few sentences from the article: "We have the requisite strength to elect our candidate. What we have the ability to do we are resolved we will do. To make our work effective beyond every contingency, there must be every where organization and work. Strong as our party is; strong in its principles and in the confidence of the people, it cannot afford to underrate the strength of the enemy, and the elements arrayed against it."

Of the side issues and some small organizations it remarked, "They both have one tendency, if not one purpose. They are both, whatever some honest men may think to the contrary, parties of decoy scouts; for party interests and the building up of a few men. But the mask is off. We are not to be deceived, as a people we have honest, competent and patriotic men who will not be drawn away by any side issues, in the Quixotic hope of effecting any moral reform."

The final appeal was for one and all to work. "Work with your neighbors. Talk with your neighbors. See that no lie finds lodgment in any honest man's heart. Watch the enemy at all points, and at all hours; he is desperate in a desperate cause, and will not stop at any trick or falsehood that can serve his purpose. Follow him up with a vigilance equal to his own, and wherever he sows a falsehood, there plant the truth. We repeat it, we are working and prepared to work with a will. Let this be the pass-word, and the word of salutation from this till the day of election, and we guarantee that the word to follow shall be victory."

There are a few sentences in the article "Work and Win" which I have long felt down deep in my heart were needed to be carried out practically among us as a people. Such appeals from our leading men, with the action, would tell,—but for me to make them I have had a shrinking timidity, as though I should be presuming and out of my place. When I have read the leaders in our political journals, I have often heaved a sigh and said, Oh! if our people only had this action and zeal in the cause of Christ!

Our strength is requisite, Jesus is at the helm. Our trust is in one whose promises never fail. The enemy is strong, but if we obey our Captain's orders there is no such word as fail. And if we "work with a will," we can "guarantee our word to follow will be VICTORY."

Let us remember that union is strength, an army divided soon falls into the enemy's power. Nothing pleases the adversary more than these divisions and subdivisions in our ranks. We want loyal men and women, who will act on true principles. Men and women filled with the Spirit and power, who will work for the cause of God in this age when his judgments are abroad in the land and infidelity is overpowering the church.

Eld. Joshua V. Himes' Late Visit to Rochester.

Recently, for three weeks the church at Rochester have been favored with the ministrations of Eld. J. V. Himes, and a glorious revival has been the result. His capacity for labor is something wonderful. In the three weeks from Feb. 11 to March 5 he preached in Rochester twenty-five times, in Springwater twice, visited friends in Lockport and Brockport, made about sixty pastoral visits in Rochester, and conducted his department of THE TIMES besides faithfully attending to a large private correspondence. In his stirring and intensely active life he finds abundant material for his Journal, which has long been a most attractive feature of THE TIMES. Eld. Himes is 66 years old; but in vitality, industry and force of will he surpasses most young men of thirty. The church at Rochester feel profoundly grateful to him for his valuable services. His sermons were for the most part devoted to practical subjects calculated to encourage the faithful, awaken the unconverted and convince the unbelieving. Those on "The Ministry of Christ," "The Efficacy of Prayer," and "The Saints' Inheritance" will not soon be forgotten.

A DISCUSSION

BETWEEN

Eld. Clark Braden, of the Christian Church, and Eld. Himes, of the Advent Christian Ti

Upon Four Propositions, Invol[illegible] of Man, the State of the Dea[illegible] Rewards and Punis[illegible]

ELD. CLARK BRADEN'S SEV[illegible] LETTER.

We have now presented to [illegible] aders two articles without noticing our opponent's objections to them. We did so to lift the discussion out of the ruts into which it had fallen. We will now reply to all that we deem worthy of notice. Our opponent's attempts to array our second letter against our succeeding letters is futile, and not really honest. Our arguments from the Old Scriptures are not based on man's declarations, or his ideas or knowledge, but on the declarations of God himself concerning his relation to the patriarchs, and against necromancy. Man's ignorance does not affect God's declarations one way or the other. If my opponent is conversant with classic literature, he knows that Homer and subsequent classic writers, even down to Virgil, who wrote almost in the days of our Savior, speak of the shades of the departed just as the Hebrews did, as being in a dreamy phantom state, and yet they believed in necromancy.

The imposture and deception involved in astrology and divination no more affect the reality of necromancy than they do the reality of consulting familiar spirits. Consulting existing intelligences, such as evil spirits, was possible, and my opponent admits a reality; and so was consulting the spirits of the dead mentioned with it. Men could and did consult spirits, both of devils, wicked and departed men. God in Is. 8:19 declares the reality of consulting the spirits of the dead. We place the law prohibiting necromancy with the one forbidding consulting familiar spirits, where it belongs, and one was as real as the other. Hence the spirits of the wicked dead had as real and as conscious existence as had evil spirits or demons.

The attempt to evade the force of the argument on Ex. 3:6, by stating that the verb am is not expressed in the original, is certainly the weakest dodge I ever knew a man to resort to by way of evasion. The relation is the same, whether the copulative verb be there or not. It is now agreed by both parties that the purpose of God in Ex. 3:6 was to declare to Moses his relation to the patriarchs. Our argument is this. He affirmed or declared an existing relation. He affirmed a present fact. He was not prophesying or making a promise, hence there can be no prolepsis. My opponent dare not say that this language is either prophecy or promise. He knows it is an affirmation of an existing fact. It affirms the relation between God and the patriarchs as an existing fact. We objected also that as man then knew nothing of the resurrection, the use of prolepsis would be deceptive. We then say that when God declared, as an existing, present fact, "I am the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob," the patriarchs had an actual living existence when he so spoke.

We now propose to rail this fact beyond all cavil, and forever, by one of my opponent's own quotations. In Gen. 28:13, God says to Jacob, 'I am the God of Abraham and Isaac.' Abraham was then dead, and Isaac was alive, hence he sustained the same relation to the dead Abraham that he did to the living Isaac. The departed Abraham had as real an existence as Isaac. There can be no prolepsis here. The copula of this sentence is not used in different senses in relation to the qualifying phrases, 'of Isaac,' and 'of Abraham.' Abraham had as real an existence as had Isaac. So had Abraham, Isaac and Jacob a real living existence when God spoke to Moses, though they had been dead for five hundred years. Our Savior's language, "He is not the God of the dead (such dead as you Sadducees make them) but of the living" (present existing), settles this beyond cavil.

Then Abraham was conscious and alive when God spoke to Jacob, and so were the patriarchs when God spoke to Moses. The relation could not exist unless the parties both existed, one as much as the other. All live to him, does not mean all will live to him, but live to him now. Therefore God can quicken our bodies, by the re-entrance of our spirits, and raise them from the grave. I will stake my reputation as a scholar that the sentence, "I am teaching a Normal Class," does not affirm the existence of a Normal Class, but the fact that I am teaching. It necessarily implies that a Normal Class exists. The sentence, "I am the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob," does not affirm that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob exist, but the relation existing between them and God when God spoke. But it as necessarily implies the existence of the patriarchs, as am teaching, am teacher, implies the existence of the Normal Class. The relation of teacher, the act of teaching, could not exist unless the class existed, any more than it could if the teacher did not exist. Just as the fact of Godship—the relation of Godship to the patriarchs could not exist unless the patriarchs actually existed, any more than it could without God's existence. The use of the expression in Gen. 28:13, in reference to the departed Abraham and the living Isaac, shows that the relation is real, and the same in one case as in the other. Now I hope all caviling on that is ended.

The difference between an affirmation and a necessary implication is this: The affirmation is what is declared in the sentence to be a truth, or what is predicated of the subject of the sentence. A necessary implication is another idea or thought, that must be true, or the predicate cannot be truthfully affirmed of the subject. The affirmation in Ex. 3:6 is the relation that God then sustained to the patriarchs. The necessary implication is that the patriarchs had then an actual living existence, for the relation could not be truthfully affirmed unless they had such existence. So our Savior declares: He is not the God of such dead as you Sadducees (and modern soul-sleepers) make the dead, but of the living, consciously existing, for all live, all the dead consciously exist unto him.

The attempt to set aside the appearance of the spirit of Moses to our Savior and his disciples on the mount, is very weak. It is urged that it was a vision. Granted. But angels appeared and talked to men in vision scores of times. The sight and hearing was as real on the mount, as was the sight of the angels around Samaria real to Elisha's servant. Daniel saw and heard Gabriel in vision; but he heard and saw him. Gabriel was there for nearly all the prophetic part of the book is what he said, when Daniel saw and heard him. Zachariah saw and heard the angel in the temple, in a vision. The angel was there and was seen and heard. In like manner, on the mount, Jesus was seen and heard. So was Elias. So did the disciples see and hear each other. God, Christ, Elias, and the disciples were heard. The disciples as certainly heard Moses in vision as they heard each other, Jesus, Elias, or God, in vision. They as certainly saw him as they saw each other, Elias, and Christ in vision. Why does my opponent make that part of the vision that does not contradict his theory real, and make that part that contradicts it, a phantom, a delusion? Why does he play, "Now you see it, and now you don't," in this style wit[illegible]he word of God?

Observ[illegible]he thimble-rigging resorted to here. The di[illegible]s saw Jesus and each other in vision. Th[illegible]eard the spirit of God in vision. Zachar[illegible]aw and heard the spirit angel in vision. Daniel saw and heard the spirit Gabriel in vision. So in scores of cases men saw and heard spirits in vision. They did so in all cases when it does not affect my opponent's theory. But the appearance of the translated Elijah is not real. He was not there. It was a cunningly devised fable, an imaginary scene, a delusion. So the appearance of Moses was not real. He was not there. It was a cunningly devised fable, a delusion. All this in the face of Peter's declaration that they were eye-witnesses; that they saw and heard; and the inspiredratciahof ldete on writers that they saw and heard; also in flat contradiction of all consistency and common sense. It makes a reality of just what will not contradict soul-sleeping, and a fable, a delusion of the rest.

Moses was not resurrected, for Christ, the Scriptures say, in four places, is the first one resurrected. Our opponent's appeal to the persons raised in miracles is worthy of an infidel. Make the Scriptures flatly contradict, rather than give up my hobby. These raisings from the dead are not resurrections with a glorified body. Moses, body had decayed thirteen hundred years. It was not raised up. I remarked that Moses died as a brute dies. We have a characteristic dodge in our opponent's query, "Why not the soul of the brute survive death as well as that of Moses?" The dissolution was the same in each case, but the soul of the brute does not survive death, unless the soul of the brute and the spirit of man are the same. The spirit of Moses returned to God a rational, conscious entity. If the brute has body, soul, and spirit as man has, the event of death might be the same to each. But my opponent dare not affirm one of these positions. Language is not susceptible of being arrayed to characterize with sufficient severity the duplicity and cowardice of such questions.

We have at last a suggestion of what our opponent means by spirit in man. We can not tell, however, whether he regards it as a material part of the body, for he says that soul or spirit, apart from the body, has no more consciousness than the heart or reins. Or whether he makes it a phenomenon of our material organization, like our thoughts, (for he so regards our thoughts,) for he appeals to Paul's language concerning our thoughts excusing and accusing, to set aside our reasoning for the conscious existence of the spirit. Or whether he regards it as a function of the material organization, like sight, or tase, or smell. He rather seems to affirm the latter. When Paul prays for the sanctification of body soul and spirit what does he mean? When he declares that the spirit in man knows what is in him, what does he mean? What does dividing soul and spirit mean?

Does Paul in 1 Thes. 5:23 mean sanctify your body and parts of your body—soul and spirit? Does he mean sanctify your bodies and your hopes, fears, thoughts, pains, and aches, and other phenomena of your natural organization? Or does he mean sanctify your bodies and the functions of your bodies, such as sight, smell and taste, or soul and spirit? What does my opponent mean by man's faculty for knowledge? A faculty of what? Matter? Or mind? He speaks of man's body being animated by a spirit. What is it that animates the body? A phenomenon of the body like thirst or pain? Or a function of the body like smell or taste? I defy the gentleman to give a definition of man's spirit that will accord with his theory and not make utter nonsense of every passage of Scripture where man's spirit is mentioned. I say that, as God, the Holy Spirit and angels are spirits, and rational, thinking, conscious, moral entities, or beings, or persons, so man has in him a spirit of like nature, a rational, thinking, conscious, moral entity, which resides in the body. This alone agrees with and makes sense of the Scriptures where man's spirit is spoken of, and hence it is true.

I need only call the attention of my readers to the trickery of quoting Paul's language: "Their thoughts excusing and accusing," and then asking me if thoughts are entities. asking me if life is an entity. My opponent knows, if he possesses ordinary intelligence, that the language is personification, or rather an ellipsis. It means, "they in their thoughts, or their minds, or spirits in their thoughts accusing and excusing." Suppose I were to deny that man has life. My opponent quotes Scriptures where it says that man speaks, talks, reasons, etc. I then turn to places where by personification, stones are said to talk and cry out, and ask him if stones have life. Would he not regard it as nonsense or paltry trifling? In the name of common sense and honesty, I protest against such nonsense or duplicity. I quote passages where spirit, soul, sheol and hades are used in certain connections, and show that they have and can have but one meaning in these passages. My opponent then quotes a multitude of passages where they have an entirely different meaning, and triumphantly asks me if they have the meaning I have given to them in the passages he cites, and then denies that they have the meaning I have assigned to them in my quotations. And he must be aware of his duplicity, for when I asked him to state whether these words have the same meaning in both classes of quotations, he will not and dare not say they have.

We have challenged and disproved his assertion that it is taught in Mat. 10:28, that God will do the very thing that man can not do—extinguish the conscious being of the wicked. I want the gentleman to fairly answer these queries. Is death an utter extinction of all conscious being, or is man subjected to an utter extinction of all conscious being in death? If so, what difference can there be between death, as inflicted by the persecutors, and what God can do after death? The spirit must exist after death, or our Savior's warning is a farce. Our opponent attempts to make death an utter extinction of conscious being, by force of destroy. Unfortunately for him the destruction is inflicted after death, and hence has nothing to do with determining the character of death. And again Luke in narrating the same discourse gives "casting into gehenna" as the equivalent of "destroy," in Mat. Hence destroy does not mean to extinguish conscious being. In Thessalonians, distress or tribulation, and recompensing tribulation and anguish, are the equivalents of everlasting destruction. Hence our argument on Mat. 10:28 and Luke 12:4 stands impregnable, that death does not extinguish the conscious being of the spirit, but it survives death.

I am sorry to have to commence my review of his sixth reply by charging him with wilfully misrepresenting me. He states that in speaking of sheol and hades I gave certain heathen traditions. I did not, and he knowo better. I gave the ideas of the Hebrews concerning these states of the dead, and he dare not deny it. If he is familiar with Rabbineal literature, he knows that a vast majority of the Hebrew people entertained these ideas in our Savior's day. If he has read the Apocrypha and contemporaneous literature, he knows that the Hebrews entertained these ideas between the Captivity and our Savior's day. I showed from Scriptural references that the early Hebrews entertained the basis of these ideas. I gave the common usage of these terms among the Hebrews, and as the writers and speakers of the Scriptures used these terms in their established meaning, they have these meanings in the Scriptures. My opponent knows this, and knows how fatal it is to his theory, hence he attempts to evade it by misrepresenting me, and calling these well-established Hebrew meanings heathen traditions.

An attempt is often made to evade this argument by asserting that the Hebrews borrowed these ideas and meanings from the heathen during or after the Captivity, or that they are relics of Platonism. Now I most emphatically deny it. Materialists have prated that baseless charge long enough. I demand clear proof of this borrowing. Again, as we have said, even if they were borrowed, it makes no matter, provided our Savior quoted and used these ideas and terms, and sanctions them. Just as my opponent accepts the resurrection, so I accept the rest. He, like all theologians of his class, makes great use of what might be called the democratic argument. When he wants to dispose of an argument based on the meaning a word has in certain passages, instead of examining the passages and showing from an examination of these passages it has no such meaning, and then triumphantly asks if it has such meaning there, and claims to have outvoted his opponent's passages.

He reminds me of the Irishman who protested against the sentence of the Judge, who condemned him on the testimony of six witnesses, who saw him commit the crime, because he could bring ten thousand who would swear they did not see him do it. Suppose I were in a chemistry to find it said that a certain man was of a gentle spirit. My opponent says spirit means disposition. I find in scores of places spirit used as the result of fermentation, and claim that means he had a gentle principle of fermentation! Such a course would be no more illogical, unfair or absurd than the course our opponent pursues when he attempts a reply to our arguments on spirit, soul, sheol and hades. If the reader will ask in such cases, "Does the word mean the same thing in all these passages?" he will see in a moment the absurdity and duplicity of the subterfuge

My opponent asserts that sheol is a specific word, and has no secondary meanings, and then gives grave, a specific term, as one meaning, and then receptacle, or abode of the dead, a generic term, as a meaning, or a secondary meaning. It may mean grave in some places, but in others, and in a majority of places, it means underworld, or abode of departed spirits. Where did Korah and his companions go? Numbers 16:30 and 33. His perversions of my language concerning hades is characteristic. I never said it literally referred to the abode of spirits in every place in the New Testament. I said it never meant grave. His dodge in quoting the figurative use of hades in our Savior's address to Capernaum, is also characteristic. Our Savior says, "And thou Capernaum which art exalted to heaven, shalt be brought down to hades." He asks with seeming triumph, "Does hades mean abode of departed spirits here? Was Capernaum to be brought down to the abode of departed spirits?" Suppose I retort, "Was Capernaum exalted to the abode of angels and God?" Then I have shown that heaven never means abode of angels and God, just as he proves that hades does not mean the abode of departed spirits. But hades does mean here what it does elsewhere—the abode of departed spirits; and heaven means the abode of God and angels; and the words are used figuratively. This dodge is characteristic of all this class of writers. They attempt to set aside the clear teachings of plain passages by quoting figurative language and obscure passages.

He misrepresents me when he says I said Jacob had no idea of a future state. Also when he says I said the early writers had no knowledge of a future state. I said their knowledge was imperfect. That they could not be relied on for full or accurate teaching. That we must not dwarf the full teachings of the New Testament down to their alphabetic ideas. I repeat this assertion and challenge him to deny it. But if I did not allow him to misrepresent my second letter he would have nothing to say. Abraham went to his fathers in sheol, for all go to sheol, but not to the same place in sheol. He quotes the gospel of soul-sleeping as found in Eccl. 9 and 3. These chapters are the Alpha and Omega of revelation with them;—the beginning and the end, and all that lies between. "With holy rapture" they sonorously iterate and reiterate, "The dead know not anything," and "Man hath no pre-eminence above the brute." Query. Why will God raise Br. Himes rather than his dog, if he has no pre-eminence over his dog?"

His attempts to set to one side our argument based on Rom. 6; 2 Cor. 4; 5; Phil. 1; and 2 Pet. 1 is scarcely worthy of notice. The alternative in Corinthians and Philippians has no reference to a resurrection thousands of years to come. What alternative could there be between living a few years in the flesh, and a resurrection thousands of years hence, after thousands of years of non-existence? How would his living a few years affect that event? The attempt to present a resurrection after thousands of years of non-existence, as an alternative to living in the body, or as a third alternative, is nonsense. How Paul could be in a strait between two things with no choice between them, I cannot see. The resurrection is not hinted at or referred to in Philippians. He speaks of two alternatives—life and death. He says again that life is presence in the body and absence from the soul, and death will be absence from the body and presence with the Lord.

Our opponent's absurd notion that he refers to the resurrection thousands of years hence, would be no alternative to either life or death, or both combined. It is nonsense. No; Paul calls presence in the body, or life, an absence, a present absence from the Lord; and absence from the body, or death, presence, immediate presence with the Lord. His reasoning on Peter's language, and Paul's declaration that his departure is at hand, is also not worthy of review. Analudo in Lk. 12:36 means departure. It never means return. It cannot mean that.

Our opponent's charge of subterfuge in the use of we, is very unjust. If he will look over my articles he will find I use it as a general subject of the sentence, and not in reference to me and himself. I will risk my reputation in saying that God is spirit. Man has a spirit like him in nature. Then if man's spirit be breath, God is breath. If "the spirit returns to God who gave it," man's breath returns, then Almighty breath receives breath. My opponent will have expositions of his absurd materialistic evasions until he will be heartily tired of them before this discussion closes.

We will now proceed to advance our next argument based on the narrative or parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus. To get before our readers the full force of this Scripture, some preliminary observations are necessary. Our readers will remember that our Savior was talking to the Jewish people, and he must have used words in the same sense as his hearers used them, or he was a deceiver. But a small portion of the Jewish people held with the Sadducees. A vast majority believed concerning the future state as the Pharisees and Essenes taught. They believed that at death the spirit of the dead went to sheol or hades, or the underworld. The good went to Paradise or Abraham's bosom, a place where they were under the leadership of Abraham. The wicked went to tartarus. Some believed the good would be redeemed from hades by the Messiah. Others thought they would stay there until the general judgment, when good and bad would come forth and enter their bodies that would be resurrected, and after judgment the good entered heaven forever, and the wicked were cast into gehenna, and punished in conscious misery forever.

With this prevailing understanding our Savior used these terms and ideas. He used them in the sense that his hearers used them, or he was a deceiver. The next query is, what was the subject of our Savior's discourse when he spoke this parable. If we will take the fifteenth and sixteenth chapters as one connected discourse on the same topic, it will all be clear. The fifteenth chapter tells us that the publicans and sinners came to our Savior gladly. The rich, self righteous, selfish Pharisees murmured. Our Savior, in the parables of the lost sheep and the lost piece of money, sets forth the truth that he came to save sinners, and not just persons who need no repentance. That men seek that which is lost, and not that which is not lost. If these despised people were such sinners, it was just his mission to save them, and heaven would rejoice over it. In the parable of the prodigal son, he administers a keen rebuke to the selfish, self-righteous, unfeeling Pharisees. The younger son was the despised publicans and sinners, and the Pharisees were the selfish, unfilial, unfeeling elder brother. In the sixteenth chapter he continues the same thought. From the first to the ninth verses we have the parable of the unjust steward. The Pharisees had, just as did the unjust steward, wasted the things entrusted to them. Like him, they were attempting by dishonesty to avoid detection and punishment. Their unprincipled course toward our Savior is set forth in the dishonesty of the steward.

The lord of the steward commended his dishonest course, but our Savior condemns it, and enjoins a proper use of riches from the ninth to the twelfth verses, and speaks of so using them that we will be received into everlasting habitations; thus introducing the future world and its rewards. He then rebukes the covetousness of the Pharisees in the thirteenth verse, for we are told that the Pharisees who were covetous derided him. They understood all that this was aimed at them. He then, in the fifteenth verse, rebukes their self-righteousness and hypocrisy. In the sixteenth he speaks of the eagerness of the publicans and sinners to receive his preaching. In the seventeenth verse he affirms the inviolability of the law of Moses, and rebukes the hypocrisy of the Pharisees who pretended to esteem this law so highly and to obey it so carefully, and yet violated it so grossly in the important matter of divorce.

Thus all his discourse has ever running through it these two classes—the Pharisees, and the publicans and sinners. He then continues the same thought in the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus, removing the scene again to the future state, as he did in his admonition to his disciples in the ninth verse. The selfish, covetous Pharisees are set forth in the selfish rich man. The publicans who heard Jesus gladly are the poor despised Lazarus. Our Savior now sets forth the rewards and punishments of these classes in the future state. Except such portions as are used figuratively for illustrations, the account teaches clearly the nature of that state.

The rich man died and was buried. This part of the account is just what happens to men. Lazarus died and his spirit was carried by the angels to the abode of the good in hades, or to Abraham's bosom. This is also what happens to the good. In hades, in the abode of the wicked spirits, the spirit of the rich man was in torments. This is also what happens to the wicked, as we are told in other Scriptures. Now with the ideas prevailing among the Jews who were listening to our Savior, and with the character of the Pharisees set forth in the rich man, and of the publicans and sinners set forth in Lazarus, how would the hearers of Christ understand his use of hades, Abraham's bosom and the events that transpired there? They would understand him as referring to the abode of spirits, and that the persons spoken of were spirits, and that he sanctioned their ideas of the future state.

The Pharisees would understand him to teach that after death they, like the rich man, would be punished in Tartarus; and that the publicans and sinners who heard and obeyed him, like Lazarus, would be comforted in Abraham's bosom, the abode of the spirits of the good. Such would be the understanding of the persons listening to the parable, no matter what might be their views, and such, taken in connection with the context, must be its teaching. What a few soul-sleepers may torture it into teaching, makes no figure in the case. What did these terms and ideas mean then, and what would it teach to the hearers then, is the question.

The parable clearly teaches then retribution after death, and retribution immediately after death. The rich man died and was buried, and in hades, the abode of spirits before resurrection and judgment, was tormented. Death is not an extinction of conscious being then. The punishment of the wicked is not extinction of conscious being, but conscious suffering, "I am tormented." "Thou art tormented." "This place of torment." This prevailing idea of conscious suffering runs through the whole narration. It is its frame work. Mr. Hudson, the Magnus Apollo of soul sleeping, admits all this when he says, "We therefore freely say that the parable, whatever it may or may not teach, assumes or implies a judgment or some kind of retribution after death. Also the torment of the rich man here described is not that of gehenna but of hades.

And the plain reader will doubtless say, "If it teaches these things, it as clearly teaches that they commence immediately after death, and it is a retribution of conscious." Such is the plain teaching of our Savior in this parable. The reader will observe also that flame is here used as the symbol of conscious suffering, and not of extinction, as our soul sleeping friends claim, when they quote passages in which flame and fire are spoken of as the doom of the wicked. This parable teaches that this conscious suffering commences immediately after death. The obvious connection of the transaction in the narrative teaches it. One died, was buried, and in torments, in the abode of the spirits, spoke, etc. The other died and was carried by the angels to the abode of good spirits—Abraham's bosom.

The suffering was transpiring while the sufferer's brethren were alive on earth. Again, they were yet under Moses and the prophets. It was before the death of Christ, before these were abrogated. Mr. Hudson very strongly urges that "the representations of the passage belong to the intermediate state—to the state of the dead previous to the resurrection of the body." Then we have in this parable most conclusively our Savior's sanction of the prevailing Jewish opinions to this extent. (1) The dead are conscious immediately after death. Mr. Hudson says, "The rich man is there in torments, as if it were his own place; while Lazarus is carried to Abraham's bosom, as if it were his proper home. This would be the just inference if the Scriptures taught us nothing elsewhere concerning hades."

We have already established what the Scriptures teach concerning hades. (2) We have our Savior's sanction to the Jewish idea that the spirits of the dead are conscious between death and resurrection, and rewarded or punished in this state of resurrection until the day of judgment. I anticipate now a great deal of attempted witticism will be exhibited in trying to break the force of our argument, by burlesquing certain portions of the parable, in literalizing beyond all sense our interpretation of the parable. We shall have a great deal of attempted comedy in substituting soul or spirit for rich man and Lazarus. Also a great deal of merriment over the spirit's fingers, tongue, water, etc. We reply that the conditions of the narrative rule out such literalizing.

The parties were disembodied spirits. The joys of the righteous, the punishment of the wicked, and the employments of the future state must of necessity be set forth by illustration. We have no language nor modes of thought with which to speak of God or spiritual beings, except language, conceptions and illustrations drawn from things of time, earth and sense. The mode is inevitable. In the same way as our opponents set aside the idea that the scene of this parable is in the abode of the spirits, I can destroy all teaching concerning God and heaven. God has fingers, mouth, is a bird, for he has feathers. In heaven we have golden streets, a river, trees. God wipes all tears from their eyes, leads his sheep in green pastures. Hence all such attempts to evade the inevitable teaching of this parable by such burlesquing Scriptural imagery, is futile and blasphemous.

We will now close by introducing as explaining and confirming our reasoning on this parable, the following Scriptures: Jude 6—"And the angels who kept not their first estate, but left their own habitations, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day. Even as Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities round about them, in like manner giving themselves over to fornication and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of an eternal fire." 2 Pet. 2:4—"For if God spared not the angels who sinned, but cast them down to tartarus, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment." V. 9—"The Lord knows how to deliver the righteous out of temptation, and to reserve the ungodly unto the day of judgment, to be punished." Properly translated, the last clause reads, "and to reserve the being punished unjust unto the day of judgment."

Combining these Scriptures we have these truths. (1) The angels who kept not their first estate were cast down to tartarus—the abode of the wicked in sheol or hades. This Jewish idea is true. (2) The inhabitants of the cities of the plain are there with them. Their spirits are in tartarus. (3) The ungodly, all ungodly are reserved there with them. (4) They are under punishment now, are being punished now. They are conscious, suffering punishment now. So clearly teaches v. 9 of Peter, language we quoted. "The Lord knows how to reserve the being punished unjust unto the day of judgment." Kolodsamenous is the present passive participle of Koledzeo—to torment, to punish. It expresses the reception and endurance of the action; it expresses (torment, punishment) during the time expressed by the principle verb. They were enduring punishment as long as reserved. (5) This day of judgment is the general judgment after the last resurrection. Hence the wicked are conscious between death and resurrection, and suffer conscious punishment. With this we close this argument.

NOTE.—The last paragraph of Eld. Himes' sixth response as it appeared in THE TIMES of March 12, should have been omitted. Eld. Braden kindly consented to allow the space for the remarks referred to, upon Christology, etc.

A Curious Narative.

There is a world wide impression that the Restitution is at hand, and the Lord is to come. There is a singular man among the Indians of Nevada, and the appearance of a prophet among them as the following article from the Carson Register will show:

About noon yesterday an ordinary looking but very intelligent Piute walked into our sanctum and said he wished to interview the local editor. He introduced himself as Johnson, brother of the late Captain Charlie and cousin to George Queen, the government interpreter; said he was brought up by Dan Sides, and lived in Yanktown since 1857, until a short time since, when he took up his residence at steamboat springs; that he had been out to the Walker River Reservation to attend a grand fandango, and while there had sat under the eloquence of and had witnessed some strange phenomena, supposed to have been the effect of the prophet's inspiration; that he had heard the particulars (from both sides) of the affair in Churchill County, and that he was here for the purpose of consulting with Captain (Governor) Bradley.

"I'll tell you what is coming to pass," said he, when we had spread our paper and drawn our pencil; "this world is coming to an end; it is to be destroyed by a flood—same as that eighteen hundred and seventy one years ago [mistaking the epoch of the birth of Christ for that of the complection of Noah's boat], for Waz-ze-waub the boy prophet of the Walker River Reservation says so; and whoever believes the word of Waz-ze-waub, will be restored to life eternal on the earth renewed, reborn; but whoever disbelieves his word will be left in the perpetual embrace of death." (This is his exact language.)

The Coming of the Lord.

The is no truth of such practical power for communion, walk, and service, as that of the coming of the Lord. Declension of heart in its communion, and consequently—"for out of it are the issues of life,"—of walk and service, flow invariably, where this truth has been once known, from its losing power in the heart. On the other hand, where the truth of the coming of the Lord has not been known or received, communion, walk and service have never reached their normal Christian character, and the testimony as to Christ and his grace, rendered by the believer to the world, has been proportionally imperfect.

It is clear from Scriptures that the Lord taught his followers to expect his quick return, and that the early Christians not only walked in great enjoyment of the grace of God, ministered in all its fullness by the Holy Spirit, exhibiting the oneness of all believers in Christ as the visible united Church of God, but that they were individually looking out with eager anticipation for the immediate return of Christ, so that Paul, when speaking of himself and other Christians, says, "And we which are alive and remain to the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them that are asleep." It is equally certain that the Lord, in the Gospels, himself forecasts the declension of this truth, with its consequences, in those that once professed it. The apostles also predicted the same thing as directly introducing the apostacy of the professing Church. Peter warned the early Christians in such words as these: "Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days, scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, 'Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation?'" The history of professing Church has but proved the correctness of these predictions. For upwards of a thousand years the proper hope of the Lord's return was lost to the Church, and where the idea was at all held in the mind, it was connected with the death of the believer, as ushering him into the blessedness of the Lord's presence in heaven. It is only within the last fifty years that God, in much mercy to his people, has fully given back this truth, and revived the "blessed hope" in the hearts of his children.

This revival of the hope of Christ's personal return was also predicted by the Lord in the Parable of the Virgins in 25th of Matthew.

We will now turn to the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew to prove the truth of what we have said as to the practical power of this truth in connection with communion, walk and service for the Lord in the world, and amongst his saints.

Without observing the order of Matthew, we will first take up the question of the Lord's return in its relation to the heart, in its communion with himself. For this the parable of the Virgins will afford us blessed instruction. Leaving out the details of the parable we will just bring into relief the main features in it. Virgins went forth to meet the Bridegroom, but while the Bridegroom tarried they slumbered and slept, and had to be aroused to go forth and meet him a second time. They have entered into the interest and joys of the Bridegroom, and in communion with himself they had gone forth to meet and welcome him, to light up the scenes of his delights and share in the blessednes that surround him. The wise Virgins truly loved him, and longed for his return, but while he tarried the power of the hope that had led them forth at the first to meet him, waned a little. The strain of expectation was too great; their eyes became weary with looking for him, they began to slumber and then to sleep. Practically they forgot his coming. They give up the hope of his return, at least for a long time, and go back again into the house, so that at the midnight call they have to go forth a second time. Thus has it been with the Church. While the Lord tarried Christians gave up the practical hope of his return and fell back again into the world, and for a time the knowledge of this blessed hope was lost. The midnight cry has put many on their feet again to go forth to meet him, but there is still the same danger of slumbering and sleeping and of getting back again into the world. The letting slip of the immediate hope of the Lord's return did all the mischief in the past as to the heart's communion with himself, and so it does still. To be truly in communion with Christ, and really unworldly, the hope of his speedy return must be living in our thoughts and hearts. When the heart is right toward Christ, and it can be only so as waiting eagerly for him, all walk and service will flow along in its happy order and freshness.

In the next parable we have the daily walk and conversation of the Christian. He trades during his Lord's absence, gets the reward of his labor (doing everything in the name of the Lord Jesus) at his Lord's return, and enters into his joys in the kingdom. The wicked and slothful servant does not believe in his Lord's quick return; he hides his talent and amuses himself, and when caught by the sudden return of his Lord, to have the account of his life rendered, he maligns his Master, and attributes his failure to him, and the conditions of his service. Had he expected his Lord's speedy return he would not have thought of hiding his talent, but have gone at once at work on his own individual energy, and found out the faithfulness and goodness of his Lord in every step of his path. So is it now with the believer: if he is waiting in his daily path for the Lord, he hides not his talent, and is neither slothful nor wicked. But does the Christian forget the Lord's return, or put it off, the talent is soon hidden and unused, and he soon becomes both slothful and wicked in the Lord's estimation. Not walking as expecting the return, at any time, of the Lord, is the cause of all failure in the daily walk of the Christian.

We will now take a look at the parable at the end of the 24th of Matthew, and see how, in service in the Gospel, all goes wrong because the servant says in his heart, not "My Lord will never come," but, "My Lord delayeth his coming." This gives time to quarrel with his fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken, instead of, with single-eyedness, doing his Lord's will, and watching for his return. What a graphic picture is here given of the present state of the professing church! Internal dissension and association with the world characterize it, in place of union and unworldliness. There would be no time to quarrel with fellow servants, and be on good terms with the world, in its pleasures and projects, if Christ's return were looked for as imminent. It is when the heart loses the power of the Lord's return that the eye ceases to be single, and the servant consequently falls, more or less, under the power of Satan and the world. The feet are no longer shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, and the blessed work of God gives place to strivings after place and power, with every other "evil work." The Lord direct all our hearts "into the love of God, and patient waiting for Christ," so that our communion, walk and service may be according to the full power of the Holy Ghost, our constant watchword being: "BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY!" Amen.—Sound Words.

Pompey's Conscience.

Several years ago, in a New England village, might be found a very flourishing Congregational church, which was served by an elderly pastor of great worth, and of unusual ability as a preacher. It was as common then as it is uncommon now, for the pastoral relation among them to grow stronger with age, and not unfrequently to last a lifetime. "But times change, and we change with them," the Roman poet says, and so our old friend the pastor found. He was not at all disposed to yield up his position; although he knew from cold looks of some, and averted faces of old friends, members of his congregation, that he did not stand so well with the "new set," who had sprung up in the room of their fathers. "Coming events cast their shadows before," and the old man felt in his bones that he was to see trouble ere long.

Matters came to a crisis in the following fashion: The malcontents had for some time been finding fault—now with his doctrines, which were "old fogy," and "out of date;" now with his sermons, which were "too long," "too prosy," "without fire," and "not of a sort to touch the heart;" again with his manner, which was "too cold," "too grave and monotonous" to suit the young people; in fact, they had pretty much overhauled everything they could make a handle of, to get the good parson out of his congregation. And he did not or would not pay any attention to what at last came to his ears, through some of the gossips. Finally they resolved "to bolt." They had borne it as long as they could. They wouldn't endure it any longer. They resolved on the "next Sabbath" to rise in a body and leave "the meeting."

They did so, and took a pretty large proportion of the congregation, not all decidedly opposed to the parson, but several of them of that class who are ready to follow others to good or evil—mere "wax noses." One of these was named Pompey, shortened into Pomp, which, in fact, suited well with his character, for Pomp was a well dressed negro on Sunday, and felt himself "as large as any white man." Pomp had heard the conversations of his white brethren, and had determined to bolt with them, if they should leave the congregation. And he did.

As Pomp joined the rebels on the outside, they were greatly taken aback. They did not evidently consider him of as much honor to their movement, as he judged himself. So one of them opened fire upon him:—

"Pomp! what are you doing out here."

"Me, sah? I'se got tired of de parson."

"Tired! what have you to say against him?"

"O, nuffin special agin de man, but I dozzent like his teachin's. His sermons is too long; I goes to sleep ye see. I likes somfen more 'citing like; and, de fact is, my conshuns won't let me sit any longer under his preachin'."

"Conscience, Pomp! That's too good!"

"Yes sah! Can't the gemman of color hab conshuns, I'se like to know?"

"Well, I s'pose he can, Pomp; but what do you know about conscience? What is conscience?"

"Conshuns, sah? I tink I knows what conshuns is. Conshuns, sah; conshuns! ahem!" (Pomp here drew himself up, put his hand upon his breast, with his finger pressed in firmly, and with his eyes rolled up in a sanctimonious fashion, said, with great energy,) Conshuns is dat feelin in in HERE, what says I WON'T. Dat's conshuns, sah!"

There is a great deal in our day which is said and done under the sacred name of conscience: but when reduced to its true meaning, it is nothing more nor less than that feeling of sheer self-will, which says, emphatically, with eyes raised to heaven, hand upon the breast and finger pressed to the heart, "I WON'T." It's Pomp's conscience.—Church Journal.

From California.

We are now in the rainy season and cannot travel much, but shall soon be out preaching Christ's near coming, in the highways and hedges, the only place where the truth can be preached in this country.

The orthodox churches are open to us to preach—if we will leave our doctrine, as they call it, out doors, or keep them to ourselves. One of our brethren in this place attended the Presbyterian church for a while. The minister invited him to join and labor to save sinners—"but he must keep his doctrines out."

So when you hear of our going into the churches and having great success, remember one thing: the Advent doctrine has not been preached. They will not have it among them. The voice of the church is, Away with it! It is not fit to live.

That very spirit was in the great tent-meeting held on this coast last summer. The cry was, Get sanctification; but you must throw away Second Adventism before receiving it. If we must reject the word of God to get sanctified, I had rather let such sanctification alone, and get God's kind, that sanctifies us through the truth.

I am satisfied that nothing will keep us in these perilous times, but a strict adherence to the word of Inspiration. There is no such thing as being sanctified to God, outside of God's great truth. We are in perilous times, and we must run our vessel by God's great chart, or we go on to the reef or into the breakers. We are close into port. And the greatest danger of all the Christian voyage is in going into port.

Old Israel stumbled over Jesus Christ's first advent, so the Gentiles will stumble over the second advent. We have seen the signs of Christ's coming. Let us all awake to duty, and may God pour upon us compelling power, that we may by any and all means save some. D. D. REED.

The June Festival.

We are to have a monstrosity of a concert, ere long, in the great city that reigneth over the State of Massachusetts, styled the "World's Peace Jubilee." As a speculation to bring money to the citizens of Boston, it is a good idea; as a great culmination of musical mania, it is grand; but if a rose would smell as sweet by any other name, would not the World's Peace Jubilee flourish equally well by a nomenclature which will not provoke a smile when we look around and see Uncle Sam looking well to his Geneva priming, Bismarck as the French mulctuary, France on the verge of another revolution to put a king upon the throne, England blowing unsuccessful patriots from guns in her British possessions, and torn at home by domestic faction and curses loud and deep; Russia, armed to the teeth, crawling in the rear of Persia, which he means to conquer, now that famine and pestilence have devastated that ancient landmark, this Gog of ancient prophecy, that is to be destroyed on the mountains of Israel at that eventful epoch when the tottering kingdoms of men shall be superseded by the unerring kingdom of God, under the leadership of Messiah, the Prince, the Ancient of Days. We will say nothing of Spain, Cuba, Mexico, Italy, etc., etc., simply asking where perfect peace obtains, save in the "minds and hearts of those who stay themselves upon the world?" Wars, and rumors of wars, and dissensions everywhere do not adorn the name selected for this exhibition of harnessed noise. Now I have some respect for the city of my birth, and for those who project this musical invention, but none for the name they have selected for it. If the cannon accompaniment should be fired by the torch of anger, passion, revolution and battle, which are liable to break forth at any moment, I think we should present a melancholy diplomatic spectacle to both men and angels, with our World's Peace Jubilee. Napoleon's motto was, "L' Empire c'est la paix;" now "L' Empire c' est desolee." "When they say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh."—A Christadelphian, in Boston Advertiser.

THE ALMANAC AND YEAR-BOOK.—We sent out by mail and express last week about eight-hundred of the new Almanac and year book.

We made our arrangements to publish this pamphlet by December first. After the fire had destroyed the stereotype foundries of Chicago, we waited for some months upon their promises to resume work, and were finally disappointed after all our waiting, and obliged to print the almanac from the type. The edition, therefore, is limited, and we have not many copies left. While they last they will be sent post paid at the rate of FIFTEEN CENTS A COPY. Those who wish a copy must apply at once.

Besides the usual calendar, it contains a list of the conferences, churches and P. O. addresses of preachers so far as we have been able to obtain them, with some interesting reading matter, and Bible references of value to all.

CONSTABLE. The Nature and Duration of Future Punishment. This able document is affecting our American theology more than it is the English schools. It should be circulated everywhere. Price 40c, post paid.

TAYLOR'S Science and the Resurrection. These articles, which were first published in THE TIMES, have now been issued in tract form. 2 for 10 cents. 25 for 50 cents It silences objections.

FASSETT, on Paul's Desire to Depart Paul's earnest Expectation and Hope. A new tract, and pronounced by all who read it as "Just the thing!" 2 for 10 cents. 30 copies for $1

FIELD'S Discussion on the State of the Dead. A standard document. The first cheap edition published. Over 300 pp. 50c. Every one should have a copy.

Good Tidings. By Couch, Sheldon, Grant and Himes. Prophecy and theology. A valuable book. Paper, 50c. Cloth, $1.

CHICAGO, ... ILLINOIS.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, April 2, 1872.

A SMALL request: Send us a new subscriber if you please.

THE Review attempts to justify the use of the names of Govs. Washburn and Jewell in connection with the late convention at Cincinnati, having for its object "a religious amendment" to the constitution, on the ground that they had signed previous calls for a similar purpose. Evidently the Review thinks "a poor excuse is better than none."

THE following lines are from a Romanist hymn for children:

> "Oh! Mary! Mother-Maid!
> God made thee Mother of the poor.
> Mary! to thee we look
> To make our souls salvation sure.
> Mary, spouse and servant
> Of the Holy Ghost,
> Keep for him his creatures,
> Who would else be lost."

WE call the attention of all to the notice on another page of a new work by Eld. George Thompson. We have no doubt the book will be both interesting and useful. We have little faith however in schemes for supplying the ministry with such literature. As a rule the laity are far more easily reached and impressed. Yet we must labor in every department. Let each one be faithful in his own, and all the work will be done.

AN exchange remarks: "A 'think' is a much needed invention; not for children so much as for those write to newspaper publishers on business without giving their P. O. Address." We have about twenty letters in our reference file with which we can do nothing, because the writers have not given their P. O. Addresses. A few days since a brother wrote a third letter, inquiring why the requests of his first two letters were not attended to, and neither one of the three gave his P. O. Address. Please write names and P. O. Addresses plainly and in full!

IN CHICAGO.

The long anticipated removal of our office to its more central, accessible and convenient location is now an accomplished fact. As expected, the removal has been a work involving much labor and personal sacrifice, even more than we anticipated. But we are now quite well settled in our new quarters, and expect no further serious interruption in our publishing work. We have omitted the publication of THE TIMES for two weeks. This loss to our subscribers we shall make up to them either by an extension of their time, or in some other satisfactory manner, at an early day.

As heretofore announced, our printing and binding and publishing operations will be conducted at Norwood Park, ten miles out (six miles from the city limits). We have here a fine, large building, containing ample room for any probable increase in our business, and free of rent for five years from Arpil 1st, 1872. The building is close by the station, only a few rods from the Wisconsin Division of the North Western Railway. If we had designed and erected the building ourselves for the office, we could have made but few desirable changes in its plan. We have, practically, all the advantages of the city, without the enormous rents and other disadvantages. We have now four trains a day each way, and the prospect of one or two more within a year.

Our homes (five families in all) are broken up for some months, until we can make arrangements and build houses at the Park. For the present most of us occupy the upper part of the Printing Office building, containing a dozen rooms, while some seek rooms elsewhere. An unfinished stable just north of the Printing Office serves as a kitchen and eating apartment for our family of from twelve to fifteen persons. Our accommodations are not what one would desire for a permanent home; but we are one and all united in putting up with all necessary inconveniences, and making the best of all our surroundings, believing that we thus aid the cause we serve, and advance the interests and progress of our Publishing Association. We are in earnest, and mean that the Western Office shall succeed in its mission. Aid us by your sympathy, your prayers, and the needed means.

Our expenses are not materially increased by this change. The cost of removal, and fitting up new offices is necessarily considerable. To meet this extra expenditure we have already some pledges that will all be redeemed; and others have promised to help us without naming any definite sum, who will, we believe, keep their word, and see that our work is not embarrassed an hour by the charges of this change.

OUR BUSINESS OFFICE will be in Chicago. We have secured a room in the block where the daily Tribune, and the Journal are published, on Canal street, between Randolph and Washington streets. It will be fitted up now in a few days, and there we shall keep a full supply of Advent publications. We trust no friends of the truths we advocate will fail to call on us when in the city. For years we have been in constant receipt of letters from brethren expressing regrets that they could not call when passing through our former location, "because the express trains did not stop." All trains stop in Chicago! Call and see us. See what we are doing, and how we are doing it. Remember the place. Our

THE WORLD'S CRISIS.

The managers of this paper have decided to offer the public the most acceptable premium they could have desired—a reduction in the subscription price. From the present date the Crisis will be furnished at the rate of TWO DOLLARS a year, in advance, instead of two dollars and fifty cents as heretofore. This is a good move and will be heartily responded to by Adventists in an increase of the already large subscription of that paper. We would rejoice to see its circulation doubled. Let it go into every family.

HOW YOU CAN HELP US.

Any friends who would like to invest from $250 to $1,000 or more in a manner safe and profitable to themselves, and at the same time to aid the office of the Western Association, and those laboring for it, can learn full particulars by writing to this office. An investment through us to the amount above mentioned will aid us at this time quite as much as would a donation or loan of the same sum. We trust none will neglect this opportunity to aid us, and thus help themselves.

TRUMPET BLOWING.

A correspondent thus makes merry of the trumpet-blowing by which some good men proclaim to all the world how many meetings they have held and and how many words they have spoken "for Christ," and every other small and great endeavor they have put forth: "Cut-cut-cut-ca-da-cut! I have dropped another egg! Come and see it! It makes forty-three eggs I have dropped this year! Cut-cut-cut-ca-da-cut! O you miserable hens that don't lay eggs, look at me and be ashamed of yourselves. Forty-three eggs I have laid this year! Cut-cut-cut-ca-da-cut! this was the sound in our barn-yard this morning, Mr. Editor, and a pleasant sound it was. That is a good hen and we are proud of her. I was just then reading my morning paper, and I was pleased to notice that there are some of this same breed of fowls in Boston. But wasn't it noisy in your streets when that inspiring Cut-cut-cut-ca-da-cut! was cackled so vociferously the other evening? Our hens cackle in the daytime. It seems yours go it till late at night. Is it a pleasant sound to sleep on?"—Congregationalist.

—There is an essential difference between good news from the ministry and churches, and "trumpet-blowing." Some are so fearful of being classed as "cackling hens" that they withold even the facts the church at large would rejoice to hear. We are sometimes quite as much tried with these as with those who go to the other extreme and are always puffing the "I." Let both extremes be avoided, and the church have the facts of success or otherwise, for her encouragement or learning.

NEW WORKS.

We have several new books and tracts in hand, and shall commence work upon them immediately. Among them are three or four tracts in the Holland Dutch language. We hope also to obtain the plates of several German tracts of great value.

We have a new work from the pen of Eld. L. C. Collins, entitled the Doctrine of Paul. He has also prepared a greatly enlarged revision of his exposition of the parable of Dives and Lazarus.

Some propositions have been made for the publication of the debate with Eld. Braden, now being published in the TIMES and the Christian Standard. But we do not feel able at present to commence a work of such magnitude. It would be necessary to revise and enlarge the original letters, making them include many points that cannot be crowded into the space a weekly paper can afford. However, there have been such earnest requests that the discussion be put in book form that we may undertake the labor, if others will furnish the material aid necessary for the enterprise. We do not speak of a donation for that purpose; but of an investment, or a loan. Time will develop the course best to be taken.

We have also in preparation a volume upon the subject of prophecy in general, a companion to the projected new chart of the prophecies—which, by the way, we hope to publish this year. Of this more hereafter. The book will be from the pen of an old-fashioned Adventist, and aim to give good wholesome "meat in due season."

It has also been suggested that the publication of The Quarterly be resumed at once. We would gladly continue it if we were assured of a hearty cooperation for its support both East and West.

Mr. Constable has a new book in preparation, which we should esteem it a privilege to publish; but we have taken no steps in the matter, hoping that Messrs. Chatfield & Co., of New Haven, would introduce the work to the American public. We understand they may do so. Bearing their imprint it will find ready readers with many who would not touch an Advent publication. Should they, however, neglect to issue this valuable treatise, we shall take hold of it and push it to the best of our ability.

A new edition of Whitmore's Doctrine of Immortality will be put to press immediately. And we expect to have other works from the pen of that gifted author ere many months.

As to THE TIMES, our pledge for the future is founded in its past history. That is generally considered to be a record of steady improvement in every department. We shall go into no extravagances of either display or sentiment; but everything that hard work guided by good common sense can effect shall be done. We mean work, and hard work in the Master's cause. May we not hope that the workers everywhere will stand with and by us to the end? Let one and all quit themselves like men, and be strong!

MAN OF THE DUST.

The Missouri Democrat furnishes the following sketch of a sermon by E. P. Powell, an orthodox preacher, described as "full of originality and force." Recently in preaching from the text "God formed man of the dust of the ground," he said:

It is a scientific fact that man is made, or is daily being made, of the earth. You can analyze a man as you can analyze a cup of water or a mineral—that is, take him in pieces as you do any other compound substance. And if you do so, you find him to be so much silex or sand, so much oxygen, so much carbon, so much salt—indeed, a bit of gold and a bit of silver, and a scrap of almost every element known. The saint, as well as the sinner, has a trace of sulphur. So you have your man in pieces, and you find nothing but what lies under your feet and all around you—dust. The life principle, the God-breath that vivifies this composite being is not so easily brought to the analysis.

Earth is as literally mother of all as God is Father of all. And Mother Earth worked for indefinite ages to get her share of the work done. It is only within the narrowest limitations that a human body is a possibility. A little too much heat and you send it quickly back to the dust; a little too much cold and you destroy its vitality; a little too much hydrogen or oxygen or nitrogen—or too much sulphur, or iron, or carbon—or too little of any of these, and you decompose the whole affair.

Would you like to see the parts and elements as they lie loose, that are to be used in the building of a man? Here are one hundred pounds of water to begin with; tissue, thirteen pounds; fat, ten pounds; salt, three hundred and fifty grains; phosphorus, five hundred grains; chalk, three ounces; lime, five pounds; soda, two ounces; iron, nine ounces, &c. Put the these together under the organizing force of the life principle, and you get the breathing, seeing, moving, wonderful prince of the earth—the dust monarch, man. I do not like to have this wonder of the body so wholly set aside to hear of the mysteries of the soul. I am daily more amazed at this result of the uncounted ages of dust revolutions. Here is an eye—the first of telescopes! Here is a nerve—the first of magnetic telegraphs! A cable lies in the river bed of every artery. Dust, all of us, but dust at its grandest development, as the old English poem says:

> "Dust out of dust is wondrously wrought,
> Dust hath gotten upon dust a dignity of nought.
> Dust upon dust has set all his thought,
> How dust upon dust may be high brought."

Take a bit of dust from beneath your feet—a few grains compacted with water; you wash your finger from the stain of it. But last year it may have shone in the cheek of an apple, or scattered perfume from a lilac blossom. It was possibly a part of the silken skin of a bird, or was in a bright winged butterfly—or, possibly, a part of your own flesh. It may yet again win the kiss of a lover in the lips of a bride. And so God made man from the dust of the ground—a bundle of miracles.

But if matter has undergone such a tremendous transformation, why may it not undergo a still greater? If it can climb to the rose, to the diamond, to the eye, why not to the state of purity and freedom essential to immortality? But there is an irrevocable law that, however high dust may climb, it must go back again to its kin. The diamond, the pearl, the human body, are in no way released from this law. The opal seems to have a caste pride that makes it resist to the utmost all association with plebian dust. Our bodies are Brahmins among the coarser forms of matter; but we must yet nourish the wheat as the wheat has nourished us. The bones of the heroes of Waterloo have been sold by the ton to crop the corn fields of their children.

The soul to a great extent builds its own body. It will doubtless build its more ethereal spiritual body in the same way. It subjects dust to its use as it finds it in corn and meat. There is nothing marvelous in supposing a second and a fairer organism for a higher condition of life. But this grows clear that the spirit can work and be conscious only in some organism. The soul bows to the hand or tongue. You cannot, therefore, despise the body. Degrade or neglect the body, and you leave a corresponding influence on the spirit. Use your body to pander to grossness, and down goes your spirit. Filth without is a signboard of corruption within.

Surely, one of the most charming hopes that lies before a God-child, is that while in this life he can only approximate an ideal of strength and beauty, he may, hereafter develop a body as beautiful as his own thoughts. He who constructs a charming spirit, tells of it largely in his framework. Hereafter the tally between spirit and expression will doubtless be complete. We may safely argue the future from the present. The child is father to the man, and time is father of eternity.

> "So dust on dust! consider thou may
> How dust cometh to dust naked alway;
> Why shall dust upon dust go proud and gay,
> Since dust out of dust so soon shall pass away?"

Br. Lawver writes that Br. W. McCullock was the means of "much good" during his late visit in Southern Illinois. Don't be Hasty.

A work is in circulation called Hitchcock's Analysis of the Bible. Advent brethren are eager to get hold of anything that may assist them in the study of the Scriptures, and many have invested EIGHT DOLLARS or more in this work. Almost any who have done so will now sell them for half price. I would caution brethren against buying the book without a thorough practical examination.

NOTE. We endorse the above caution. We know many who have bought the book, and not one in over twenty is not deeply disappointed as to its practical value.—ED.

CALIFORNIA.

Eld. Grant's Meetings—Opposition Developed in Sacramento—Alleged Suicidal Tendencies of the Doctrine of Destruction, Etc.

From a correspondent at Sacramento—the Capital of California—we learn that Eld. Grant has held a series of meetings in that place, and proposes to return and hold another and longer series, if a suitable hall can be obtained. Our correspondent says the Elder has been ruled out of all the Protestant churches. At a meeting of the "Ministerial Association of Sacramento," it was determined that the Congregational, Methodist, Presbyterian, and Baptist churches should not be opened to him. So it appeared from the excluding concurrent action afterwards taken.

Dr. Dwinnelle, the Congregational minister, stated that he did not believe in "encouraging suicide"—as he said the doctrine of Destruction certainly did.

Underneath the Congregational church at Sacramento is a basement hall, which is rented for various secular purposes—(such as "Grace Greenwood's Lectures," "Women's Rights Conventions," etc.), and the trustee in charge of this hall was disposed to rent it to Eld. Grant. But Rev. Mr. Dwinnelle objected; and his objection prevailed.

The chaplain of the Association, Rev. Mr. Cummings, became very much interested in Grant's lectures on Prophecy; but was shocked by the lecture on the "Corner Stone of Spiritualism," the doctrine of inherent immortality. He proposed to assist Eld. Grant to obtain a hearing in Congregational churches at Petaluma, and elsewhere; but the discourses on the Life and Death question turned him away greatly offended. He says he will write to the Advent Herald editor, to send out an evangelical, orthodox Second Adventist preacher.

Rev. Dr. Stone has recently preached in San Francisco on the "Second Coming of Christ," but our correspondent could not attend the meeting, and has not been able to meet a listener, to gather the general drift of the discourse.

Over forty thousand challenging handbills, in various languages, have been circulated in San Francisco during the past winter.

It is generally conceded by attendants at the late debate between Elds. Grant and Cornell, on the Sabbath question, that Eld. Grant completely overthrew the arguments of his opponent.

Dr. Carpenter, of the Howard St. San Francisco, Presbyterian church, in a late discourse, said: "Soon, oh how soon, this globe will be split in twain, and its rocks ground to fine dust; and then the Lord shall descend and the graves shall be opened." Literal Second Advent views are spreading in California.

Eld. Grant commenced his second series of Sacramento meetings on the evening of March 18.

Is He Smart?

Church committes and deacons are asked this question much oftener than the far more important one, Is he good? Most people seem to think that smartness rather than goodness is the indispensible qualification of a gospel minister. Many of our churches seem chiefly anxious to secure the services of men who "draw" full houses, without any over-nice scruples as to the means employed. They want what Dr. Parker ironically calls "hyper-superintellectualists," in their pulpits. These "smart" men know a little about almost everything. Their sermons abound with rare quotations from from recondite books. They like to inform their hearers that Shakespeare indorses their opinion in the well known lines beginning so and so; that the Zend-avesta in a passage of transcendent beauty supports their conclusions; that Schelling and Hegel and Mill and Spencer have given the warrant of their great names in support of the argument; that etc., etc., ad nauseum.

Very much of this ministerial fondness of skipping from the Bible to secular books, from the gospel of John to the dialogues of Plato, is the result of false requirements of the church-goers. Let a minister, however ripe in scholarship and critical ability attempt an elucidation of the seventh of Romans and two-thirds of his audience would vote him a bore and his sermon a failure. If, on the other hand, a minister of inferior scholarship and of little scriptural knowledge should address the same audience, choose one of the texts of the Bible, never mention it or any other text again, but take for his subject some sensational theme, as the Evils of Stock Gambling, Woman's Rights, or the Social Evil, interspersing his address with witty sayings, lively anecdotes, telling allusions, and secular illustrations, he would at once be voted a success. In speaking of the first minister, those who admired "smartness" more than goodness would say—"Yes, Mr. A. is a very good man but,"—If you ask "But what?" they will add as though they were reluctant to say it,—"but he is always so dry." Of Mr. B. they cannot say too much. They are voluble in his praise. "Oh," say they, "he is so smart. He seems to have all history, science and philosophy at his command. Then, too, he is never dry, like Mr. A. He never takes up such old, thread bare subjects as love, faith, hope, patience, repentance and the like. He is continually surprising us with the most apt quotations, and amusing us by the most original illustrations. It is a perfect feast to hear him. Besides, unlike Mr. A., he never says anything to hurt the feelings of the most fastidious of his hearers. He never addresses them as sinners, but on the contrary cheers them by telling of the good time coming."

Another class of hearers—I fear they are a minority—report a very different estimate of these men. After listening to one of Mr. A.'s plain but clear expositions of Scripture one would say—"That sermon did me good. It fed both my head and heart. I never before understood so well the apostle's meaning. It is now perfectly plain. The false division of the chapters, and the erroneous translation of texts, together with my ignorance of the customs and habits of the people the apostle was addressing, all conspired to make the passage one that I could not understand. But Mr. A.'s sensible and straight-forward explanation has thrown a flood of light upon the whole subject. Mr. A. is the kind of a preacher that suits me. He leaves politics to the politicians, philosophy to the philosophers, and science to the scientists. He sticks to the Bible. He understands it; he explains it; he practices its precepts; he is a 'workman that needeth not to be ashamed; rightly dividing the word of truth.'"

The same representative of a class, after hearing Mr. B. would say—"I am greatly disappointed in Mr. B.'s sermon. From the extravagant eulogy of his friends and admirers I was prepared to hear something very different."

"Oh yes! that's just the word. He's smart, but that's all."

"Isn't that enough?"

"No, it is not enough. Not every 'smart' man makes a good minister. Something besides mere fluency of speech. and gaudy rhetoric, and classic allusions are necessary in a good sermon. Mr. B.'s discourse would have done very well for a popular lecture; but as a sermon I must pronounce it a failure. He might as well not have taken a 'text,' as he made no attempt to explain it. My stock of information concerning Bible truths has not been increased one iota by what Mr. B.'s friends term his 'brilliant sermon.'"

That minister, whoever he may be, or however gifted, who never stirs the hearts of his hearers, but who deals in "glittering generalities," cold abstractions, and heartless and Christless philosophies, may indeed be a "smart" man, but he is not a preacher of the gospel. A devout hearer turns in disgust from listening to the showy efforts of the hyper-super. He is hungry for the comforts, the encouragements of the gospel. He follows the crowd into a large and elegant church, and hears a pulpit exquisite read a charming little essay on the moral intuitions. But it does not feed him. He wants bread and he is offered painted pebbles.

To sum up what has been written: The first and principal inquiry concerning a person's fitness for the ministry should be, Is he good? That is, does he love his Master with an all-absorbing passion, and govern his life by the precepts of the New Testament. Does he love to preach the gospel? Is his heart in the work? Is it his delight to point sinners to Jesus of Nazareth who died to save them? Does he reach and move the hearts of his hearers? Is he respected as a man, and loved as a Christian? If he is wholly consecrated to his work, and loves God and goodness with a supreme passion, he is a good man. For my part, I choose to hear such men preach the gospel. Let us recollect, let us never forget that we cannot bestow higher praise on a man than to say he is good. Tell me that a man is learned and eloquent, and you tell me nothing about the man—you have named only his accomplishments. The man himself may be a bad man. Let us then never qualify our highest praise as some do by saying: "He is a good man, but"—. If he is a good man don't try to to belittle him and hurt his influence by adding to the highest praise such a miserable reminder as, "but he is dry." As though goodness could be "dry!"

"Howe'er it be, it seems to me,
'Tis only goodness to be good.
Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood."

The Millennium.

Dr. Bronson of the M. E. church held a Q. M. in Henryville, Richland Co., Wis., Feb. 10 and 11, giving previous notice that he would preach on Sunday morning on the Millennium. He stated that Mal. ch. 4, was fulfilled in the destruction of Jerusalem; and their growing up as calves of the stall and treading down the wicked and their becoming ashes under the saints' feet, was duly fulfilled then. He said that after they left the city the Gentiles fed them as we feed calves. And he added that the Millennium would commence in about one hundred years. Then the world would be converted, and at the end of one thousand years Christ would come.

His members were highly delighted with the discourse (I was informed), and some spoke out and said it was the best thing they ever heard, and they wouldgive twenty-five cents as a token of their appreciation of this effort.

Judging from the antecedents and present character of our race what must be the character of the millennium ushered in one hundred years from now?

If the blind lead the blind, what then?

Norwegian Tracts.

Can there be a fund raised to publish one or more good tracts on our faith in the Norwegian language? There are many of that class now in this country and many more coming. Some have seen the light on the Lord's soon coming, and the nature of man.

While West last season, several believing Norwegians expressed a wish for tracts in their language and promised to contribute to aid in publishing them. One said he would translate tracts if I would write them. They want such tracts to put into the hands of their countrymen who cannot read English, and also to send home to their friends and relatives in Norway, to tell them of the blessed hope they have obtained, and the glorious light of eternal life in the soon coming kingdom of God.

Shall we extend our mission to them? I think so, and then to the Swedes also. Other denominations are doing this. I will write a tract and raise $25 to begin the work. Who will add as much more or any other sum? Let us raise $100 and I will see that a good tract is in Norwegian type, to circulate free. All interested may send their donations to my address, Yarmouth, Me. or to the Advent Christian Times office.

A REJECTED APPEAL.

We have received the following extract from an Ypsilanti paper:

AN APPEAL TO OUR PASTORS.

We, the undersigned, feeling a deep interest in the investigation of some Bible subjects, which we feel have been only partially discussed by the Ministers of this place, and having listened to sermons on one side only, would respectfully ask of the Pastors of the several churches, and of Mr. Tindall especially, that a full and free discussion of "The natural immortality of man," and "The eternal torment of the wicked," be entered into, either by alternate sermons in some of the churches, or by a regularly constituted debate at a church or some Hall, with Elder James H. Whitmore, of Rochester, who has kindly consented to meet these questions on the Bible ground with any strong, reliable man.

Respectfully,

Ypsilanti, Jan. 1st, 1872.

The above respectful appeal, signed by fifty-two persons has been answered by a volley of sermons, and the opportunity of replying to them is withheld. The quality of the discourses may be judged of from the following extract from one of them:

"The idea of annihilation is degrading to man and an insult to God. Does God mock man's instinctive consciousness of immortality? The capacity for immortality is a prophecy of its fulfillment. Unless humanity is a farce, a deep laid conspiracy to deceive and mock man, the soul is immortal. Where did man get the idea of immortality? God inwove it into his mechanism—a primordial truth. Man partakes of the essence of Divinity. God wills—man wills. Plato saw this truth. The Bible confirms what the whole world, the most intelligent of mankind, believe."

The Ypsilanti pastors need not flatter themselves that this thing will "come to nought." The truth has gotten a deep root in that city, and we expect to see a good society there some day.

AT HOME.

·· ·· ·· The damages in Texas from Mexican banditti have been about $1,000,000 a year for the past six years. Possibly another national fracas is brewing there.

·· ·· ·· Chicago has "aid" enough, and is querying what to do with the surplus of half a million or so of money on hand, 10,000 people have been cared for all winter.

·· ·· ·· Israel Kimball, head of the tobacco division of the Internal Revenue Department, has prepared a paper for the use of the Committee of Ways and Means, in which he estimates the number of consumers of manufactured tobacco and cigars in the United States at about 8,000,000, giving to each individual consumer an average of eleven pounds and fourteen ounces of tobacco, and 167 cigars, the basis of calculation being the 95,000,000 pounds of manufactured tobacco, and 1,300,000,000 of cigars on which taxes were collected during the fiscal year ending with June last. The average would be larger if the tobacco manufactured and sold illegally were added.

·· ·· ·· A quite serious earthquake occurred in Nevada, and some parts of California, last Tuesday. Heavy snow and rock slides occurred in the Sierras. This is supposed to have been the severest earthquake ever experienced within the limits of the United States. The Chicago Post says: These are stirring times. No sooner are the Three Days of Darkness safely passed, and the tale of the comet repudiated by its alleged author, than mother earth proceeds to punish a race of scoffers by a tremendous shiver of her Rocky mountain bosom. Genoa, Nevada, from which the news comes of a live earthquake, is a little mining town in the southwest corner of the State, west of the Sierra Nevada line, and in the center of a populous mining district. The destruction of property is relatively slight, the town being chiefly of adobe. The only stage line in that section, leading from Carson City to Placerville, in California, seems to have been to thoroughly plowed, if we are to believe the statements of passengers who report immense fissures along the base of the Sierra, the drying of springs and the bursting out of others in new places. Unless these indications are greatly exaggerated, it is probable that we shall hear of an earthquake wave throughout the entire Rocky mountain range.

·· ·· ·· Late dispatches from the volcanic district in Inyo county, 400 miles south-east from San Francisco, give additional details of the earthquake disaster of Tuesday last. The shocks continue, though with decreased violence. It is remarkable that only the slight shock of Tuesday was felt in central and northern California. Cerro Gordo is badly damaged. Some buildings were thrown down, but only one man was killed. Long Pine appears to have been directly over the centre of the disturbance. Among the killed at the latter place was Mr. Gray, aged 42, a native of Texas. The remainder were all Spanish Americans. The first shock is described as like a park of artillery fired directly beneath the town. Col. Whipple, who was in the second story of an adobe house, states that he had just time to jump from bed, and get to the door way when the house appeared to crumble to pieces beneath him. He was buried among the ruins, but succeeded in extricating himself from the debris, suffering from several severe but not dangerous wounds. The scene beggars description. Nearly the whole populace were buried beneath the ruins. Cries for help, and screams of pain from the wounded filled the air, while those who escaped from the ruins were calling for help to rescue fathers, brothers, wives and childre. The first shock was followed in quick succession by three others. Over 300 distinct shocks were felt between half past 2 o'clock and sunrise. In fact, the earth was in a constant shake and tremble for over three hours.

A chasm was opened extending 35 miles down the valley, ranging from three inches to forty feet in width. Rocks were torn from their places and rolled down into the valley. Everywhere through the valley are seen evidences of the terrible convulsion of nature. At Swansea, Col. Tregelles of the smelting works was killed. There is much desolation among the inhabitants. A Long Pine dispatch to-day, from Visalia, says several shocks were felt in the cit last night and are still coming from the southeast. Persons anticipate the finding of large chasms in the mountains east of us as soon as the snow disappears enough to admit of investigation.

Rumors of a volcano in active operation having been seen from the summit of Greenhood mountain, sixty miles south of Visalia, are in circulation, but are considered at least dubious. The Indians in that vicinity have all left, fearing the recurrence of a general convulsion of nature, which, according to tradition, occurred there some hundreds of years ago, and created what is known as Owen's river valley, but what was before a chain of mountains. The section affected by the earthquake is sparsely inhabited mainly by people working silver-bearing lead mines.

Additional advices from Inyo county, place the number of killed by the earthquake of Tuesday, at thirty, and the wounded at one hundred. In Desoto county stretches from Owen's lake to the Mexican line, are craters of innumerable volcanoes not long extinct. Several mud volcanoes are active. It is supposed that these old volcanoes may be irruptive again. The shocks continued, decreasing in force, up to Thursday morning, when over 1,000 had been counted.

At Tibbett's ranche, fifteen miles above Independence, forty acres of land sunk seven feet below the surface of the surrounding country. Big Owen's lake has risen four feet since the first shocks. Owen's river ran over its banks, depositing shoals of fish on the shore, after it receded, for a distance of three or four miles. Through Long Pine the earth cracked, one side remaining stationary, while the other sunk seven or eight feet, leaving a wall of earth extending for three miles in length where formerly was a level plain. Innumerable cracks were made throughout the valley. Kern and Owen's rivers turned and ran upstream for several minutes, leaving their beds dry, and finally returned with largely-increased volume. There has been no parallel to this earthquake since 1812, when the missions of San Juan, Capestrino and La Purissima, in southern California were destroyed.

ABROAD.

·· ·· ·· Hamburg has 10,000 professionally lewd women. Paris 26,000, Berlin 27,000, and Chicago about 1,000.

·· ·· ·· Twenty-eight men were killed near Bolton last Thursday in one of those fearful coal mine explosions only too common in England.

·· ·· ·· An earthquake in the Caucasus converted a large tract into a desert, killed 137 souls, and the rest are reduced to great misery by famine.

·· ·· ·· In London, March 21, a driving snow storm, the first in fourteen months, prevailed all the morning. The city was enveloped in a dense fog, and at 1.30 p. m. the day was as dark as midnight.

·· ·· ·· A treaty of defensive alliance between Italy and Germany, is reported, whereby the possession of Lorraine and Alsace is guaranteed to Germany and Rome to Italy, and both parties are to unite their armies in case of war.

The Christian Life.

Nearer, My God, to Thee.

Perhaps there is no hymn at present more universally used in our devotional meetings, than that beautiful hymn of Sarah F. Adams', "Nearer, my God, to Thee." Yet we never hear it sung without asking ourselves, do they understand the prayer they are offering?

"Nearer, my God, to thee, nearer to thee;
E'en though it be a cross that raiseth me;
Still all my song shall be,
Nearer, my God, to thee, nearer to thee."

Christian, have you ever had a bitter sorrow, and do you know by experience what a cross means? And has that cross brought with it a joy that you fear not again to take it up and bear it?

Are you not afraid to pray for the nearness of Christ, that comes only through a cross? For nothing brings Christ as near to his children as bearing the cross he bore. But do you not shrink back in trembling from offering such a prayer? You need not fear if you ask it knowing that which you are asking, and are willing to have the prayer answered in God's way: for with the cross comes Christ.

We once said to a young Christian, "Do you realize what you are asking for when you sing that hymn?"

"Yes," was the reply, and raising her hand with a deprecating sort of gesture she said, "But I always feel like adding, 'Not yet, Lord, ah, not yet.'" Since then she has learned what the cross means. Nor is this an unnatural feeling, for though the soul may long to be raised, the poor weak flesh shrinks from the cross and the suffering.

Yet fear not to offer the prayer, ever bearing in mind that if you offer it God will answer it, and answer it perhaps as you little thought or desired; but you will find as well, that you little thought how near he who had borne the cross for you, would come when the cross was laid upon you to bear, nor the joy his coming would bring with it. You will then be enabled to say, "Take all dear Lord Jesus, only give thyself."

"Must Jesus bear the cross alone,
And all the world go free?
No, there's a cross for every one,
And there's a cross for me.

"The consecrated cross I'll bear,
Till death shall set me free.
And when Jesus comes my crown receive,
For there's a crown for me.

Getting Comfort.

Says Rev. T. L. Cuyler, in the course of a long article in the Independent:

Especially I entreat you not to demand of God the ready pay of "comfort" and "joy." Don't stop to think about happiness. A wounded soldier must not expect any comfort until the bullet has been extracted. When the festering rifle ball is out he will feel better and get well. So, when the festering sin comes out of your heart, and all the wicked enmity to God, you will find true comfort; but not before. Do not be selfishly greedy of enjoyment. Paul was perfectly content to suffer hunger, and weariness, and prisons, and death for Jesus' sake. He was not everlastingly begging to be "happy, happy, happy," like certain watery professors now-a-days. To do Christ's will and save souls was his joy and crown. If Paul were living to-day, I venture to say that he would love those sweet lines of Anna L. Waring:

"Lord, I would have my spirit filled
With grateful love to thee,
More careful not to serve thee much,
But please thee perfectly.

"There are briers besetting every path,
That call for patient care;
There is a cross in every lot,
And an hourly need of prayer;
And a lowly heart that leans on thee
Is happy anywhere.

Superficial Discipline.

How hard it is to feel that the power of life is to be found inside, not outside; in the heart and thoughts, not in the visible actions and show; in the living seed, not in the plant which has no root! How often do men cultivate the garden of their souls just in the other way! How often do we try and persevere in trying to make a sort of neat show of outer good qualities, without anything within to correspond, just like children who plant blossoms without any roots in the ground to make a pretty show for the hour! We find faults in our lives and we cut off the weed, but we do not root it up; we find something wanting in ourselves, and we supply it not by sowing divine seed of a heavenly principle, but by copying the the deeds that the principle ought to produce.—Temple's Rugby Sermons.

Correspondence.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

Friday, March 8. Left home with William for Chicago, and spent the day in duties there connected with the future of The Times office. At night took the cars for Auburn, Ill., where I was welcomed by Br. A. S. Calkins. I found him laid up with a sore throat, with an appointment to speak to-morrow: hence my coming was specially welcome.

I spoke in the new chapel at night. It is one of the best and neatest Advent chapels in the West. Better still, they have a good church and congregation. Only three years ago there was hardly an Adventist in this region, now we have many, and they are increasing. The Lord has greatly blessed Br. Calkins in his labors in this new field.

I had a good audience at short notice, to whom I spoke on the agency of the Holy Spirit in the salvation of the soul. And also the importance of ministers and churches enjoying a full measure of the Spirit in order to usefulness. "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

Sabbath, March 10. Spoke in the morning service from Mk. 1:35, on the example of Christ in secret prayer. We must cling to God till we have conquered evil in our hearts, by the power of Christ. This is the great victory. Once gained, we shall be able to contend to the death against sin without. Let us pray to him who conquered the enemy in the wilderness, through fasting and prayer for forty days, to give us victory over the world, the flesh and the devil, and power to do our whole duty.

"Confirm us in each good resolve:
The tempter's envious rage subdue;
Turn each misfortune to our good;
Directing still in all we do."

Br. Calkins was out to-day, but not able to speak. But it must be gratifying to him to see such a fine church, gathered by his faithful labors within the last few years. I trust he will be able to resume his work again speedily. He has calls from all the region around.

We had communion at night. By request I spoke on the Divinity of Christ. Some had said that the church here denied this doctrine. I showed from the prophecies and the epistles of Paul, that Jesus was Divine. I read and explained the following prophecies: Is. 9:6, 7; 25:9; Mic. 5:2, and read from Heb. 4:13–16; 1 Tim. 3:16; Phil. 2:5–11; Heb. 1:6–12; Cor. 5:18–20; Acts 20:28. In these passages the proof of Christ's Divinity clearly appeared. Jesus is an all-sufficient Savior. Let us put our trust in him.

At the close we sat down to the Lord's Supper—a sweet, solemn hour. I was greatly pleased with the perfect arrangements of the chapel for baptism and the supper. They have a baptistry, so that they can immerse believers at any time, and room is left in part of the pulpit for a table, about which all may gather to eat the Lord's supper. It looked like the ancient usage of the church, and brought before us vivid conceptions of the presence of Christ and his apostles in the chamber at Jerusalem eighteen hundred years ago. Though the apostles are dead, Christ, our living Head and our Life, was with us by his Spirit in deed and in truth, according to the promise. It was good to be there.

AUBURN, ILL.

Monday, March 11. Have visited a number of Christian families to-day, and enjoyed seasons of profitable religious worship, and religious conversation. This is more profitable than empty formalities, or common gossip, which is only too prevalent in our times, even among professors of religion. I was introduced to Br. Gardner, the school teacher here, who has lately been converted to the Advent truth. He went to hear it out of curiosity, but Br. Calkins set forth clear, sound Bible truth in such sort that he became deeply interested, and was converted and united with the very people he once held in light esteem. I enjoyed a very pleasant visit with him, and found him bold for the truth.

I spoke at night on the saint's inheritance, and the preparation for it (Mat. 5:5), showing that the new earth will be the home of the blessed, and not an aerial region in the firmament.

ST. LOUIS.

Tuesday, March 12. Coming to St. Louis, Mo., and put up with Mr. D. K. Prescott. In connection with other things here I called upon several of the colored people of our late Mission. Elds. Decatur and Macon are still working, and are doing good. In the evening I spent an hour with some of the colored people, to whom I read and expounded the word, with singing and prayer. They drank down the word with a good relish. They have no skepticism. They believe "every word of God." But there are many exceptions to this rule among the Freedmen. At a recent conference meeting among the colored Methodists the time was taken up in giving their experience, and nearly every one said "they had been to hell [in vision] before their conversion." Hell with them is an actual place, located under ground. They know it! The devils are there amid fire and brimstone. There, also, are the ghosts of the lost, wailing in torment. They say that they have seen them, and have heard their groans. It is of no use to dispute with them. They know it! They have been through it in their spiritual travels. There is no end to the superstitions of this people throughout the South. Those that were educated and converted in our late Missions, having embraced the literal view of the word of God, now look upon their past views as heathenish; and thank God for deliverance.

But fanaticism is not confined to the negroes. Sr. Prescott gave me an account of a case which had just transpired in St. Louis. A man by the name of Grow lately introduced himself to some of the people here. He professed to enjoy great spirituality, and have great light for the world. He was an immaterialist. He said that he was immortal, and could not die. He had got beyond the Bible. He had compared it to a basket of rotten apples, from which, when poured out, you could pick out the best of them for use. So you could pick out of the Bible some good things. But he had inspiration and revelation upon all religious questions, and all must follow his directions. Sr. Prescott, of course, opposed and rejected his claims. But others fell under Grow's influence. After most extravagant proceedings upon his part, and that of his dupes, responsible parties had Grow arrested. He had shut himself up in a small room, which was without furniture or bed, except filthy rags in one corner. He was, when taken, gnawing a bone, and had a bottle of brandy by his side. It had been his custom to ask his dupes to take a drink with him "for Jesus' sake!" The police took the scoundrel to the calaboose, which ended his mission in this heretofore pious and excellent family. They had been humble and faithful Christians. But within the last year they had heard Mr. Brooks, of the Presbyterian church, on the immortality of the soul, and had embraced those views, with some peculiar notions of sanctification, and thus was prepared an easy prey to the impositions of Grow. Let our brethren everywhere cling to the Bible. It is the word of God. Follow Christ in all things. It is safe to do so.

Another thing. It is more safe to entertain persons we know, than those we do not know. No matter how well they appear. Make a rule to ask strangers, who demand your confidence, for references to known and responsible parties. If they are honest, they will give them frankly. If not, they will evade, or pretend to be indignant. But accept no evasion. Br. Calkins has just had a case of the most foul deception. A man professed to be a brother, and carried on the most wicked deception and perjury. He subjected him and his family to much expense and trouble, when at length he found out his character. The man was then sick at his house, and had been treated with all the kindness that the Spirit of Christ in our brother and sister could show him. The shocking depravity of this vile man astounded our brother and his family, as well as grieved them to the heart. They were obliged to give him into the hands of the county officers.

True, the apostle directs us not to be forgetful to entertain strangers. Father Hicks, of Dartmouth, Mass., once said to a man who called on him and claimed entertainment, with the argument that "some had entertained angels unawares," "You are not an angel, unless you are one of the fallen ones! and you can get along." God save our people from these fallen ones, who will not reform, but persist in and live by their practices of imposition.

Wednesday, March 13. Left St. Louis this a. m. for Carlinville. Sr. Prescott came to aid in our meetings here, and in Auburn, where her labors are much prized. We were received and entertained by Br. James Langley and family. Br. L. is a whole-souled believer in the word and a doer of the work of God. The Lord is with him in his work of scattering light and truth by tracts and papers.

Br. Quimby took us out to Br. E. Brailey's at night, and I spoke in the school-house to a good audience; and administered the communion to the waiting ones, who had not enjoyed such a season for some time. It was peculiarly blessed to them. The cause is low here now; but it will come up again. There are many faithful souls here, and they will not die spiritually.

Thursday, March 14. Returned to Auburn, in a blinding snow storm, and resumed my meetings there at night. I expounded 2 Thes. 1 and 2, showing the fulfillment of prophecy respecting the 'Man of sin,' in his rise, progress and fall, and that now we might look at any time for the advent of Christ to destroy him by the "brightness of his coming."

Friday, March 15. How difficult it is for us to believe God. He assures us in his word that "all things shall work together for good to them who love God, to those who are the called according to his purpose." But there are many things occurring every day in which we do not perceive the truth of the divine word. Like Jacob, we are wont to look at events transpiring, and say, "All these things are against us." Isolated events often have this appearance, but take the working of things as a whole, and it appears different. When Jacob heard that his son Joseph was alive, and saw the retinue he had sent up from Egypt to take his family down, "the spirit of Jacob revived." Now he could see that all was working together for good. We must look on life as a whole as well as in fragments, and consider eternity, also, if we would realise the truth of the divine promise. We must not be discouraged at adverse circumstances. There are many things in life which are like frost and snow, kindly to the root, though hurtful to the flower; fatal to the bloom and fragrance, but friendly to its imperishable life. We sometimes look upon life and feel that if things had taken a different course we should have been happy and useful. But after all, it will be found that God makes things work together for good, just as they are.

In looking over my own history for the last ten or fifteen years, I think I can see the hand of God working for good.

From N. Wilson, Adair Co., Mo.

How truly have the people turned from the sound doctrine and heaped to themselves teachers in the itchings of their ears. A man to suit the people must be dressed in soft raiment, and not preach the truth, warning the people of the wrath to come, or the glorious appearing of our Savior. Oh no! this won't do. But let him cry, "peace, peace!" preach upon some philosophical question, make lofty flights of rhetoric, and he will do, whether there is any gospel in it or not. Indeed the less gospel the better. The world seems not to understand that we are in the last of days, but acts as though it had not been written. The time will come when the angel shall stand with one foot on the land and the other on the sea and declare, "Time shall be no longer!" However in this community there is something of a spirit of investigation; and although we are sometimes spoken hard against and misrepresented, the truth can't be kept back; the people will read for themselves.

Let me now represent again the great field there is in this part of Missouri. Great good can be done. Now if it is possible to do so make a tour through this country. The State Normal School is located here, and in the classes of mental and moral philosophy and psychology, the question of mental essence is raised, and The discussions sometimes wax warm. the truth is brought out by students who understand it as it is taught in the Bible, and is made to stand; much to the dismay of many students and some of the faculty. Let me ask you again to let me know if you can come and when.

From Peter Matson:

I feel that I can say that my colors are nailed to the masthead. I never felt more like standing up and showing myself on the side of truth as it is revealed in God's blessed word, than I do now. The soon coming of the Lord is a reality with me. Glory be to God, I can say "I know my Redemption draweth nigh." I can say I love the truth as it is given to us in the Gospel, and, the Lord helping me, I will not round the corners of the truth to please man. The more we have of the love of God in our hearts the clearer we shall want to preach the word, and not turn to the right hand nor to the left. We shall love our fellow men, and seeing the danger they are in out of Christ, will try to make the word as clear as we can, to let them see their condition, if possible, before the Lord comes to call them to judgment. Be faithful brethren. Deliverance is nigh. Stand up for the truth. Let the winds blow. If the Lord is for us there is safety. The Lord be with you all.

From M. R. Miles, Summitville, Tenn.

I am here on the bench of the Cumberland mountain called the Barrens. The people are poor, generally, as this ground was all fought over by armies in the war. The land is poor, but the climate is delightful; with good water in abundance. The people seem very hospitable. They share their bacon, hominy and corn bread freely with strangers. While I have traveled through here and witnessed how this people live in their log cabins, without a window or a pane of glass, I thought it was too bad to fight such a people. But slavery was the cause. That is dead, and the most of the people here are glad. Yet they look upon a Yankee with some suspicion until they become fully acquainted with him. I have preached four times, twice at Summitville, and twice at Manchester, the county seat. I had the Methodist house at both places. The Methodist and Presbyterian ministers helped in the meetings and gave the best of attention to the word preached. I have more invitations than I can fill. I speak to-night at the Hickory Grove church; Sunday at the Summitville and Mud Creek churches. They wish me to hold a protracted meeting here. The houses of worship are rude; some without doors, with boards laid on logs for seats. But the Lord is just as willing to bless his word here, as in the most costly church; and I think more so. Pray for me that the Lord may give me wisdom to interest this people in the way of truth and holiness.

Crisis please copy.

Suppose a Case.

A church makes its contributions in gross, designating afterwards how much shall go to pastoral support, how much to foreign missions, etc. The contributions this year are fifty thousand dollars. The pastor is told to take out what is necessary for his support, and give the rest to general causes. He proceeds therefore to consider how much he needs. He must have food for his family, and they like good food. He must provide shelter for them, and a brown stone front and Mansard roof make a very tolerable helter. His wife's health requires hat she should ride out, so horses and arriage must be provided for. He nust soon grow old, or he may die uddenly; should not something be id aside for that? His daughter is oon to be married, and his son needs apital to start in life with. "Inci- entals" must be provided for. He inks that about forty-five thousand ollars will meet his necessities, and he ands over the remainder ("one-tenth," s it happens) to foreign missions, ome missions, etc. Does he leave too ttle for the last?

SUPPOSE ANOTHER CASE.

A merchant at the end of the year nds that his income is fifty thousand ollars. He reserves forty-five thou- and to provide for his family, and gives s tithe, five thousand, to missions. as he reserved too much for himself? he merchant's income is the Lord's oney, just as much as though it had nce been inside the contribution box. s the preacher must live of the gos- l, so the merchant must live of his siness, but should one be diverted om church building and Bible distri- ution for the support of the one any ore than for the support of the other? Norman Fox in Nat. Baptist.

The Removal.

What I have long advocated and ged on the part of the Western Pub- hing Office, and Eld. J. V. Himes, the editor of the TIMES, I is now accomplished. Thank God this providential move in the right ection. From that city in the very rt of our land, the banner of the VENT CHRISTIAN TIMES is to be un- led to the breeze, to publish abroad Advent Christian faith uncompro- singly. With the World's Crisis at ston, and the Bible Banner in New rk city, and now the ADVENT CHRIS- N TIMES in Chicago, we have a nity of power which cannot fail to ct a wonderful amount of good. no jealousies spring up; but each Press speak out the same ngs, in the same spirit of harmony, l they will be a mutual aid to each er, and mark a new era in the suc- s of our noble cause.

et the noble hearts who have aided one cause both East and West, re- nd to the needs of the Western As- iation at this hour, that it suffer no barrassment at the outset.

see that Br. and Sr. Mansfield are hand also, to use their influence in ablishing this interest of the West- Association in a new place. This l go far to give confidence to this e. The Lord prosper the TIMES.

Sabbatarianism.

USSION BETWEEN GRANT AND COR- NELL IN SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

his discussion after eight evenings ebate has now come to an end, and h sides, and all listeners are hearti- lad of it, whatever opinion they formed as to the duty of observ- "the seventh day of the week, eably to the letter of the fourth mandment in the decalogue," or ing the day as identical with "the d's rest." It was the judgment of Advent Christian Church in this before the discussion, that Eld. nell's challenge to Eld. Grant was eserving of notice. And they for- led to Br. Grant, while at Sacra- to, through an appointed com- ee of three, a resolution passed by o, desiring him to withdraw his ac- ance of the challenge.

here were certain reasons for this on of the church, and among them following:

was well known that Eld. Cor- had lost his influence among own people in this city, and they desiring his departure, and he meditating it soon.

was regarded by the church as an t on his part to recover his position ugh the notoriety of debate with Grant, and to take advantage an adventure might serve him to end, as he had nothing to lose and thing to gain.

Besides the cause he represented was "dying out," as was well understood, and it was hoped that it would soon expire for its want of grace, unless electrified into new temporary and apparent life by favoring it with undeserved notice, and giving it the warmth and vital air it sought by an association with a living body.

Finally it was feared that a discussion between those who claimed to be Adventists, would be regarded as a division in the body of Advent believers, and reported as a quarrel, which would be hailed as evidence we were neither Christians, nor were settled in the truth; and cause our "enemies to laugh among themselves."

But Eld. Grant felt it to be his duty not to withdraw his acceptance of the challenge, but that it was the Lord's will he should discuss with Eld. Cornell. Our place of worship was desired as the most suitable and convenient place in which to hold the discussion; and though it was the duty of Eld. Cornell as the challenging party to furnish a place, he and Br. Grant were both united in a determination to obtain our chapel for this purpose. The church being divided upon the propriety of this, threw the matter upon the committee who had the responsibility of the house upon their hands, to act independently of any further vote of the church, as the best way to preserve harmony among us. The committe kindly released the church, and took the matter upon their own shoulders. After the two first evenings of debate held in the Sabbatarian chapel, which was both unsafe and unsuitable for the audiences, the committee, out of regard to Eld. Grant, and the urgency of many brethren and sisters, gave their consent to open our house for the remainder of the discussion.

RESULTS.

Well, the discussion has closed; and it has done good among ourselves, as it has acquainted the brethren and sisters with the arguments pro and con on on the Sabbath question, and in a way not soon to be forgotten; besides grounding in the faith of the 'New' and 'better covenant' some wavering ones. But as the same "sun which melts the wax, hardens the clay," so it is discovered in this instance, that some know not when good comes, and harden their hearts, and become petrified and fossilized in error. And the adage too has proved true, "convince a man against his will, and he is of the same opinion still."

MERITS OF THE DISCUSSION.

Eld. Grant had the argument, on the question in debate, with him from the beginning to the end; and instead of Eld. Cornell leading as the disputant on the affirmative should do, Eld. Grant led off after the first speech, and ever afterward kept his antagonist behind him endeavoring to move out of the way the obstructions thrown in his path hindering his advance.

Eld. Grant is a straight-forward scriptural debater, always adhering closely to the sacred text, while Eld. Cornell is a pettifogger, and like every venal pleader of the law endeavors to "make the worse appear the better cause:" and though as he said, (intending to apply it to damage the argument of the negative) "consistency is a jewel," he never fails to condescend to tricks, quibbles, and perversions of the language and arguments of his antagonist to gain his point if possible. If he gives a report of this discussion as he summed up his argument, as he no doubt intends to do, this statement will prove true the character I have given him.

HIS FAILURE.

Eld. Cornell signally failed in the main points of his argument. He endeavored to prove that the seventh-day Sabbath was binding upon all mankind from the beginning to the end of time, by what he was pleased to call "a chain with three links." (1) that the Sabbath was instituted in the beginning, and that Adam was instructed to keep it, and all his posterity. (2) That it was observed from the beginning, as evidenced by the Israelites keeping it before the giving of the law. (Ex. ch. 16.) And (3) by Lk. 23: 56. Thus uniting the three great dispensations. Eld. Grant, however, showed that his illustration completely failed by defective links at both ends! and his chain was gone. So conclusively was this done, after an effort to mend them, that Eld. Cornell had to abandon it, to save himself on some other point. Eld. Grant proved that no commandment was ever given to Adam, or his race at the beginning to keep 'the seventh day.' That none was given to the patriarchs, nor that one of them observed it, or did any man, until it was given to Israel in the wilderness. And that 'the Sabbath day' mentioned in Lk. 23: 56 was not 'the Seventh-day Sabbath,' answering to our Saturday, but was another. (Jno. 19: 31.) If it was, Eld. Cornell must prove that there were three days and three nights' from late Friday evening till early Sunday morning, and thus reconcile the Scriptures with his argument. (Mat. 12: 39, 40.) Br. Grant maintained the invulnerable argument of Christ's crucifixion on Thursday, P. M.

Eld. Grant claimed that the Decalogue was not 'The Law' but the 'first' or 'Old Covenant.' (Ex. 34: 28, 29; Deut. 4: 13, 22; 5: 1-4.) That the law consisted of the statutes and commands outside of and surrounding the covenant, some of which, together with one of their holy feast days, or convocations (Lev. 23) were incorporated in the covenant made with Israel; and that the whole was abolished on the establishment of the New Covenant.

Eld. Cornell denied, point blank, that the Decalogue was the Old Covenant—admitted that that the Old Covenant was abolished—and that if Eld. Grant proved that the Decalogue was the Old Covenant, it was abolished. He maintained that the Decalogue was the law of God, and he shut himself up in this, as he conceived, impregnable fortress as his citadel. Eld. Grant shelled him with a constant pelting of the Scriptures for four successive nights to make him confess what the Old Covenant was if not the Decalogue. Eld. Cornell found it was either death, surrender, or escape by an ignominious retreat, and he chose the latter, feeling no doubt that

"He who fights and runs away
May live to fight another day."

In his escape he felt such a pelting fire—in denying his evident position, from the audience, that he shed a tear or two, (as I was told by those sitting before him) to awaken sympathy. But the audience has advised him that "when he has found out what the Old Covenant is, they wish him to publish it in the city papers, for they desire to know what he thinks it is."

Two evenings after this I was necessarily absent at Vallejo—Saturday and Monday evenings—and did not hear the debate. The argument pertaining to the definite holy twenty-four hours on which which God rested at the end of creation came up, and proof was demanded that Saturday in the year 1872 was that 'holy sanctified,' time! O! course it could not be given.

I was present on the last evening of the discussion, and heard the arguments of the two disputants reviewed by each speaker. Br. Grant maintained his Scriptural position firmly and calmly to the end. Eld. Cornell endeavored by dissimulation to cover his antagonist with disgrace. He endeavored to make it appear, that Eld. Grant and the Bible were at variance by a manifest and intended perversion of his position, and quotations; and that both his arguments and words were antagonistic with themselves, thus hoping, by proving Br. Grant's want of ingeniousness, to break the force of his argument upon the audience, and conceal his own discomfiture. But we think he signally failed.

Eld. Grant would be fully justified in refusing to accept another challenge from that quarter, since this is his third debate with Eld. Cornell; and in fact I do not see how he could be justified before God and discuss with him before an audience of people any where again; for certainly a discussion with such a disputant cannot fail to do injury to the cause of Christ, especially when he and his error are not deal with as they deserve in a debate of the kind. And a disputant like Eld. Cornell, can never bring honor to a cause worthy of defence, by any victory his opponent may achieve.

Eld. Cornell has claimed that he has beat Eld. Grant in the two former discussions. Many are curious to know what he will say of this. We shall see.

O. R. FASSETT.

Conventional Morality.

We are every little while astounded by some great crime committed by a person standing high in the confidence of his friends and the community. On the trial of such, unimpeachable witnesses attest their reputation for integrity and general excellence. How is this to be accounted for? Have these men been sheer hypocrites, seeking gain from their seeming goodness? Or have they been persons of real virtue, who have fallen in an hour of weakness? Neither, as a general thing, we think. Our conclusion is that there is a vast deal of virtue which is akin to that godliness which has the form, but lacks the power thereof;—a mere assent of the head to right moral principles; an empty conformity in thought and act to the prevailing [illegible]ards; a loose acceptance of the Chr[illegible]an sentiment of the community. [illegible]comes of a Christian education which has little of real education in it—that is a careful out-drawing and nurture of the inward sense of right and obligation.

Christian homes have had something to do with this condition of things, having allowed the children to float along up to manhood with little of trained resistance to wrong, and with a goodness very amiable but very negative. Our Sabbath schools have had something to do with it, in which the lessons have had all the hardness taken out of them, and the scholars have been lured along by soft words, story prizes, theatricals and picnics. Pulpits have had something to do with it, wherein the preacher, instead of uttering the word from God's mouth, whether men would hear or forbear, have deferred rather to those who said, Prophesy to us smooth things. The tendencies of the age in general have had something to do with it,—its magnifying of sentimentalism above law; its omniverous novel-reading; its craving of sensationalism; its worship of success; its easy forgiveness of crime in men of rank and wealth; its eagerness to be rich; its shame of honest labor. There are, doubtless, other elements at work, but the result of all is a grand respectability from which is ever and anon bursting on us these startling crimes, like thunder-claps from the clear sky.

On the trial of the parties implicated in the State Street "irregularities"—the current euphemism in the case are the growth of the same feeble morality—how much account was made of their excellent personal character! Within the last six months a New York assistant postmaster defrauded the government of over one hundred thousand dollars, and a Washington paymaster of half a million more, both of them, men standing high in the confidence of their associates and employers. Last month, a cashier of fourteen years' service, and a teller of nineteen years' in the Fifth National Bank, Providence, were found to have appropriated between them many thousands of dollars—just how many we do not now recall. The Providence Press said of them at the time.

"With the large majority of our citizens we are both astounded and grieved. The ruin of the character of such men is a public calamity. A thunder-clap in a clear sky would have been as soon expected. The fact that both the cashier and the teller were men occupying high moral positions in society; that they were economical livers, and that they spent their hours in the duties at the bank or at home, disarmed the officers, the directors and even the government examiners. Their word was undoubted."

A clerk in the Boston post-office is now in prison awaiting trial for robbing letters which passed through his hands, having carried on the operation for years, and accumulated a snug little fortune. And is it a burlesque on all this, or is it possibly an extreme instance in point, that a young man, a member of the Young Men's Christian Association, and a teacher in a Sabbath school in Chelsea, has been supporting a widowed mother and his sisters by systematic burglary, carrying with him in his pocket a Bible—which Bible, by the way, saved his life from the ball of the police?

Sad as are these cases in themselves, they are far sadder as symptoms. They are but eruptions on the surface that prove the impurity within. Where is the disease to break out next? Whose character is to come down crushing those that had trusted it? The heart of what father, mother, wife, sister or brother is to be agonized at seeing one whom they had looked up to with fond pride borne away to prison?

But it is not in money matters alone that moral weakness is seen. It is in the readiness with which men and women fascinated with free-loveism, in doctrine and practice; in the ease with which young men, from good rural homes, yield to every form of temptation in the city; in the facility with which so many subject their convictions to their interests,—an instance of which is the fact that few of the farmers in the Connecticut valley, however lofty their religious profession, have been able to resist the temptation to devote the best part of their lands to the raising of tobacco; in the small per centage of Christian character that can stand transplanting from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast.

Are we not substantially correct? Then our duty is plain.

First let us face the fact squarely. Let us see and admit that, with all our very nice moral appliances, and all the propriety and decorum and amiability around us, we are failing to rise up for the moral contests of life men and women of hardy, inflexible virtue, but rather such soldiers as we first sent South, who tripped it across the Potomac as to a picnic, only to be routed and slaughtered at Bull Run.

In the next place we must change our methods. We must give vastly more attention to the cultivation of the moral principle,—the sense of right, of justice, of reverence for God and the supreme authority of his Word. It must be ingrained in the very being of our youth, that, as Dr. Wayland has expressed it, nothing better can happen to one than to have done right, and nothing worse than to have done wrong; and that the first question in every thing, always and everywhere, should be "Is it right?"

In the third place, parents and pastors, Sabbath schools and common schools, academies and colleges should unite in this work. We must have trained consciences. We must give as much care to improving the moral stock of our race as our first class farmers do the stock of their horses, cows and sheep. We want men as stern and unyielding in morals as the Spartans were in patriotism. It is a shame if our Christian civilization is to culminate in a feeble negative goodness. Let us have the stuff that heroes are made of. We can have it only by building up character solid from the solid rock.—Watchman and Reflector.

"Good Tidings."

Harps Etc

We are out of Harps, and of Eld. Grant's works bound in one volume. New editions are preparing. When copies of them are received we will fill orders immediately. Our friends will be patient until then.

Field's Discussion.

For some time this desirable work has been out of print. The main topic is the Intermediate State, or Condition of the Dead. When a new edition was announced, some of the Doctor's old Disciple friends announced that they would buy and circulate it as soon as ready, because they thought it would help their side—that Mr. Connolly had the best of the argument. We shall soon know whether they really so felt, or were indulging mere bragadocio. The book has not yet made any converts to immaterialism that we have heard of; but we have learned of its bringing not a few to adopt the Bible theory.

The book has heretofore been sold at one dollar. The present edition is in paper covers (pp 236), and will be sent post paid for 50c. We hope for liberal orders.

Prophetic Chart.

Shall this projected Map of Symbolic Prophecy be published? Turn to the description of it in late numbers of THE TIMES, and see if it is not just what every church and minister needs. Obituary.

Sermon by the writer, from Ps. 90: 10.

E. B. SCOTT.

TUTTLE. In Charlotte, Mich., Feb. 28, 1872, Calpharnia, wife of Stephen Tuttle: aged 56 years, 4 months, and 6 days.

Her death was very sudden, and seems hard to bear; but when death comes and claims our loved ones, we can only give them up and wait until Jesus comes and opens the prison house and gives them back to us, made immortal.

ROBY.

BAKER. Emma, died in New Rutland, March 18, 1872, child of Br. William and Sr. Augeline Baker: aged 2 years, 1 month and 3 days.

Death of late has reigned among us, and our brethren and sisters have been led to ask in the deep agonies of sorrow of their heart—How long shall death the tyrant reign?

Our dear brother Trask has been called to part with his wife and two children. Also Br. Hicks has had torn from his embrace his beloved companion, whose loss he feels very deeply.

May these brethren and sisters, as well as all other afflicted ones, find by rich experience the precious promise to be true—Grace shall be equal to thy day!

Notices, Etc.

To the Brethren.

I am engaged in preparing a work, designed especially for the ministry, on the importance and necessity of preaching the second coming of Christ, as an event nigh at hand. My object is, in cooperation with the brethren, to have a copy placed in the hands of every minister of the gospel in the United States. All can see the importance of such an enterprise. If one only out of five hundred could be induced to give the trumpet a certain sound, it would pay for the labor and outlay. Of course, it will not be expected that those for whom the work is designed, will purchase it. This will be the work of our brethren all over the country to see that a copy is placed in the hands of every preacher of the gospel.

I propose then to request pledges and subscriptions from the brethren, in order to secure its publication, the amount subscribed to be repaid in books, if required. The nature of the work may be gleaned from the following outline:

The Christian minister—a watchman; the duties of a watchman; Watchman, what of the night? The time of the end; Signs of the times—Fulfillment of Prophecy; Prophecy in relation to the First Advent; Prophecy in relation to the Second Advent; Signs of the Second Advent, Celestial, Terrestial, Moral, National. The Papacy, Spiritism, Time, Tarrying Time, etc., etc.

I would also state that the work will be useful to all for reference, as it will be largely interspersed with Scripture quotations. Any who may feel disposed to aid in this enterprise, may address Miles Grant or G. T. Adams, Crisis office, Boston, Mass.; J. V. Himes, TIMES office, Chicago, Ill.; or myself at Arena, Wis.

HOW TO GO WEST.

Forty years ago, Illinois was as far West as most people wished to go, and journeys were made in the legendary "Prairie Schooner," but in these days of Progress and Improvement, the word West has come to mean Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, California and the Territories, and the traveler reaches almost any point therein by a splendid line of Railroad.

This Line of Railroad is the Burlington Route, which starts from Chicago by the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, and, running through Burlington, reaches Omaha, Lincoln, Nebraska City, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth and Kansas City, connecting with the Union Pacific, Kansas Pacific, and other railroads running from those cities.

People going to Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, California, or any point in the Territories, will study their own interests by going "By way of Burlington," for the rates of that Line are always as low as any other, and it is the best Route in the West, therefore you are more sure of your safety and comfort.

The Burlington Route has admirably answered the question "How to go West?" by the publication of an excellent pamphlet, containing a large, truthful map of the Great West, and much interesting and valuable information, which can be obtained free of charge, by addressing General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

WAIT'S
HUDSON RIVER CHAMPION
Turbine Water Wheel.

A WORD TO MILL MEN.

I have been building the Jonval Turbine for the past eight years. Have built some seven or eight different kinds of wheels. Am acquainted with nearly all the first class wheels in the country, and am fully persuaded that the Champion stands alone without a rival. Early I discovered that the tangential and centrifugal forces of the water, exerted a tremendous power which is expended against the outer rims of those wheels, which discharge vertically and against the scrolls and curbs of most other kinds, which is lost to all useful effect.

For a long time I studied and experimented carefully, to bring this wasted power into use without injuring the other high qualities of the Wheels.

My efforts have been crowned with success, and I can now offer you a Turbine which can compete successfully with all others in the economical use of the water, while for simplicity of construction, strength and durability, it is the champion of the world.

It has no complication of gates, with their multitude of Levers; no cranks, pin, segments nor pinions to get out of order. No series of leaky joints; no rubbing surface to wear away, to waste the water; nothing touches the wheel but water; hence it will never wear out. There is no latteral motion, nor do their steps wear out like other wheels.

The Jonval Turbine has given the highest percentage of power ever attained in any public test. Several of these Jonvals have been taken out which were in perfect order (having run but a short time), and the Champion placed in the same curbs, venting the same amount of water, and have obtained from six to eight per cent. more power in every instance than the Jonvals gave.

These wheels are perfectly proof against injury from flood-wood. Should any pieces get into the curb which could not pass through the wheel, you have simply to open a door (like a safe or cupboard), enter the curb, and remove the obstruction, and it is all ready for work again. This can be done in five minutes.

They are now in operation in every section of the country, giving unbounded satisfaction and taking the places of all other wheels. The extreme low price for which they are sold astonishes everybody.

Tall Talking.

No greater mistake can be made in the use of language than to suppose that the use of long and unusual words are necessary to correct and dignified expression. As a general rule, the greater the culture the greater the simplicity and plainness of speech. As I use the word "simplicity" I am reminded of the profound wisdom contained in Lord Jeffrey's happy expression: "Simplicity is the last attainment of progressive literature; and men are very long afraid of being natural, from the dread of being taken for ordinary." Public speakers, but especially preachers, who have a mania for big words, are to be greatly pitied. By the use of "words of learned length and thunderous sound" they do not imitate the great Teacher who expressed himself with the greatest simplicity, and of whom it is said "the common people heard him gladly." A learned theologian was once engaged to address a Sunday school. He read a number of verses from the Bible, and then said, Children, I intend to give you a summary of the truth taught in this portion of Scripture. Here the pastor suggested to the professor that he had better explain to the school what "summary" meant. The learned gentleman accordingly turned round and said to the children, "your pastor wants me to explain what summary means; and I will do so. Well, children, summary is an abbreviated synopsis of a thing." This of course was "confusion confounded" and the incident well illustrates the fact that men with a passion for big words are not apt teachers.

"Sir," said an old Scotch woman to her minister, "I dinna ken a part of your sermon yesterday." "Indeed what was it?" "You said the apostle used the figure of circumlocution, and I dinna ken what it means." "Is that all? Its very plain. The figure of circumlocution is merely a periphrastic mode of diction." "Oh! Ah! is that all?" said the good woman. "What a puir fool I was not to understand that!"

Tall talkers are not apt to be profound thinkers. They seek to gain currency for their feeble ideas by expressing them in what Horace calls "Sesquipedalia verba," words a foot and a half long. But "pigmies are pigmies still, though perched on Alps. "Magniloquent talkers think it vulgar not to use the language of Shakespeare and Milton and the Bible. They substitute what they are pleased to call "perisphatic euphemisms." These are the folks who never begin, but always commence. They don't live in the country, but "reside in a rural district." They are not so vulgar as to speak of going to bed, but think it quite genteel to express the same thought by saying they would like to "retire." Unlike common people they never eat and drink, but are in the habit of "partaking of refreshments." They are never sick, but are often "quite indisposed;" and finally, instead of dying, they "decease." A man who would call a spade an oblong instrument of manual husbandry, would undoubtedly translate the twenty-third Psalm into general English after this fashion:

"Deity is my pastor; I shall not be indigent. He maketh me to recline on the verdant lawns: He leadeth me beside the unrippled liquidites. He restoreth my physical principle, and conducteth me in the avenues of rectitude for the celebrity of his appellations. Unquestionably, though I perambulate the umbrugeous glen of the monarch of consternations, I will not be perturbed by appalling calamities: for thou art present, thy word and thy crook insinuate delectation. Thou spreadest a reflection before me in the midst of inimical belligerents: Thou perfumest my coronal region with odoriferous unguents, my chalice exuberates. Indubitably benignity and commiseration shall continue all the diuternity of my vitality: and I will eternalize my habitation in the sanctuary of Jehovah." Wouldn't it be better to call a spade a spade, and to read the twenty-third Psalm as we find it in our Bibles? I think it would.

JAMES H. WHITMORE.

Spirit, Soul and Body.

These words are used by Paul toward the close of his first letter to the Thessalonians, when speaking of thinking of their complete and entire sanctification, and were not, I think, intended by the apostle as our orthodox friends regard them, namely as a definition of the constituents of man's being, but to be understood in precisely the same way as Moses' works to Israel, recorded in Deut. 6: 5: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy might." Israel's leader had doubtless little thought when he uttered those words in the ears of the people, that his language would be afterwards appealed to by religious teachers to prove that heart and soul and might, were each a separate, and distinct, rational and intelligent entity, residing during a man's lifetime in his body, and after his death, being delivered from the body's thralldom, continuing to live as a disembodied heart, a disembodied soul, a disembodied might, for perhaps a thousand years; and Paul, I cannot help thinking, had just such as little idea that the spirit, soul and body, which he mentions as belonging to the Thessalonians, would be similarly treated, and though I do not say that this interpretation has ever yet been put upon Moses' words, yet I do submit that they bear it as fairly as the paragraph from Paul, both being doubtless understood by the people to whom they were addressed in precisely the same sense. Moses, beyond any reasonable doubt, meant neither more nor less, than that his people should love the Lord wholly, and heartily; and Paul, I have as little doubt, desired neither more nor less than complete and entire sanctification for his Thessalonian brethren; and as a natural consequence blamelessness in every department of their being, mental, moral, and physical; and hence his prayer "that your whole spirit, soul and body, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ"—as if he had said—"I pray God to preserve each one of you blameless in mind and body, in thought word and deed, wholly and entirely, in life or in death, till Jesus' appearing."

But suppose we look for a moment at the subject from the Orthodox standpoint, and grant our friends all that they can reasonably claim from the peculiar phraseology of the text and something more, namely, that spirit, soul and body, are each separate and distinct entities; the body the covering or house in which the soul and spirit live, and through which they manifest themselves. It follows, therefore, that when this wonderful personage who possesses both an immortal soul, and a deathless spirit within him, dies, death cannot of course affect aught but the body. The immortal soul and deathless spirit both defy his power, and live on in their disembodied state as rational, conscious beings, now singing with melodious voices, redemption's song centuries before the appointed time; then sweeping in strains of matchless melody the strings of their golden harps in the angelic choir, without either throat or finger, or other bodily organs, presenting as shadowy, bodiless spirits, a striking contrast to the embodied angels, and even to the resurrected and glorified Redeemer himself, who promised that his children should be like him when they see him as he is; concluding, too, no doubt, for the best of reasons, that death commonly regarded as man's enemy, has been their best friend, their glorious deliverer, and looking forward, perhaps, with considerable forboding to the time when their former prison, the body, shall be raised again and a union between them shall be effected for all eternity. Can our orthodox friends deny that this, so far as it goes, is a fair and honest representation of their theory? And if so, the conclusion cannot be avoided that it completely subverts "the hope of the gospel," "the resurrection of the dead."

Our friends, however, may be unwilling to accept both a soul and spirit as surviving the body after the dissolution of the man. Their theory requires but one; and whether called an immortal soul, or a deathless spirit, is a matter of indifference to them. We dare not, however, give them less than Paul, and he says soul and spirit; and if he teaches that the spirit survives the body as a conscious intelligence, he equally teaches that the soul does the same, and hence we have two conscious intelligences escaping from each body at its death.

I am aware how readily my popular friends can substitute spirit for soul, and soul for spirit, when any particular exigency of their theory requires it. But in this, to them, very valuable text, the substitution is wholly inadmissible; Paul makes no wider distinction between body and soul here than he does between soul and spirit, and as well might we conclude that body and spirit were one and the same, as that spirit and soul were identical. Paul has made all three separate, and distinct, and we dare not alter his arrangement. Neither could we venture to prefix to either, the very important terms, deathless and immortal, so constantly supplied by orthodox teachers, though not once mentioned by either prophet or apostle. The most thrilling gospel discourses which ever fell on human ears from the great Teacher himself and his inspired servants contains no such word, and they certainly knew whether man or any part of him could be truthfully described by such terms. Will our orthodox friends explain the omission? And meanwhile we might enquire in what sense Paul uses the terms soul and spirit elswhere, that we may the better understand his meaning here. The noun psuche, usually translated soul, means life, breath, the life-principle, and its adjective form as used by the apostle in 1 Cor. 15: 44, is placed in opposition to, or in contrast with the spiritual, and in the common version is translated natural: "it is sown a natural body (somd psuchikon): it is raised a spiritual body (somd pneumatikon.") Now Paul certainly knew that the natural had no immortality of any kind about it, but was destined to pass away and give place to the spiritual and incorruptible; and knowing this he described it by the term psuchikon; the very term which our popular friends have translated soul; but evidently fearing that we might be perverse enough to follow Paul's understanding of it, and regard it as perishable, they introduce deateless and immortal, and sundry other very expressive adjectives to qualify it, though few phrases would have sounded more strangely on apostolic ears than (psuche athandte, immortal soul.)

Let us now look at an instance or two ere we close, of the sense in which Paul uses spirit.

In his address to the elders of Miletus, recorded in Acts 20: he says: "I go bound in the spirit to Jerusalem." I never supposed that the apostle meant by this expression that he was imprisioned inside of his spirit, or that the spirit was a conscious separate entity, keeping ward over him as its prisoner, although the strict phraseology would warrant this conclusion quite as readily as that the spirit mentioned in Thessalonians was a prisoner to him; his meaning doubtless was, that he was depressed in spirit, that is, that his mind was painfully exercised with forebodings as to what awaited him in the capital. A somewhat similar expression occurs in the preceding chapter. The record reads: "Paul purposed in the spirit to go to Jerusalem," that is as I understand it, a mental resolve was made to go there, rather than a declaration that he was inside of his spirit and forming purposes there.

These are some and only some of the absurdities fairly deducible from our popular friends' attempts to press such expressions as spirit, soul and body of 1 Thes. into an inspired definition of man's constitution. That important information is given us by the most competant authority, just where we might expect to find it, in the opening pages of the Creator's revelations; and a fearful amount of religious error would have been avoided, if the brief though not very flattering statement of the Divine Architect—"The Lord God formed man out of the dust of the ground"—had been believed and Platonic theories, which were only human fancies, at best, regarded more as pleasing speculations than as certain facts, even by their authors themselves, had been discarded, and the "old paths" resolutely followed. Be it ours still, however, in the Master's spirit to press upon the attention of our erring brethren those "old paths," and to say "this is the way, walk ye in it!"

Keep it Before the People.

That Jesus is coming. Don't forget to talk about it, preach about it, sing about it, pray about it, in the pulpit or out of it, at home or abroad, wherever you go, that the very same Jesus that those Galileans saw taken up into heaven 1800 years ago is coming again in like manner; "coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory;" "coming and all the holy angels with him." How the heart thrills with joy while reading the precious promise given to his sorrowing disciples: "I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." Praise the Lord. He is coming to receive his weary, waiting bride to himself. Coming to be "glorified in his saints and admired in all them that believe." "To them that look for him will he appear the second time, without sin, unto salvation." Yes, he is coming to restore all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Coming to change these suffering vile bodies, and fashion them like unto Christ's glorious body." Coming to unlock the charnel house where lie our loved ones and raise them to life and immortality. Coming to destroy death, and him that hath the power of it, which is the devil." He is coming with ten thousand of his saints to execute judgment upon all." "Behold he cometh in the clouds and every eye shall see him, and they also that pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." As the lightning cometh out of the East, and shineth even unto the West, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." "Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his work shall be."

Dear Reader: Are you ready for his coming? And can you say from the depths of your heart, as did the venerable seer of Patmos, "Even so, come Lord Jesus!" M. E. ORR.

Those Tents

What tents? Why, for the Michigan Advent Christian Camp Meeting. Every church will want one or more of them. Let all commence in time. Don't forget it. And when you make your tents, pray that they may be a source of good to the cause of God. June will soon be here, and we want to be ready to go to camp and spend a week for God in special labor for the salvation of souls. Let the Elders of churches see to this interest, that their churches are ready. Let us make every visitor at our camp this year say: "How beautiful are thy tents, O Israel."

For the Committee,

Answers in the Bible. And how often the book has inquiries! I have been amazed in times of difficulty, to see how plain the oracle is. You have asked friends, and they could not advise you; but you have gone to your knees, and God has told you. You have questioned, and you have puzzled, and you have tried to elucidate the problem, and lo! in the chapter read at morning prayer, or in a passage of Scripture that lay open before you, the direction has been given. Have we not seen a text, as it were, plume its wings, and fly from the word like a seraph, and touch our lips like a live altar-coal? It lay like a slumbering angel amidst the beds of spices of the sacred word, but it received a divine mission, and brought consolation and instruction to your heart.—Spurgeon.

Watch and Pray.

The watcher stood on Carmel's height
With eager, longing eye,
Gazing across the sobbing sea,
Scanning the burning sky;
While with bowed head between his knees,
Scorched by the sun's fierce glow,
The Prophet, pressed with anguish sore,
Prayed in the vale below;

Watched for the coming of the cloud;
Prayed for the blessed rain
To shade the burning of the sky,
To cheer the earth again—
The cloud with wind, the breath of God,
Among the thick tree-tops,
The rain, like rush of angels' wings,
Murm'rous with pattering drops!

"Nothing! nothing!" the watcher cried;
"No cloud, no sign of rain!
The same fierce sun that burns the earth
Burns o'er the watery main."
Again the Prophet bowed his head
Between his knees and prayed;
Again the watcher's eye looked for
The blessing still delayed.

"Nothing! nothing!" the watcher cried;
"No cloud, no sign of rain!"
The Prophet, laboring in prayer
Bowed 'twixt his knees again:
And thus twice, thrice, seven times they strove,
With faith that cannot fail—
One watching in the mount above,
One wrestling in the vale!

O can it be the God whose breath
Burns like consuming fire,
Scorching the earth and sky and sea
With blast of judgment dire—
O can it be the God whose flame
Consumes the sacrifice,
The wood, stones, water, all ablaze
In incense to the skies—

O can it be this God, whose wrath
Our prostrate souls approve,
So burning in his holiness—
Is not a God of love?
O Heaven, for thy dear mercy's sake,
Accept our sacrifice!
Dissolve this spell of burning wrath!
O melt these brazen skies!"

Seven times the two souls watched and prayed,
Seven times with faith and hope,
When from the sea a little cloud
Pushes its finger up!
A hand! a hand! a cloud formed hand!
The hand of God's chosen find
Always revealed to point before
When God is close behind!

And, swelling in proportions vast,
Reveals an awful form:
God, coming in his majesty,
God, in the blessed storm,
Blackening the heavens with clouds and wind,
Pouring the welcome rain,
Filling the thirsty earth with floods
Of life and joy again!

O watchers on the mountain hight,
Stand with eye steadfast there!
O wrestlers in the vale beneath,
Cease not your sevenfold prayer!
God will not always frown; he will Accept your sacrifice
Of loving hearts and praying hands;
God will in love arise!

A finger, hand, an arm, a form
Of power and grace divine!
The heavens shall swell with blessed showers,
The earth with rain drops shine!
O dare with loving hearts to bring
The sacrifice of blood!
While Hope stands watching on the mount,
And Faith lays hold on God!

What is the Difference Between Man and Beast?

This question is often asked by the opposers of the "no-soul" doctrine, as they term it, and strange to say, when we give them our views on this subject they in general misapprehend us, and see our materialism in no other light than that of "dragging man down to a level with the mere brute creation, making him of no more importance in the scale of being, than a mere beast, with many other misapprehensions too tedious to mention. But the question next comes up, how can this matter be settled? We answer by an appeal to Revelation, mixed with faith enough to receive the testimony of God. Now if the Bible has any special revelation of this or any other subject, no matter what, it is not only our right, but our imperative duty, to know what is revealed, for "revealed things belong unto man." So when we have difficulties or perplexities that belong to us to understand, we have only to appeal to the great standard of eternal truth and receive its testimony in its own light, when our difficulties will vanish and harmony be found, where we once saw only confusion.

But has the Bible any revelation that bears directly upon the question now before us? Does the Bible really show us the difference between man and beast? I think sincerely that if the Bible has an emphatic answer to any question, it is to the one at issue: and I will now appeal to "the law and to the testimony." David says, (Ps. 46: 2): "Man being in honor abideth not: he is like the beasts that perish." Here we have a Bible answer without sophistry. The Psalmist here declares, first, man's nature. He says of man, that he abides or continues not, bp reason of death; and that in this not abiding, man is like the beasts that perish." Now remember that it is not here said of man, that his body, or his anything else is "like" a perishing beast, but the man, the whole man, the very same man that was "formed of the dust of the ground," and became a "living soul" when he received the breath of life, is now by nature "like the beasts that perish."

Now here is certainly a similitude expressed between man and beast, something in the nature of one, which is "like" a kindred nature in the other. The similitude, it is plain, consists either in both perishing, or both not perishing, for the one is like the other: which is it? Do beasts perish in death, or is there a spirit beast, that abides or continues after the material beast is dead? If this is the state of the beast in death, it is also the state of man; for one is like the other. But if the beast is wholly a material and mortal being, and is actually "dead when he dies," with nothing left to abide, or continue his existence, the similitude expressed by the sacred text must still obtain here also, and man is just as really "dead when he dies" as the beast that perishes, for he is "like" him. Is not this clear enough for a blind man to see?

But let us have more testimony on this matter, for "in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established."

Solomon says (Eccl. 3: 18–20): "I said in my heart concerning the state of the sons of men, that God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts; for that which befalleth the sons of men, befalleth beasts, even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth so dieth the other: yea they have all one breath (ruach, spirit) so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast, for all is vanity, all go into one place, all are of the dust; all turn to dust again." Now is not a likeness or similitude as forcibly expressed here, as in the preceding quotation? And is it not clearly shown further, that the likeness consists in both man and beast being material and mortal to the same extent? Most assuredly it is, in words too plain to be mistaken.

The sacred writer first lays down his premise, thus: "One thing befalleth them. As the one dieth, so [in like manner] dieth the other." Then he reasons, "for [because] all have one breath."

From this, then, we learn, that as mortal material beings, there is no difference between man and beast. They each have the same kind of life—"The breath of life"—which is dependent upon the same organic functions for its maintainance in both, and consequently that state of the creature, known as life, whether of man or beast, must cease when the organization which sustains it is destroyed.

But the main question between us is this: Cannot life exist indepenent of organic function? Immaterialists say that it can. But I must confess my utter ignorance of this kind of metaphysics, this strange reasoning upon "inorganic life," which is, we will take the liberty to claim, "a life that never dies."

But to our text. Solomon says that man and beast die alike; both are equally exposed to death, and both are equally destroyed by it; for their condition in death is the same. "All go unto one place. [heaven, hell, or where?] Who goes? Man and beast. Where do they go? "All are of the dust, all turn to dust again." Now if man's life can, and does exist independently of his body, the spirit or life of the beast, must exist independent of its body; for they both have the same spirit or life.

Although these logical deductions drawn from the word of God are very repulsive to some men of very refined feelings, who do not wish to "drag" man down from his "immortal nature" (?) to that of "beastly materialism," yet it must be the conclusion of every man, who will receive the testimony of the Bible.

But has not the New Testament some proof to add to what has already gone before? Please examine carefully, Pet. 2: 12. He says: "But these [who?] as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not, and shall utterly perish in their own corruption." But we have not got out of the "alphabet" of revelation yet; for here is an apostle of the new dispensation, still giving his testimony to the support of the affirmation of David and Solomon, that he (man) is like the beasts that perish. The apostle says, that there is a certain class of individuals which, "like the natural brute beasts," that are "made to be taken and destroyed, shall in like manner utterly perish." Now what is the difference, we ask, between utterly perishing and being destroyed? Our opponents sometimes claim, that the Scriptures we have cited, from the Old Testament, can have no practical bearing on the condition of man after death. That they only express a likeness, or similitude, between the common "natural" or "temporal" death of man and beast, but are irrelevant as expressing man's condition in death. Now we admit that the Scriptures alluded to have no practical bearing on the future destiny of man, if this is what is meant by "condition in death," but we claim that they do conclusively show that man is as wholly overcome by death, that is, "natural or temporal" death, as the beasts that perish; else the similitude is lost, and the sacred writers are guilty of a blunder. But if David and Solomon blundered when they said that the first or "natural" death of man was like that of a perishing beast, what egregious error did Peter get into, when he made the same similitude between the second or last death of man and the destruction of a perishing beast; which is evidently the very thing that the apostle sets forth in the above quotation. But they have made no such blunders. Therefore we claim that both the natural and the future destiny of man are clearly defined by the Scriptures we have cited.

The definition is this: (1) Man is a material being, else he could not die like a "beast that perishes." (2) He is wholly under the dominion of death when he dies, for he goes to the same place with the beast. "All are of the dust, all turn to dust again." (3) Man's first death is not only said to be like that of a beast, but it is said of him that rejects the offer of eternal Life in Christ, that he shall "utterly perish" in the second death, as the "natural brute beast" now perishes. We then ask if a man dies the first death like a beast, and perishes in the second as a "natural brute beast" is destroyed, what becomes of that "rational, moral, thinking entity" in man that "must endlessly exist?" Or is that "thinking, moral entity," the man proper? Immaterialism is forced to say, yes. But we must not forget the similitude in the death of man and beast, we must keep that in view. So then if immaterialism has given a correct answer, and it is a fact that the man proper does not die, it is equally a fact, that the beast proper does not, for they die alike: "As the one dieth so dieth the other."

But the worst dilemma for immaterialism is yet to be seen if the above answer is true; for when men and beasts die, they "all go unto one place." Now If this "thinking-rational-moral-entity-man" is the man proper, this evidently is the individual who does the "going" after death; and if this goes to heaven or hell at death, the beast proper goes also; for "all go unto one place," both man and beast proper. But theology, according to these premises, must give up one of her deposits for these "living dead" men, and make it all heaven, or hell; for all go unto ONE place. There cannot be two places to be occupied, by these spirit-man-and-beast entities.

I have shown, I think, Bible testimony enough to convince the most incredulous, if they will but receive the "engrafted word," that man and beast alike, are material, earthy, perishing beings.

But let us reason now for a short time upon the manifestations, or phenomena of life, in the light of scientific investigation.

What is life in the light of science? It is the product of organic functions, harmonized by the natural law of development. To explain: if the natural order or harmony of these organic functions of which life is the result, is broken, the result is disease, decay, and death. Hence life, with all of its various phenomenas is not only dependent upon a system of organic functions, but also upon the harmonious development of those functions. The result which follows them is this: If we have a high development of the functions of life, and the corresponding harmony of action remains unbroken, we certainly have a high development of order of life, while on the other hand, we have a weak functionary system, though the harmony of organic functions be yet unbroken, we can have only a weak manifestation of the phenomena of life. Hence we find a gradual increase of organic function from the lowest order of life, to the highest, as developed in our world, and subject to our investigation. We find further, that this great scale of organic life embraces within its range an innumerable host of living beings, each having his own peculiar phenomena of life, or a life "after his kind" of organism.

Occupying a situation at the head of this scale of organic life, though belonging to it, we find man, who, as regards his position in life, is above them all, having dominion over every creature. But what gives him this predominence in life? Manifestly, his organic structure, a proper development, and normal condition of which, produces and sustains that "rational, moral, thinking," man, which places him in the scale of beings a "little lower than the angels," and "crowns him with glory and honor" in this present life. Hence the beast so far below him, in life, or in the state of the living, but becomes his equal, in the state of the dead, as far as a continuation of any of the phenomena of life is concerned, which would not, and could not be the case, if any of the phenomena of man's life were the inherent immortality independent of organization.

My premise then is, that the human mind with all its various phenomena, is the product of organic function, and that the brain is the organ of production. What pathologist will deny the truth of this assertion. Who at all acquainted with Hygenic Physiology, will say, that the state of the brain has nothing to do with the mind? Who has ever seen the phenomena of mind, when the functions of the brain were destroyed, or suspended? No one. Hence, the mind is the result of internal organization, consequently is called by the apostles, the "inner-man" which is renewed day by day. The same apostle tells the Ephesian brethren also to be "renewed in the spirit of their mind," which would be a matter of impossibility, if the spirit of the mind is immortality. But it is not; consequently all the intellectual glory of man is only commensurate with the organic functions that produce it, and must cease to be when the organism that sustains it is destroyed by death. Hence, man's "breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, and in that very day his thoughts perish." (Ps. 147: 4.)

The Duties of the Hour.

Our special duty is to keep our present whereabouts distinctly before the church and world: and to do this more effectually, it is time that the editors of our Advent papers, and ministers of our churches awake out of sleep on the great question of the immediate coming of Christ to judgment, and turn their attention to a more anxious and earnest study of prophecy, especially the prophetic periods. Our Advent papers have lost ground amazingly in this direction the last few years, notwithstanding the multiplicity of prophetic omens, as harbingers of the near approach of the judgment of the great day: and there is a large number of the most substantial and truth-loving brethren that have long been in the faith, as well as those of this stamp, that have more recently embraced the faith of the immediate coming of Christ, that are not at all satisfied with the character of said papers. A large portion of said papers are not read because the kind of food they want is not there. I speak this plainly, because plain speech is now demanded. Our brethren do not want to start another paper if the tone of our present papers can be elevated to the standard demanded by the light now shining on the prophetic word. "Time" is the head light to everything, and the wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment. Time is what gives intensity to the pursuit of all worldly objects, much more it should to heavenly things, and it will unless we have become more stupid than the "stork in the heaven" ...."and the turtle, and the crane, and the swallow," which understand appointed times, and "observe the time of their coming." (Jer. 8: 7.)

"But," says one, "you would not have us speak, unless we believe?" Certainly not. But when are you going to believe, when it gets too late to do anything in the right direction? Hear the word of the Lord: "Thus saith the Lord, Keep ye judgment and do justice; for my salvation is near to come....The Lord which gathereth the outcasts of Israel saith, Yet will I gather others to him beside those that are gathered unto him. All ye beasts of the field come to devour, yea, all the beasts of the forest. His watchmen are blind: they are all ignorant; they are all dumb dogs; they cannot bark; sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber. Yea, they are greedy dogs; which can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand: they all look to their own way, every one for his gain from his quarter. Come ye, say they: I will fetch wine, and we will fill ourselves with strong drink; and to-morrow shall be as this day, and much more abundant." (Is. ch. 56.) If the spirit of this prophecy is not creeping over us as a people, then I have no discernment. Where is the self-sacrifice that was witnessed years gone by, when men could go anywhere, money or no money, but go with faith in God, and herald the coming of the Bridegroom. Now we are thirty years nearer that day than at that movement.

But there are strong indications of a waking up, as our Conference at Worcester plainly indicated. There has been (as was observed) no meeting of such importance for twenty years. God's approval was very clearly manifest. It has inaugurated a new era in the great Advent proclamation; and the spirit that characterized that meeting is destined to move forward, and it will take all the true lovers of our Lord's appearing with it. This is our firm conviction. The "little book" that has been "eaten" by us, producing sweetness and bitterness, is to prepare us to prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings." "THIS GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM IS TO BE PREACHED IN ALL THE WORLD, AS A WITNESS TO ALL NATIONS." And Adventists are under obligation to do it, or they will be found recreant to their trust, as stewards of CHRIST. Our duty now, as never before, is to fulfil the angel message of Rev. 14:6, 7: "And I saw another angel [or messenger] flying in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come, and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the fountains of waters."

Br. Himes: I think the Lord Jesus wants you to take hold of this work, as you did in '42–4, and scatter this message world-wide. Some of our brethren have determined to sell their worldly possessions, and go out and sound the alarm, and warn the world of the coming judgment. They believe Christ is coming in 1873, and are not afraid to say so.

I believe this work is of God, and no human power can stop it. The Lord has placed before us an "open door, and no man can shut it." See Rev. 3:8. We have been talking as men in a sleep, and like begets like. Now let the time past suffice that we have been in this condition, and now awake to our responsibilities. The "angel" message is a positive message —"The hour of his judgment is come." Here is definite time announced; and, I believe, definite time connected with the proclamation of the judgment message, is to arouse the church and world, to take out and make ready a people for the coming of Christ, to join with the holy dead at the resurrection morn in the celebration of the marriage supper of the Lamb.

Now let all the household of faith awake to earnest prayer and to a solemn consideration as to what is duty; as to what the Lord wants you to do with your worldly possessions, in view of the immediate proximity of the judgment of the great day, when you will be called to give an account of your stewardship. You profess to believe your possessions will soon be consigned to the flames, if not used for Christ. Christ says, "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." The first characteristics of the the last days, given by Paul (2 Tim. 3), are, "self-lovers," covetous." Now what are facts in reference to us, as professed believers in the immediate coming of Christ? Let the nice costly houses and equippage, with the extravagant mode of living, in eating and in dress, that are pandering to, or made subservient to our lusts, answer. Facts speak louder than words, is an adage that all admit as true. We are not the people we were twenty-five years ago. "Iniquity has abounded, and the love of many has waxed cold." We know whereof we affirm: and it is time the truth was spoken, and the alarm sounded. God will hold us responsible if we hold our peace. We must speak, "whether men will hear or forbear."

Some have offered to the writer, as an excuse for building costly mansions, &c., that there was no inducement to give money to the several objects presented as claiming our attention, because those objects have been perverted from their original design; there fore their money might as well be in costly houses and equipage, as anything else. Will such excuses as these stand in the judgment? Such people should stop mocking God, and repent, and do their first works.

These lines are not written without tears of sorrow and deep anguish of spirit. I tell you my dear brethren it is time to humble ourselves before God in the dust, and repent of our worldliness and backsliding, if we expect to stand before the Master approved. There are millions of surplus property in the possession of professed Adventists that ought to be used in giving the evidences to the world of the immediate coming of Christ. The Advent publishing societies, both in the East and West, have facilities to publish this special message world-wide; and all that is wanting is money, and a heart to engage in this work. O Christ, help thy people to take hold of this work in earnest.

NOTE: We have concluded to make no extended remarks upon the above communication from our excellent and zealous brother. We think he is mistaken in applying certain Scriptures to myself and others who believe just as he does, except as to the specific date of 1873. We plead not guilty! We are building no fine houses. We are not living luxuriously, nor clad in costly array. All is on the altar, consecrated to the spread of the gospel of the Kingdom. We cannot act upon the convictions of others, however much we may respect their opinions.

Let every one be true to God, true to his word, true to themselves and their own convictions. But let us have no intolerance, no sweeping accusations based upon the remissness of a few individuals. If '73 shall bring the times of restitution spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began, we intend and expect that the event will find us waiting, watching, and ready!

We mean to "occupy" fully, to the extent of all our talents, whatever they may be, until he who bestowed them shall return to claim his own with usury.

Argument Does not Consist in Numbers.

In the examination of any theological question, the truth can only be reached by fairly considering the argumentation on both sides, and deciding in favor of the side that has the most and best evidence. It is often affirmed by disputants in dogmatics, that "numbers makes argument." We are referred for proof of the validity of a theory to the fact that the whole world believes it! This, by some, is considered good evidence; but we find by close scrutiny that it is not to be trusted. No argument is more treacherous and unsafe than the numeral argument. If this were the test, which would gain the day: Catholicism or Protestantism? Which religion has the most adherents? Undoubtedly Catholicism is true if argument consists in numbers.

There is a certain theory of the Millennium in which, comparatively speaking, the whole Christian world implicitly believes. I refer to what is known in theology as the Temporal Millennium, or spiritual reign of Christ for a thousand years prior to the Second Advent. This is a tenet of modern theology than which none is more popular and universal. Everybody, so to speak, believes it. If any confidence is to be placed in the numeral argument, certainly we must consider the Temporal Millennium theory an established fact. But upon examination of the facts in the case we find this millennium theory not three hundred years old! We find that the theory was concocted in the mind of Daniel Whitby, D. D., and first promulgated by him in his "Essay on the Millennium," in the seventeenth century. No traces of the doctrine can be found among the writings of the early Christian fathers. And when we turn to the New Testament we find it in the clearest terms most explicitly contradicted. "The wheat and tares" are to grow together till the harvest. (Mat. 13.) A state of unprecedented wickedness is to exist in the world at the coming of the Son of Man, and many other like passages, all of whom stand in perfect antagonism with the spirital millennium view, in which the masses at the present day have so much and such implicit confidence. Thus we see the unreliable character of an argument that has only numbers for its foundation.

A doctrine that cannot be established by sound Bible argumentation is not worthy of the confidence of any Christian, though the whole world should believe it. On the other hand, a doctrine that is emphatically of Bible origin should be unhesitatingly endorsed by all Christians, though the whole world beside should reject it. This is the only safe rule for the guidance of earnest seekers after Bible truth.

It is not Heresy?

Ashchurch Rectory, Tewksbury, England, February 3d, 1871.

To Rev. William Griffith, Congregational minister, Eastbourne, England,

Dear Sir: Somebody has sent me a reprint of your letter to the Eastbourne Gazette. With respect to what the doctrine of the Church of England is on Future Punishment, perhaps you are not aware of two things: (1) In the Articles of 1552, forty-two in number there was one which affirmed the immortality of the soul, and the endlessness of the miseries of the wicked. At each of the three revisions of the Articles afterwards, this unscriptural one was left out. (2) Then a lawful and authoritative Court has pronounced that endless pain of the wicked is NOT a doctrine of the church of England.

God prosper you in upholding this truth. The opposite came from heathenism, and was stereotyped by Popery in the dark; for it was found so convenient for purgatory, masses, priestcraft, etc., etc.

The great truth, the extinction of all evil through the cross of Christ, is winning its way. I uphold it in this locality, and while there are many opposers there are many friends. I thought you would like to know the the above facts.

I am, dear sir, yours faithfully, H. S. Wardleigh, Rector of Ashchurch.

Rev. William Griffith of Eastbourne, one of the leading Congregational ministers of England, has recently issued a work entitled, "The entire Evidence of Evangelists and Apostles on Future Punishment." In this work he says: "After more than twenty years of inquiry and pause, re-consideration and prayer, examination of all the orthodox arguments, and study of all the New Testament evidence, I have reached a settled conviction that the popular doctrine of Hell is an error; that there is no more authortiy for it in Scripture than there is for the Romish doctrine of Purgatory, or for the Pope's headship and infallibility. Paul and Peter, John, James, and Jude, all agree in teaching that destruction is the last judgment of God upon impenitence."

Says Rev. William Kerr, Rector of Tipton Staff church, England: "The doom of the wicked is everywhere spoken of in Holy Scripture in terms which imply obliteration of their entire being and substance."

The final destiny of the wicked man is that he shall be as "if he never had been:" thus say the Scriptures.—Rev. Mr. Taunton, of London.

"Search the Scriptures and see if these things be so."

The Time Question.

It is greatly to be lamented that so much is being written and said about definite time, while the New Testament Scriptures teach so positively that the position of the church is one of watching and expectancy, knowing not the day or hour, but that Christ's coming is nigh, even at the door. "Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled."

What generations? "Ye who see these things" [signs].

Is not this near enough to serve all practical purposes, and lead every faithful soul to labor unceasingly with all diligence till called from labor to reward? Past experience ought to have enforced lessons of wisdom, and the cause of Christ not suffer again from the indiscreet pushing of a definite point of time when there are other strong points of chronological data that extend to the longest limitations of the generations referred to, by the Savior.

It is twenty-nine years this spring since bidding adieu to family and friends, with simple carpet-bag in hand, I joined my husband in the mission field, believing that a few months would terminate our pilgrimage, and close all mission labor—if chronology was as reliable as inspiration. The months passed away, but not the heavens. Jesus did not come. Many upbraided us for not now giving up our hope; but they did not understand what our hope was or upon what it was based. The prophetic word, and teachings of Christ and his apostles, was anchorage so secure that our frail barks were not stranded. Thank God! And while to-day events are culminating that must soon bring the realization of our "blessed hope," the resurrection of the dead, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ," let us heed the admonition of the Master, "Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." While 1873. or '75, or even '80 are points of deep interest to the Bible student, yet do not wisdom, prudence and discretion admonish pointing to the past where lies wrecked much that might have been saved had there been less urging of definite time.

The Advent Christian Church in this city, organized by Br. and Sr. Reed, is steadily growing up into Christ, their loving head; and additions are being made to its numbers of such as give good evidence will be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. The chapel being erected will be ready for dedication next week—the first on this coast.

Our Young Folks.

How to Treat Ghosts.

If we only learn to fear God in the right way, we should learn, at the same time, never to fear anything else. Those who fear God properly are the bravest people in the world. The Bible tells us that "The wicked flee when no man pursueth, but the righteous is bold as a lion."

Let me tell how a little girl once got over a great fright, just by fearing God and having right thoughts about him. She went to pay a visit to her aunt in the country. While there she had to sleep in a room by herself. This was not pleasant to her, for at home she always slept with her sister.

One night during this visit, she awoke suddenly and saw something white at the foot of her bed. Its head which she thought she saw as plainly as could be, was turned a little to one side, and was looking at her. She said to herself, "It is a ghost, I am sure it is!" and she pulled the bed-clothes over her head. Presently she said to herself: "Well, what if there is a ghost here, is not God here too? and does not the Bible say that nothing can harm those who trust in him?" Then she tried to put her trust in God.

This gave her courage, and she resolved to take another look at the white thing. It did look very much like a living thing of some kind.

"Well, if it is," she thought to herself, "I'll speak to it;" and she cried out "Who's there?" The figure did not stir nor answer. There it stood as still and white as ever.

"My father says there are no ghosts," she said to herself. "And if there are what harm is it likely they want to do to me? I'll just put my trust in God, and he can take care of me." This thought gave her more courage, and made her feel more comfortable. Still there stood the figure.

"I'll know who or what you are," said the little girl. "Mother says frights are worse in people's fancies than anywhere else."

Then she jumped out of bed and marched straight up to the figure. How many children would have done this? I am afraid some grown persons would hardly have had the courage to do this. But this dear child walked straight up to it. And what do you suppose it proved to be? Why, it was only the moonlight shining on the curtains on the wall.

"How much it did look like a head, with eyes, and nose, and mouth," she said; and then she jumped into bed again. For awhile she lay and looked at it. But it only looked like moonshine now, and no ghost; and she wondered how she could have been so deceived. And that, I dare say, is as much as ghosts ever are—only moonshine. She kept her eyes on the soft silver light till she fell into a sweet sleep again.—Dr. Newton.

Rats.

The following curious anecdote furnishes another instance of the occasional confidence of animals in others which they are supposed to regard generally as their natural enemies. Some years since, I lived in the village of Ickleton in Cambridgeshire. After my shooting excursions the dogs were fed in their kennels, the food being placed in a long trough. To this duty I generally attended myself. Upon one occasion after feeding the dogs, I looked into a kennel through a hole in the door, and was somewhat astonished, not at perceiving a number of rats there, but to see them in the trough, quietly and fearlessly partaking of the bread and milk with the dogs, who seemed to pay no attention to such 'small deer.' I doomed the rats to destruction; and the next day placed the trough in such a position that a gun pointed through the hole would rake it from one end to the other. At the usual hour the food was placed as a lure—but the dogs were kept out—in vain. I could see the head of more than one sagacious old rat peering out at more than one hole, and from under the manger, for the purpose of reconnoitering; but none descended. Having waited half an hour to no purpose, I let in the dogs, and in a few minutes they were again feeding cheek by jowl. Had I not ascertained this, I might have supposed that altering the position of the trough, or some other trifling disarrangement of the economy of the kennel, had aroused the suspicion of the little creatures. They seemed however, to be aware that their safety was connected with the presence of the dogs.

The Accurate Boy.

There was a young man once in the office of a western railway superintendent. He was occupying a position that four hundred boys in the city would have wished to get. It was honorable and 'paid well,' besides being in the line of promotion. How did he get it? Not by having a rich father, for he was the son of a laborer. The secret was his beautiful accuracy. He began as an errand boy, and did his work accurately. His leisure time he used in perfecting his writing and arithmetic. After a while he learned to telegraph At each step his employer commended his accuracy, and relied on what he did, because it was just right.

And it is thus with every occupation. The accurate boy is the favored one. Those who employ men do not wish to be on the lookout as though they were rogues or fools. If a carpenter must stand at his journeyman's elbow to be sure that his work is right, or if a cashier must run over his bookkeeper's column, he might as well do the work himself as employ another to do it in that way; and it is very certain that an employer will get rid of such an inaccurate workman as soon as he can.

EDITOR'S APPOINTMENTS.

South Pendleton April 21–28, (24th Ward Cincinnati.)

After this meeting I shall spend a month or more in Michigan, appointments to be announced hereafter.

WE heartily commend Br. Wellcome's idea of publishing tracts for the Norweigans. If we were only all awake as we should be, we should have had them long ago; and tracts in many other languages, also. Heaven help us to recognize our duties and responsibilities.

A CORRESPONDENT suggests that something more should be said about the Harrisonville Debate. We think no further remarks necessary. We stated the facts just as they were. A repetition of them on our part, will not prevent those who have misrepresented them from continuing do to so.

BY the way we are indebted to the Chicago Evening Journal for that sermon, upon the new earth. And we take pleasure in remarking that the Journal is the best evening paper published in this city, and one of the best newspapers of the country. It is published by C. L. Wilson & Co. $10. a year.

DR. NEWMAN, the well known Methodist preacher of Washington, in a late sermon in the Methodist Cathedral of that city, affirmed that God sent Samuel to Saul at Endor "to prove the existence of disembodied souls." He is sure the woman's fright was real and not pretended. Accepting her as a credible witness he must receive her testimony that Samuel came up, ascending out of the earth. "An old man cometh up," she said. It is settled then, if Dr. Newman is right, that disembodied souls live underground—as was taught by heathen and other fabulists.

THE Doctor is something of a materialist. He says "It is rational as well as Scriptural to infer that the soul has form." Now whatever has shape must be material. Without endorsing the notion, the Doctor mentions the fact that some physiolgists suppose "that the soul is co-extensive with the nervous system" Substitute human for nervous, Doctor, and you will have just the truth. "Man became a living soul."

Spurgeon says:

"There is great talk now-a-days of union; the walls of the various churhes are to be broken down, and the denominations are to be blended. Think not of it in such a fashion; the only union possible or desirable is that we all unite to sit at Jesus' feet. It is not allowable that we concede one truth and you another; that is not natural charity, but common treason to Christ. We have no right to yield an atom of the truth of God under the pretence of charity. Truth is no property of ours; we are only God's stewards, and it behoves us to be faithful to our trust. Neither one church nor another has any right to abate its testimony one jot if it be true. To alter the statue-book of Christ is blasphemy. True union will come when all the churches learn of Christ, for Christ does not teach two things opposed to each other. There are not two baptisms in the Bible; we shall not find two sets of dogmas diametrically opposite to each other. If we give ub the various things that are of man, and hold fast each of us only that which is of God, we shall be united in principle and in doctrine: and 'one Lord, one faith, one baptism,' will once again be emblazoned upon the banners of the church of God. Sit at Jesus' feet, O thou church of Christ, and true unity will come to thee."

ECUMENICAL COUNCIL.

The American Tract Society have just published An Inside View of the Vatican Council in the Speech of the most Reverend Abp. Kenrick, of St. Louis. Edited by Leonard W. Bacon; with notes and addititional documents, including the Syllabus of the Pope, protest of Father Hyacinthe, speeches of Bp. Strossmayer, Acts of the Council, appeal of Hyacinthe to the Roman Bishops, declaration of Dr. Dollinger and his associates, and the programme of the Anti-infallible league.

Every Protestant minister should read this work. It gives a knowledge of the papal power that they can find no where else in the English language, as nearly all the proceedings of the late council are locked up in the Latin language.

The earlier and later acts and assumptions of the apostasy will be found in this work; especially the last and crowning blasphemy of claiming for a man an attribute of God.

When one reads the following claims of divine rights vested in the Pope, one is reminded of the prophecy in Dan. 7:11, of the "great words which the Horn spake."

According to the new dogma, they may by divine right give whole nations into slavery on account of some measure of their sovereign.

He has the right to make slaves of a foreign nation merely because they are not Catholics.

He has the right to rob innocent populations, cities, regions, or countries en masse, with the sole exception of infants and the dying, of all those services which he declares essential to salvation, merely because the sovereign or government has violated a papal command or some right of the church.

He has the right to make a present of whole countries inhabited by non-Christian peoples, and hand over all rights of sovereignty and property in them to any Christian prince he may please.

He has the right to incite princes, by promises of forgiveness of sins and heaven, to make war on the enemies of his secular authority.

He has the right to provide for the Inquisition by direct and personal legislation of his own, depriving those accused before the holy office of any advocate to defend them, authorizing the application of the torture, obliging the magistrate to carry out the capital sentences of the Inquisition, prohibiting them to spare the life of any lapsed heretic, even on his conversion.

He "does not exceed his powers" in forcibly depriving heretics of their children in order that they may be brought up Catholics.

He "does not exceed his powers" in releasing at his pleasure from oaths of allegiance taken by a people to their government.

He "does not exceed his powers" in absolving a sovereign from the treaties he has sworn to observe, or from his oath to the constitution of his country, or in giving full power to his confessor to absolve him from any oath he finds it inconvenient to keep.

He "does not exceed his powers" when he assumes to dissolve the bond of marriage by declaring one of the parties to be excommunicated.

The act of Pope Adrian IV., in delivering Ireland over to that subjection to the English crown from which it has never escaped, was within the power of the Pope.

And the act of St. Pius V., and of successor, Sextus V., which excommunicated Queen Elizabeth of England and invited her assassination, is justified by the Council as an act which it would be right to do again, under like circumstances.

—Notwithstanding the above pretensions to infallibility and universal power, the judgment has set upon the Papacy and its temporal dominion has been taken away. (Dan. 7:26), so that most of the "great words" of the would-be tyrant are like an empty bubble. Neither church or state find in them any ground for serious alarm.

Still Rome exists as a formidable power, and now holds 180,000,000 of the population of the globe under its influence. It has great strength in its institutions of learning, both literary and theological. Its organization, or hierarch, is the most perfect in the world. Its Pope, Cardinals, and Bishops are learned, shrewd and indefatigable. Their gorgeous temples and priesthood, their eloquent ovations, and their splendid orchestras pouring on the ears of the masses the finest and most delicious music, give the church of Rome great power and popularity. And in spite of the loss of its temporal power, the Papacy will successfully compete with Protestant Christendom while the world stands. Until Christ comes again Rome will "make war and prevail against the saints." But its time is short. Soon the Lord will appear to destroy this Man of Sin "by the brightness of his coming." And the true church prays, "Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

CONFESSIONS OF A TRIMMER.

We can think of no better title for the article which we give elsewhere from the Independent, by Rev. W. C. Wilkinson. It is one of the neatest efforts to deeply plant a root of prejudice (under cover of a narrative of personal experience) we have ever read, and will doubtless have a wide circulation among immaterialists, and perhaps bias a multitude of minds.

He takes his text from an infidel, and then justly admits that it is not an axiom but an assumption. The conditions of his text require him 'to have believed' the theory he now regards with 'unspeakable abhorrence' yet, on his own confession he never did believe it; he was bewildered, in a maze, 'carefully limiting himself to the use of Bibical language.' It would be well if he would still cleave to that rule.

He evidently wishes to be respectable. When he undertook the 'heretical side' for the sake of the argument, it shocked him to find that 'persons motley in aspect and garb,' and withal 'poor spellers,' uneducated, sympathised with his ideas. He does not say it, but intimates that no clean, well-dressed persons, good spellers, had any affiiliation with "annihilation." Evidently it is of low associations, and equally evidently he was predisposed against the doctrine because of the gladness with which these very "common people" heard it. Still he had a conviction—a conviction with an "if," and never without the "if." What is such a conviction worth?

He "caught a glimpse," at last, of something that settled his mind. He seems never to have clear views on either side. But he saw, or thought he saw, "the natural affiliations" of annihilation, and they were "materialistic and gross!" That they are the latter, we flatly deny. Evil is not inherent in matter, and materialism is not necessarily "gross." Immaterialists delight in associating the two terms, gross and material, hoping that so much of the bad odor of the former term may be injected into the latter as to make it an offence, and prevent investigation into its actual qualities. But every intelligent man knows that in all ages most revolting grossness has been attached to, or has grown out of immaterialistic systems. And the flagrant errors prevalent in Christendom to-day, both of theory and practice, are only too sad proof that immaterialism has no stones to throw at its rival on the score of the practical results of its theory. Count up the gross errors of the day—gross in principle, in morals, in results, and you will find most of them based upon immaterialism.

Finally he experienced a "sentimental salvation," not "logical." And to this day he can "feel" that annihilation is not true, much easier than he can prove it false. No doubt! no doubt! And so he falls back upon consciousness—an argument that is not worth the ink and paper it takes to describe it. "Inward evidence!" indeed! If God says the wages of sin is death, is a "sentimentally" saved man to answer him—

> "Who forged that other influence,
> That heat of inward evidence,
> By which I doubt against the sense?"

If he may, the answer would no doubt be, Let God be true, and he who said "Thou shalt not surely die," be what God has said he is. The fable of the world's conversion is not, in Luther's strong language, the only "falsehood forged by Satan."

DELAYS.

Few of our readers can have any idea of the delays and trials incident to the removal and setting up anew such an office as our own. Last week we had THE TIMES printed by a Job Printing office. But this proved very expensive, and we concluded to wait until our own press shall be running again to publish this issue. Unavoidable and unforseen delays have hindered us four days. We are now about through with the hardest of the work, and shall soon be in smooth running order.

We crave the forbearance of all our friends and patrons.

TO CORRESPONDENTS AND CONTRIBUTORS.

In the course of removal there has necessarily been much confusion in every department of our work; and as an office for the editor was left for one of the last things to be attended to, he has had no small difficulty to keep letters and communications properly filed. Some articles have been delayed that should have been published at once. Others we have been compelled to cut down. We beg the forbearance of all; we are doing all we can, and as well as we can.

OUR NEW OFFICE.

Nobody in Chicago expects now to have such an office as they would wish; they are glad to get anything that will do. We were peculiarly fortunate in securing the room at No. 11, South Canal St.

Our shelves are not yet filled with publications; but we shall soon have a supply of all standard Advent Books and tracts, and a welcome to all, Adventists or inquirers, who will call upon us.

CALIFORNIA.

Our correspondent, under date of March 12, writes that he had just had a conversation with Rev. Dr. Cummings, Chaplain of the Assembly. The Doctor inquired if the Herald was not conducted by Adventists who held to the orthodox view on the life and death question? Then he incidentally spoke of J. V. Himes, whom he met in California in early days, and was astonished to hear that Eld Himes had "gone over" on the life and death question. He was orthodox when the Doctor met him. Our correspondent remarked large numbers of Congregational clergymen in England were "going over" on this question. He handed the Doctor a copy of the TIMES, and hopes that J. V. H. will soon hear from Rev. Hiram Cummings.

On the preceding Sunday our correspondent took a trip to San Francisco. Eld. Grant was having crowded houses at his discussions and general devotional meetings. By request of the Elder, he attended at the Skating Rink Sunday eve, March 10. Dr. A. L. Stone discoursed on the new heaven and new earth. The discourse evidently took the majority of the audience by surprise. On the same evening Eld. G. was lecturing on the Coming Kingdom. But the Elder's discourse could not have been more radical as a materialist's sermon than was the Doctor's. He expressed his full belief in the renewing of this earth, after the millennium (here he is mixed); and poured a steady stream of solemn satire against the "view" that "anchored a disembodied soul in vacuity." Says one correspondent: "If we could only prevail upon Dr. Leask or Mr. Constable to come out here, may be our Congregationalist preachers would be willing to confess the truth still more fully." May be so.

It was a common remark among the audience as they moved out of the Rink: "The Doctor is stealing Eld. Grant's thunder!"

After listening to this discourse, our correspondent returned to the Advent chapel, to inform the Elder of the character of the treatise on Rev. 21, to which he had listened. A prayer-meeting was in progress, supplemental to the preaching. A young lady made her first confession. There was a deep impression of the Spirit in the meeting; and the ungodly could tell that the Lord was present with his blessing. Some of the leading citizens of San Francisco were in attendance—waiting and watching—at this prayer-meeting.

Our correspondent insists that California is a specially favored field for Adventists, and that we should send and retain some of our best workers in that section. He hopes that Eld. J. V. H. will make his appearance in the Sunset Land next summer or fall. We shall go if the way seems to open naturally.

The Resurrection.

"For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead." (1 Cor. 15:21.) Death is the opposite of life; so also is the resurrection the opposite of death. By the transgression of the first Adam came death, by the obedience of the second Adam came the resurrection of the dead.

Truly is death called an enemy. Many of the sorrows and tears of earth are caused by death, but what would death be without the hope of a resurrection? Without this hope we would view death in a proper light, and only as death is viewed in a proper light, can the glory of the resurrection be seen. And in the same degree that we estimate and behold the glory of the resurrection, will we see the glory of Jesus, the author of the resurrection. Death without the resurrection would be unending. "Then they which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." All the hopes we could have would be in this life only. When we should fall asleep, it would be an unending sleep. There would not a ray of hope be left us. The opposite of this sleep is unending life; but it would never be ours without a resurrection. Without this the future of every man would be dark. Man would die, and not live any more. And without life, man returns to the ground from whence he was taken. To this all would have come, and remained in death's embrace, had not the Lord, the second Adam, through obedience unto death, purchased life for the dead. Blessed be the name of the Lord for the gift of everlasting life. Oh! that we might have a clear view of the greatness of this gift, by contrasting it with death as death would be without a resurrection.

But who is fully able to contrast between unending death and an unending blissful life? The resurrection of believers is not only from the state of death, but from the power of death, never to die any more. (Lk. 20:35, 36.) Who cannot see the goodness of God in the gift of his Son to redeem man from the state of death which otherwise would have been unending. Let it be remembered that what we call temporal death only became temporal through the sufferings of Jesus.

The goodness of God is calculated to lead men to repentance. (Rom. 2:4.) The clearer our view of death as it would be without a resurrection to life, the greater will the goodness of God appear in the gift of his Son, who is the Resurrection and the Life. Sinners should be led to repentance through a knowledge of the goodness of God. Believers should be strengthened to pass through persecutions, and encouraged to fight on by the hope of the resurrection of the dead. Paul says: "Wherefore comfort one another with these words." What words? Words concerning the resurrection of those that have fallen asleep. Oh! how much greater our sorrows would be in regard to those that have fallen asleep, had we no hope of their resurrection, as was the case with the Sadducees. Paul would not have us to be ignorant in this matter, as they were; hence his frequent allusion to the fact that the dead shall rise. He would have us place our affections on things beyond this life, on the appearing of Jesus, and the glory connected with his coming. In 1 Cor. ch. 15, where he proves the resurrection to his brethren, and contrasts between the resurrected and the Adamic or present state, between the mortal and immortal, the corruptible and the incorruptible states, and in view of the sleep of friends in death, and that the enemy was rapidly approaching themselves, he says for their encouragement—

Annihilation Doctrine "Experienced."

Renan prefaces his romance of with the remark that the neces- qualification of the critic of a re- is to have once believed it and eve it no longer. This brilliant ductive paradox is probably as case of what logicians call the principii as is to be found in ure. For M. For to have believed w to disbelieve a religion can y to criticise it only if it be a religion. Having once believed a ligion, and now mistakenly to ieve it, is, of course, the supreme nclusive disqualification for criti- it. evertheless, acknowledge that I ch the subject of annihilation stood in the technical theological sense of that term) with something of the spirit betrayed in the seeming fair, but most consummately unfair dictum of M. Renan. My qualification is that I have "experienced" the doctrine; and that I reject it with unspeakable abhorrence. May I relate my experience?

It happened that, before I entered college even, I had read enough of the annihilation literature to be somewhat shaken in the former firmness of my orthodox belief. Other subjects, however, had diverted my attention and the doubt slept. In this state of mind I went to college. A year after martriculation I came before a board for examination of my Christian experience and my religious creed. I had to answer a series of categorical questions. One was: "Do you believe in the endless conscious punishment of the wicked?" I hesitated. If the word "conscious" were omitted, I could answer Yes, I said. The president of the board was a doctor of divinity, truculently sound, and his forehead grew black and thunderous. I added that I did not believe to the contrary. I was simply in suspense. But suspense was horrible to that orthodox board president. He browbeat the young collegian with exemplary severity, and somehow the examination ended. Dr. Orthodox went afterward to Chicago, and was publicly convicted there of preaching sound doctrine in sermons stolen bodily from Dr. Guthrie. He finished his career, I believe, as a chaplain in the Confederate Army.

The subject went to sleep again in my mind, and remained dormant until the first year of my theological course. One rhetorical society happened to be at a loss for a topic of debate. I suggested the doctrine of annihilation. Most of my fellow students seemed not even to have heard of the doctrine. I stated the substance of it. "All on one side" they said; "'twouldn't do." "But it's not all on one side," I answered. "Well, who will sustain the heretical side?" In default of other offer, I volunteered.

The debate came off, and was continued from week to week with great interest. Somehow the news of what was doing in our hall got blazed around and the public poured in. Numbers of persons, somewhat motley in aspect and garb, with long hair, with begrimmed features, with soiled dress. strayed into assemblages, and supported the heretic with dubious re-enforcement of accord after the public exercises were over. I received letters of cheer in bad spelling, with name and without name. In short, the prospect of companionship for a heretic on the point in discussion seemed entirely too encouraging. However, I had got fascinated with the investigation, and I persisted.

In that ingenuous stage, truth was everything, and all beside was nothing. Moreover, I was brought into some personal contacts among the annihilationists that were not destitute of the charm of what seemed a true spiritual congeniality. A Rev. Mr. Cook, resident in Rochester, was one of them. I met some holders of the doctrine who were well informed, and were learned—at least in their specialty. Mr. H. L. Hastings, a prolific writer of tracts on religious subjects, who always started from the doctrine of annihilation, or returned to it, in his energetic, pointed appeals to the unconverted, was among my new acquaintances of this class. Finally Mr. C. F. Hudson, the coryphæus of the heresy, made it in his way—when in Rochester, on a visit to the Neander Library, belonging to the Theological Seminary, for the purpose of pursuing some one of his patient researches in the literature and history of that doctrine—to seek me out and establish me in the way more perfectly. The zeal of the brethren, at least was exemplary.

I read the Bible with my new eyes. How different everything in it looked! The new interpretation being applied, the old proof-texts that used to confound the heresy off-hand so easily became its plausible supports. Slowly, but effectually the whole firmament over my head had swung half way round. It moved full one hundred and eighty degrees—no more—and stopped. East was west, and west was east; north was south, and south was north. What a bewildering exchange among the points of the biblical compass! LIFE and DEATH became such different words!

I went on preaching Sunday after Sunday. My faith grew strong as it grew desperate. I preached of the future of the good and of the wicked; but I carefully limited myself to bibical language without gloss. A general skepticism threatened me. I said: if the Bible may mean so differently from my former opinion and belief, what is there that is certain? I questioned everything—everything but Christ. The Galilæan sentimentalities of M. Renan, the weak and foolish, if not wicked rustic enthusiast of our countryman, Mr. Towne, held me. I never doubted HIM. The waves of wintry desolation rolled over all things and smote against the base of the Throne of God itself. Ah! how little the people in the American Presbyterian church of St. Catherine's, Caepda, dreamed of the state of the soul out of which their student preacher from Rochester preached to them! How should they guess with what an agony of faith in the death grapple of doubt their Gospel was given to them? I wondered sometimes, as I told them with a terrible earnestness, that went almost mad with terror, "The solid earth may be a phantom, the sun in heaven may be a show, the heaven itself overhead may be a vision—all, all else, may be false and hollow; but, if there is anything real, if there is anything true, if there is anything that abides forever, then it is this Bible, this Gospel—it is God, it is Christ"—I wondered, I say, sometimes that they did not think me crazy. I spoke my conviction: but my conscience made me say the "if."

Such was the Spiritual sensitiveness of my spiritual condition that the displeasing fraternalizations that offered themselves to me in this experience helped me more than they hindered the assault of the doctrine. I was so set to give truth its full, fair chance. I attended the meetings of the heretics. I heard them talk and heard them pray among themselves at home. This gave me my first decisive check and pause. The natural affiliations of the doctrine of annihilation declared themselves. They were all materialistic and gross. The Christ of the annihilationists was not my Christ. Their Holy Spirit was not mine. I caught a glimpse swifter and of further range than my logic's ken of the doctrinal implications of the heresy. I saw the whole system of theology involved. I shuddered and recoiled.

I experienced a sentimental and not a logical salvation. To this day it is easier for me to feel than to prove the arguments of the annihilationists false. The Bible is wonderful plastic to their manipulation. Nor do I mean thus to reflect upon their sincerity in their belief. Much of their literature is saturated with the Christian spirit, transferred, I must think, from other and better schools of doctrine, forsaken for the worse. But, when their texts and their interpretations seem most conclusive to the man that has passed through my experiences, it is enough for him that he can demur, and ask unpersuaded:

> "Who forged that other influence,
> That heat of inward evidence,
> By which I doubt against the sense?"

The Times.

AT HOME.

" " " The damages in Texas from Mexican banditti have been about $1,000,000 a year, for the past six years. Possibly another national fracas is brewing there.

" " " Chicago has "aid" enough and is querying what to do with the surplus of half a million or so of money now on hand. 70-000 people have been cared for all winter.

" " " Later advices from the region of Long Pine, California, which was so terribly convulsed by the recent extraordinary earthquake, fully confirm the frightful effects of that calamity. Many persons were killed and many others injured by the falling of buildings. Great chasms opened in the earth at several points; some streams disappeared and others changed their course; and volcanic indications were apparent. Over a thousand shocks were felt after the first great convulsion, and the quaking continued at intervals for several days. It was the most terrific earthquake that has ever been known on this continent since its occupation by the white race.

" " " Israel Kimball, head of the Tobacco Division of the Internal Revenue Department, has prepared a paper for use of the Committee of Ways and Means, in which he estimates the number of consumers of manufactured tobacco and cigars in the United States at about 8,000,000, giving to each individual consumer an average of 11 pounds and 14 ounces of tobacco, and 167 cigars, the basis being the 95,000,000 pounds of manufactured tobacco, and 1,300,000,000 of cigars on which taxes were collected during the fiscal year ending with June last. The average would be larger if the tobacco manufactured and sold illegally were added.

" " " A quite serious earthquake occurred in Nevada and some parts of California last Tuesday. Heavy snow and rock slides occurred in the Sierras. This is supposed to be the severest earthquake ever experienced in the United States. The Chicago Post says:

These are stirring times. No sooner are the Three Days of Darkness safely passed, and the tale of the comet repudiated by its alleged author, than mother earth proceeds to punish a race of scoffers by a tremendous shiver of her Rocky mountain bosom. Genoa, Nevada, from which the news comes of a live earth quake, is a little mining town in the southwestern corner of the State, west of the Sierra Nevada line, and in the centre of a populous mining district. The destruction of property is comparatively slight, the town being chiefly of adobe. The only stage line in that section leading from Carson City to Placerville, in California, seems to have been thoroughly plowed, if we are to believe the statements of passengers who report immense fissures along the base of the Sierra, the drying of springs and the bursting out of others in new places. Unless these indications are greatly exaggerated, it is probable that we shall hear of an earthquake wave throughout the entire Rocky mountain range.

ABROAD.

" " " One half of the city of Antioch, in Syria, was recently destroyed by an earthquake, and fifteen hundred of the inhabitants perished.

" " " At the last meeting of the Society of Biblical Archæology, of London, a communication was received from M. Clermont Ganneau, on an inscription in old Hebrew characters of the times of the Kings of Judah, quite recently discovered at Siloam-el-Fokani, below Jerusalem. Two incised tablets, executed on the wall of ruined rock cut chamber, or sacellum, near the house of the Sheikh, of the village of Siloam, bear inscriptions in the archaic character, made familiar in the renowned Moabite stone of Dhiban. About the fourth century, strangely enough, a Christian hermit willfully mutilated a portion of this inscription; but what remains is sufficient to indicate its high value as a palæographic record. The first four lines of the first tablet contain the word Baal, and from a votive dedication to this deity, by an officer whose name is illegible, belonging to the period of the latter Kings of Judah. The cave is supposed to have been excavated and dedicated to Baal, at a much earlier period, but completed or ornamented during a later reign. A conjectural restoration of their inscriptions, is promised by M. Ganneau, who expresses the hope that these records will prove to be of no secondary importance, being the oldest possible Hebrew inscription in existence.

" " " A final and fatal error in French policy would be a mad determination to once more force the Papal sway upon Italy, to unmake Rome, and drive Victor Emanuel back to his capital. Thiers would be glad to do this, and the more unreasoning members of the Assembly would follow in his wake. It seems incredible, but it is nevertheless true. A correspodent of the London Times writing lately on this subject says:

"I have been much struck, during the last month in Italy, with the good appearance of those Italian troops that have come under my notice, and I believe the French would make a dangerous mistake if they thought that a war with this country would be as surely productive of glory to them as the war of 1870-1 was of laurels to the Germans."

Evidently; but it is hard to make Frenchmen believe this France is undoubtedly a Catholic country, although its chief centres are by no means in favor of Catholicism, and Frenchmen are doubly enraged because Prussia seems to have undertaken a campaign diretcly against the interests of the Church, and to thoroughly support Italy. Thiers is only in favor of a re-establishment of the Temporal Power at Rome, because he fears that the reaction begun in Italy my extend into France, and overturn him and his. Why does he not send an ambassador to the Court of Victor Emanuel? It is a question which is continually asked in Europe, and to which no satisfactory answer has yet been given.

" " " Europe continues to laugh, eat and sleep precisely as if the volcano under it was not ready to break forth. Eruptions have been so often hinted at that that no one believes one can possibly occur. The Orleans Princes, while they struggle for power, give entertainments in a manner which would make the economical Louis Philippe cry: "Hold, enough!" Wherever the Comte de Chambord goes he scatters money and spreads banquets in the most profuse manner; and the Comte Paris and all the other discounted Bourbons are doing the amiable to a distressing degree. In Vienna there has latterly been a gastronomic sensation created by a Turkish magnate named Kalipacha, whose little suppers have electrified every one. The gay and festive Turk gave a dinner only the other day which cost 200,000 francs and when the servants picked the eyes out of the birds and laid them before the ladies they were found to be emeralds. The Hungarian beauties vowed Kalipacha the most charming of mortals and he has repented of his intention to leave Vienna; he will not go to Paris. Hard by the rushing Danube he will stay and give grand festivals until his duties call him back to Constantinople. Perhaps he takes some heed of the warnings that are circulated against visiting Paris. There everything grows dearer. Glove, tobacco, coffee, beer, all are double their old price. Mere living retains its accustomed cheapness. It is only the Americans who frequent the palatial hotels in the English quarter who find that they cannot live as cheaply as in New York. But all luxuries have gone skyward in prices.

Religious Items.

" " " Theodore Parker wanted lecturers to be more generous of thoughts and more stingy of words.—And why not preachers too.

" " " It was Father Taylor who said—"Many ministers of the gospel are like camels bearing precious spices and browsing on bitter herbs."

" " " The Brooklyn Methodist preachers mean to introduce the question of longer terms of ministerial settlement before the next General Conference.

" " " According to Dr. Mullens, Secretary of the London Missionary Society, since the commencement of this century, the gospel has swept heathenism entirely away in more than 300 islands of Polynesia. The missionaries have gathered 400,000 people under Christian influences, of whom a quarter of a million are living still, and 50,000 of these are communicants.

" " " Archbishop Purcell is exultant over the Romanist mission to the Freedmen. "We hail with gladness and hope the star from the East which promises to guide the colored people of the United States to the knowledge and laws of the Savior. It rises and illumines the West." While Romanism is making preparations to sweep the Freedmen into its fold, the Adventists have withdrawn their missions from among them, the more shame to us.

" " " Some noble minds at the South have the true interests of the Freedmen at heart. The Religious Herald, published in Richmond, Va., says: "It is time we were beginning to wake up to the drift of events, and to make ourselves felt in shaping the destiny of a class of our population which must so largely enter into the elements of all calculations for the future of our section and of our country. The freedmen must be educated, enlightened, Christianized. Our interest, as well as patriotism and religion, demands it. And we of the South must do it. They are at our doors, we understand their characters and know their necessities; hence we have a responsibility in this matter, peculiarly our own. We cannot shun it if we would, nor should we, if we could."

" " " The Catholic Journal, the Philadelphia organ of the Roman Catholic bishops, having republished an article purporting to set forth the prediction made by a notable person in religion several years ago to the effect that about this time there would come, together with wars and pestilence, an awful calamity of three days of total darkness, during which many persons would perish. Bp. Wood issued a circular rejecting the publication as having been made without his sanc[illegible] the prophecy itself, the [illegible] the faithful to calm their [illegible] after examining the life [illegible] whom the prediction is ascrib[illegible] the church has declared veneration, nothing has been found to authenticate such a prophecy as has been associated with her name. He also reminds the faithful that they are required to believe that which is promulgated by the church only, and that by obeying her precepts and avoiding sin, they may be prepared to receive whatever judgments God in his wisdom might impose.

The Christian Life

A Short Drama.

Act 1st. Scene,—Palestine.

Time, 32, A. D.—See that crowd hastening after Christ. They shout his praise so loudly that men come running across the fields, and leaping over the fences and ditches to see what's the matter. He's on his road from Jericho to Jerusalem. Who's that off there by the side of the road crying "Jesus have mercy on me?" It's poor blind Bartimeas, a miserable old beggar. Surely, if any one needs a Savior, here's the man. Be patient my good fellow. He does not seem to hear you, but there are many who do. They are pressing all about him—surely they will tell him you are calling.

Did they tell him, "Ho'd your tongue?"

They rebuked him.

Act 2d.—Anywhere.

Time, 1872, A. D.—The world is full of blind Bartimeas. A much larger crowd press around Christ than 1800 years ago—all are shouting "Hallelujah to Jesus—" Why don't the Lord open the eyes of these blind men? Because there are so many going before Christ, and behind Christ, under the guise of piety, who are saying to those ready to cry for mercy "Be still," "Be still."

Not in words; but with a voice of thunder in their lives.

When a professor of this religion which teaches that in honor we shall prefer one another, practices sharp dealing upon his neighbor, he is saying to these Bartimeases, "Be still." "Be still."

When a professor of religion who has started to follow a humble Savior, is proud and haughty, he is saying to Bartimeas, "Be still." "Be still."

Oh! We might weep scalding tears of shame, when we say it, and yet it is true, that inconsistent Christians are the factories where infidels are made. Lord Byron said, "I date my first impressions against religion from having witnessed how little its votaries were actuated by true Christian charity." Awake, Awake, then ye slumbering ones who are dreaming of rest in this world, when you have taken your passport for heaven, strap good words and good deeds together. Tongue praise is well enough, but don't forget feet and hands.—G. T. Dowling.

Joy in Christian Life.

There is no danger in these days, of too much self-denial and to much work for Christians; yet the Christian should not think that this life is to be all work and care. Saith our Lord, "These things have I spoken unto you that your joy may be full;" and in self-denying labors and suffering, the Apostle writes of "joy that is unspeakable and full of glory"—of joy in believing, joy in the Holy Ghost, abundance of joy—the joy wherewith we joy before God through our Lord Jesus Christ." It would be well frequently to take these expressions into the closet and to bathe our very souls in their meaning. It would give a life of enjoyment even to what we call self-denials, and heavenly sunbeams would shine into our care-worn hearts. The Holy Spirit can pour a flood of sacred joy into the soul. —M. in Christian Observer.

IN all the Scriptures a premium is set on frank openness. Deceit, treachery, and all the practices that grow out of a want of candor, are in open conflict with the Word of God. When Christ was on earth he did nothing in secret. His life was open. He was infinitely above any trickery or fraud, and in no case acted as a deceiver. Some men seem born to artifice. It is their nature to do things by manipulation, and by practicing a kind of every-day legerdemain, they seem to glory in their wizardly achievements. It is all wrong. Good ends are always more easily secured by straightforwardness and honesty than by any kind of tergiversation or other management. He who lives amid coils, and nets, and traps, will get caught in them some day, while he who scorns to use them will be able to trample all those of his enemies under his feet.—United Presbyterian.

"A parson," writes George Herbert, "is the deputy of Christ for reducing man to the obedience of God." He further quaintly adds: "His apparel is plain but reverend, and clean without spots or dust; the purity of his mind breaking out and dilating itself, even to his body, clothes, and habitation." This remark of Herbert probably originated the saying, that "cleanliness is next to godliness," which has been ascribed to John Wesley.

Correspondence.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

AUBURN, ILL.

FRIDAY, March 15. I visited the public school, of which Br. Gardner is the principal. I was interested with the examination of the classes, and the order and discipline of the school. The citizens of this young town have done nobly for the cause of education.

I spoke in the evening from the fourth and fifth chapters of the first of Thessalonians, bringing out the doctrine of the personal coming of Christ, and showing that the true people of God would not be in darkness, that that day should overtake them as a thief. They, or "Ye are all the children of the light, and of the day." The signs and "times and seasons" show that the advent is now nigh at hand.

Sr. Prescott and others followed me in stirring and touching remarks. The meeting was full of life and power.

SATURDAY, March 16. Visited, with Sr. Prescott, the sick and others on the prairie, about four miles from town. There is quite a church here, but they mostly attend at Auburn. They maintain a weekly prayer-meeting, and live. We dined with Brn. Landon and Workman, brethren who are true and faithful. We had very interesting seasons of conversation and prayer. Returned at 2 p. m. and attended prayer meeting at the chapel. Profitable time. At night spoke from Is. 61: 1–3, on Christ, the anointed One, who came to bless the world with peace and righteousness. But how few accept it. Most live in sin and misery, when they might be holy and happy.

Another week is gone, and will carry its report to the judgment. Can we meet it in peace? God be gracious to us, and grant us mercy in that day.

SABBATH, March 17. We have a beautiful spring morning. The robins and larks are singing, and all creation smiles under a clear sky and genial sunshine. But best of all is, God smiles and blesses, and gives peace.

I spoke this a. m. on the subject of peace, from Is. 26: 3. The "mind stayed on God," with entire consecration, gives peace, perfect peace. The mind, or imagination stayed on God, gives purity to the thoughts of the heart and actions of the life. The whole secret of right living consists in fixing the affections upon God, the fountain of all purity and love. Peace follows as a necessary fruit. This is true sanctification.

I attended the Bible Class, and addressed the Sabbath-school, of which Br. Parks is the Superintendent. They have a live school. More of our people should take an interest in this institution in every place. We can hardly do too much for the instruction of our children in the way of the Lord.

At seven p. m. I spoke on the signs of the near coming of Christ, showing that nearly every sign has been fulfilled; and that when the Turkish power shall fall, or "come to its end and none to help it" (Dan. 11: 45), then Michael will stand up, and the sleeping ones will come forth to everlasting life. (Dan. 12: 1–3.) And so we wait and watch.

MONDAY, March 18. Spent a part of the day among the people in conversation on religious questions, and find the truth is doing its work.

When I survey this field, and see what has been done in the last three years, I can but exclaim, "What hath God wrought!" Three years ago there was hardly an Adventist in this region. Now we have a large church here, with a fine chapel, and believers are rising up in all the region. Doors are open for the truth in every direction, and the cry is, "Come and help us!" This shows what man can do by faithfully and fearlessly publishing the truth, as Br. Calkins has done. He has had but little help, yet, by the help of God, the work has triumphed gloriously. Opposition has almost ceased in this region, leaving the gospel of the kingdom to triumph and finish its work.

I spoke at night on not being "weary in well doing." (Gal. 6: 6–8.) Many arose at the close, and resolved to renew their covenant to serve God with their whole hearts. Request was made to continue the meetings. Duty seems to call me in two directions, but the strongest call is to remain here for a time.

To-day a friend handed me the life of Father Taylor, the sailor preacher, for forty years in Boston, Mass. I was acquainted with him over forty-five years, as a Methodist preacher. Having been a sailor in his early years, he devoted the most of his life to labor for the sailors. I kept up our acquaintance in Boston for over thirty-five years. He was liberal, associating with all Christians, as he had opportunity. When Father Miller gave his lectures on the Second Advent, in my chapel on Chardon St., in 1839, Father Taylor attended, and was interested in those able, prophetical discourses. But he was a Methodist, and did not modify his views.

The last time I saw him was in Boston, about a year before his death; he gave me a hearty greeting. His wings were spread for glory. But he complained of the worldly conformity of Methodist churches, and longed for the good old-fashioned Methodism.

He was a father to the sailors of every nation, and in his life did a vast amount of good to this class of men. He sleeps in Jesus, and will come forth in the resurrection of the just, at the sound of the last trump.

I find, in looking over his Memoir, that he is not dead. Mr. Noyes, his successor, said at his funeral: "Nor has he died. He has only retired to await the final overthrow of the enemy." And yet he says: "We shall again see his real form, when death is destroyed, and with him and his sailor boys enter the gates of the celestial city." So we have a mixture of truth and error. What nonsense immaterialists make of the state of the dead. Again (p. 432), Mr. Dudley, of Milwaukee, Wis., and an old friend of Father Taylor, writes that "he has anchored at last in sunny seas, and wears the crown, inside the vail." And then adds, that he is "preaching in glory!"

Such are the fanciful notions of some respecting the dead. God teaches us that the "dead know not anything." And the only hope is in the resurrection.

TUESDAY, March 19. With Eld. Calkins I visited Springfield. We have a few Advent families here, a remnant of the church gathered a quarter of a century ago by Father Chapman and others. It is thought that a church could be raised up with proper efforts at this time. Doors are open also in all the region. We need workers, successful workers, that will preach at least once a day. Men in health can do this. And when there is so much to be done, there is no excuse for a man to lie at ease half or two-thirds of his time. Work is the order of the day, especially with Advent ministers. Oh, for more workers!!

WEDNESDAY, March 20. Rode out on the prairie to visit the sick, with others, to cheer them on their pilgrimage. We found intelligent families of New England origin, who much appreciated our calls. The themes of conversation were calculated to help in the way of the divine life. Returning, I spoke to the people from Num. 14: 24. "My servant Caleb had another spirit, and followed me fully." The ten evil spies followed God only in part, and so brought disaster upon themselves and the church; but Caleb followed the Lord fully. He had another spirit, the spirit of faith and obedience. He said to the church—"We are well able to go up and possess the land"—and let us go up at once! This was both truthful and healthful. This is the spirit that we all need in this time. And we can all have it by living with God.

THURSDAY, March 21. Took a horseback ride a few miles into the country, and dined with Br. Hutton. He was one of the old Baptist members here, but received the truth three years ago, and is one of the pillars of the Advent church.

After visiting and talking for several hours, I feel the need of rest. I want to get away from society, and turn my thoughts to God, and dismiss all care, and get an hour of refreshing sleep. After that I feel as fresh for work as in the morning. A late writer says: "Every person who would live well should get so thoroughly rested once every twenty-four hours as to feel bright, fresh, active, and strong. Many do not do this, but go on feeling tired, over-worked, ill at ease, sick, never at rest from morning till night. No course could be worse. If a man wishes to last a reasonable number of years on this globe, and live in peace and comfort, he should get rested every day of his life. Many resort to stimulants, when they had better go to bed and sleep. Sleep does not always come easily. The brain sometimes loses the power to stop thinking when the proper hour arrives for sleep, but keeps on, like the heart, aching involuntarily. How can such people get sleep is one of the most important questions they can consider. Shall they resort to chloral hydrate, morphine, tobacco, or as some do, ale, beer, or other alcoholic drinks?" I answer, never. Keep the body clean, live plain, and be much in communion with God, the great fountain of life and health. Have faith in God. He often heals, and saves and gives vigor to the body and mind. Have faith in God. Wilt thou be made whole? I believe half the sadness and sickness in the world could be entirely thrown off by a little faith and courage, with a proper mode of living. It is of no use to give way to every little (or even great) cloud of depression that comes over our sky. The more one gives way, the more it will be. Throw it off. Lift up your heart to God. Tell him you want help, and you must have it, and it will come. You will be surprised to feel the change, and in looking back, be ashamed of your want of courage, and almost apply the words of the Savior to yourself—"O ye of little faith!"

At night I spoke of complete redemption. (Is. 44: 21, 22.) "I have blotted out thy sins." The sins of the past all "blotted out." I have, says God, blotted them out. And so we have a present salvation.

Some think that we need a second work after this. I was reading to-day Mrs. Palmer's account of her late labors among the backslidden professors in the Methodist church in Northern New York. She calls it the blessing of holiness. But what is it? I reply, it is simply returning to God with the whole heart, with the fixed purpose to love him with all the heart. With such a consecration, with somewhat of mature experience, there can but be a state of enlargement and blessedness of soul. It is the right, yea, the duty of all the disciples of Christ to seek, obtain and enjoy this fulness.

FRIDAY, March 22. We have had quite a snow storm, and having an engagement to visit Br. Bremer, a Prussian brother, out on the prairie, Br. Calkins harnessed up his Texan ponies to his sled, and a little party of us had a pleasant ride as well as visit.

SATURDAY, March 23. Visited Br. Henry, of the Congregational church. He was formerly of Littleton, N. H. He has become much interested in the Advent faith, and is inquiring after the whole truth. He has been greatly prospered in temporal things. With but a few dollars some sixteen years ago, he now has a rich farm of over 400 acres. He was deeply interested in the visit of my son William, last year, with whom he had much conversation on the Advent, and kindred doctrine.

At night he took me to the school-house, some three miles, where I spoke on the first and second advent. The house was filled with intelligent farmers, mostly thinking men, who came in on a notice of only a few hours. This is one of Br. Calkins' fields of labor, where he has a strong interest. The church will no doubt build a chapel in good time. This is a rich farming country, and our friends are prospering in worldly things, some of which they devote for the furtherance of the cause of Christ.

SABBATH, March 24. I closed my labors here at night, having spent three weeks with this dear people. My visit with Br. Calkins and his people has been a very interesting one. I did not think to remain as long, and felt that I ought to return home to help in the work of removal to Chicago. But the church here were unwilling to give me up. I trust that all will work for good, and for the best good of the whole cause in which we are all interested. Br. C. and his people have been real friends to the Western Publishing interest from the first, and have given liberally. In helping them at this time, I have only tried to reciprocate their generous acts and feelings. The Lord bless and prosper them.

From C. H. Tuesley, Minn.

Br. Himes: No doubt you may be a little surprised to receive a letter from an entire stranger, but my heart is too full to keep silent any longer. I was born and brought up in Maine. My father and mother were of the orthodox belief, and I was so instructed. But as I grew older and my mind expanded I had many doubts upon the subject of the immortality of man, etc. At the age of seventeen I was (I humbly trust) converted, and from that moment I yearned for the truth; but I could find no one that could give me any information to my satisfaction.

In 1869 I came west and settled in a little Minnesota town called Pine Bend. It was there I first heard of your son Edwin, and from what I heard of him I supposed he was a 'devil incarnate,' for they said the doctrine he preached was 'of the devil.' I am not one of these men that judge a man before they see or hear him; accordingly, the first chance I had I went to hear him in West St. Paul, about six miles from where I lived. Judge of my surprise to find a man preaching the doctrine I had so long believed. I asked what they called these people, and they told me they were called Second Adventists. I said to myself, "Well, I will live and die a Second Adventist," and from that day until now, I have been trying to spread the good tidings. God has not endowed me with much talent, but by his grace helping me, I will improve upon the one I have, until the Master shall come, that I may hear the welcome applaudit, "Well done good and faithful servant!" I am now connected with the Methodist church, and of course cannot say so much as I would like. But I have one consolation, that I can read your books and papers kindly loaned me by a Congregationalist minister. They have done me good. I intend as soon as I can to send for some of your works. I am poor in this world's goods, but wealthy in the promise of a rich heritage at the coming of my blessed Lord.

From P. W. Hough, Mendora, Wis.

To all whom it may concern, Christian salvation and greeting:

It seemeth meet and proper at this time for me to ask my brethren and sisters of like precious faith to suffer me, who also am your brother in tribulation and in the patient waiting for Christ, to advise you (not dictate), to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. Speak the truth in love, in love always; because this is the bond of perfecting, and bond of peace. "By this (says Jesus) shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another." Here is our strength to do good. In vain do we tell the world that we belong to the Methodist, Baptist, or to come arer home, the "Evangelical," or ;e-to-Come, or Seventh-day, or other lievers in the speedy coming of our rd Jesus Christ; if we are not filled th this divine element we can do no od.

This is the charm of the gospel. 'his is the secret power of truth that lts the sinner's heart without put- g him in the fire of excitement. is is the power that bends him the ht way willingly, without breaking m; and also this is the secret though ong power that holds the church to ther. If this be so, how much ed have we as a people to be imbued th this heavenly element, that we y be made lively stones in the house God.

But what I want to say at this time is ncerning the danger we are in, of diling asunder upon some points of ctrine about which we disagree. wo I will specify. The time quesn, and the name "Christian." I am t and out a believer in time revealed d time to be known by the church fore the Savior comes, for I cannot e or understand what good the proetic time can be to us unless we unrstand it before it is fulfilled. Nay, ore; I cannot see how the Scriptures n be fulfilled unless we do understand prior to its end. As we have seen e vision tarry and the Bridegroom so, and we have been tried, and the cked are doing wickedly, we have e greatest encouragement to expect at our patient study of the prophetic ne will be crowned with success: (It is is not saying too much, for some ink it is understood now.) But as I ve heard that some of the brethren ho are in harmony with my own ews design to start a paper devoted this question I hope they will suffer e to offer a few reasons why I think is not best.

(1) Because THE TIMES and Crisis e not against a free use of their colnns for the discussion of the time estion. It would seem to be an unise arrangement to start another paer for this special object.

(2) It would give rise to an unalthly suspicion that those papers ere sectarian or rather exclusive. It ould have a tendency to promote an healthy interest on that question to e neglect of others equally as needl for the household of faith.

(4) It would weaken our influence do good and thus defeat the object e would have in starting it. Let me erefore exhort you to accept at least, y good intentions to you and all the ousehold of faith.

rom L. D. F. Armstrong.

God's people are not exempt from flictions and losses here in this mortal ate. But it is blessed to know that hough in this world the believer is ubject to tribulation, yet in Christ we ave peace. Yes we have peace with od through our Lord Jesus Christ, nd joy inexhaustible, often-times, in he very furnace of affliction and perecution. But this only as we are by he grace of God enabled by faith to ok at them, not in the light of the een and temporal, but in the light of he unseen and eternal.

Truly this is not our rest, therefore e will not be over anxious to build ouses, and plant vineyards, and lay r plans for the accumulation of earth's reasures, which are only for a moment nd which speedily take to themselves ings and fly away. How has this een realized in the experience of many uring the past few months. Surely e have reason to say that earthly opes and earthly prospects are terribly ncertain. Yet the multitude seem all ngrossed with them, while but comaratively few are heeding the admoniion and instruction of the great Teachr whose lips ever dropped heavenly visdom, and who spake as never man pake. He said, "Seek first the kingom of God and his righteousness," nd "Lay up for yourselves treasures heaven, where moth and ust do not corrupt and where thieves annot break through nor steal." What a blessed hope is ours, like an nchor to the soul, sure and steadfast, ntering into that within the vail. A vely or living hope begotten in us by he resurrection of Jesus Christ from he dead, to an inheritance incorruptile, undefiled, and which fadeth not way; reserved in heaven, and ready o be revealed when Jesus comes the econd time without sin unto salvation o those who look for and love his apearing.

Kindness and Love.

  Kind thoughts are the roots,
Kind words are the blossoms,
  Kind deeds are the fruits;
Love is the sweet sunshine

New Advent Chapel in Vallejo, Cal.

Ten months ago an itinerant Elder of the Second Advent faith came to Vallejo where he had been invited by a few others of the same faith, to give a series of sermons. This person was Elder D. D. Reed, and he at once commenced preaching the gospel of that faith in this city and, as the Scriptures say, the seed has fallen in good ground and brought forth sixty and one hundred fold. In June the society commenced with a membership of ten persons, which has increased by constant additions until they now form a happy band of thirty-eight members. Then they met in a saloon building, better known as "George's place" which they converted into a meeting house, changing the bar into a pulpit and the vacancy into sittings. Now they worship in a temple equal in dimensions to any church in the city, with one exception, built with their own hands, and unencumbered by a dollar of debt. Their church is situated on Capitol and El Dorado streets, and our steps were directed thither on sabbath morning last, to attend the dedicatory services. On arriving there, we indeed found it a monument of neatness and taste, and sweet swelling anthems of praise resounding throughout its interior—the dedication hymn:

> "The perfect work by Adam trod, > was first the temple built by God,
> His faith laid the corner stone,
> He spake and lo! the work was done."

A few months after the establishment of the Church, O. R. Fasset became its acknowledged pastor, and we found this minister, assisted by Elder Reed, in the pulpit officiating in the ceremonies. He selected for his text on the occasion, Gen. 26, verse 22:

"For the Lord hath made room for us, and we shall be fruitful in the land."

He then delivered a very interesting sermon in which he did not forget to speak of the munificence of a benevolent citizen who had generously given them a building lot worth $500, and then the earnest and willing hands that had built it in so short a time were not forgotten. They have all been gifts to you—now let us buckle on our armor for the accomplishment of good. He cautioned his members against ever allowing it to fall in the hands of the speculators or bart r it for a saloon or a theatre. Such things as festivals, necktie parties, concerts, &c., are not meet, let us have free will offerings, and if we can not succeed with them, then let us lock the door of the church. At the close of the sermon, he announced there would be four persons baptized in the faith and two ministers ordained on Thursday night. A collection was taken up and the snug little sum of $621 00 was raised. This is for the completion of the church and the spirit of the Lord shall by and by speak out from the walls of beauty.—Vallejo Recorder, March 26.

The Russian Tradition.

Every faithful Muscovite believes that some day the Russian flag will float over the walls of the capital of the Moslem; that driving the Turks across the Bosphorus into Asia, and rooting out the Crescent from Europe, are the traditional tasks the Czar has to accomplish. And this belief is not confined to a particular class. The eyes of every Russian are turned toward the minnarets of Constantinople with the conviction that the "holy banner of Russia" is fated to wave triumphantly from them. This belief has all along been encourarged by the successive Russian governments, each succeeding Czar keeping in mind that he may be the one to bring to fruition the long-cherished idea of his race. Had not the jealousy of Russia caused the other European powers to interfere, the Emperor Nicholas would have carried his army into Constantinople forty years ago, and raised the standard of the cross that fell in 1453, at the gate of St. Romanus, when the last of the Pateoloff died in unsuccessfully defending it against the conquering Turk. Constantine, the name of the first Christian monarch of ancient Stamboul, and in honor of whom Constantinople received its present name—has been borne for several generations by the second son of the reigning monarch of Russia. The name is not of Asiatic or Russian origin, and it having become the traditional cognomen of the second male born to the Czar, would suggest the idea that it is continued for some other than mere personal reasons. The orthodox belief that, as Constantine established the Christian religion at Stamboul, its reestablishment will be by one bearing the same name and who will represent the Russian authority in Constantinople, when that of the Moslem is expelled. The territory of the Sultan in Europe, with the addition of Wallachia and Moldavia, would be a very handsome patrimony for a junior branch of the House of Romanoff. But although the power of the Turks has been considerably shorn since the siege of Vienna, when complete victory was prevented only by the timely arrival of Sobieski and his legions, they are not a prostrated people. Indeed, the "sick man" is displaying considerable vitality, and the chances of an easy conquest of Turkey do not appear so good as previous to the death of Nicholas.

New York.

QUARTERLY MEETING.

Met in Lockport, Thursday eve., March 14, and continued in session three days. The first half hour was spent in prayer for the special blessing of God upon the meeting, after which Br. A. C. Nowell gave the address.

Saturday, the Business Committee reported the following items:

1. The matter of reimbursing Br. C. M. Booth for his services with the State tent the past season. $30 were voted him.

2. The matter of publishing a small Conference Mannual. The following Joint Resolution advising this passed last session, was re adopted, and the Secretary instructed to call the special attention of the churches without delay to this matter. It speaks for itself. Read and act.

RESOLVED, (1) That the Secretary be requested to collect and arrange for publication the statistics of this Conference, and present the same in the form of a neat Handbook, containing also our Constitution and By-laws, at our next Annual Meeting.

(2) That, in order to assist the Secretary in carrying out the foregoing resolution, each church co-operating with us be requested to forward to him immediately the name of its minister (or ministers,) the number of its members, its services—how, when and where held—and such other information as may be of interest, or necessary to carry into practical effect the tabulation of our conference statistics.

(3) The matter of a Campmeeting: Shall one be held? If so, where? Shall it not be in connection with the Annual Meeting in June? After discussing these points, it was decided not to hold one in connection with the Conference, nor so early as June. But the Campmeeting committee were instructed to confer with the Hoosick Valley and So. New York and No. Pennsylvania A. C. It was also proposed to buy and put into the field another tent; but the resolution was tabled and individual action suggested. (If several brethren or sisters of means, and desiring to send news of the Coming Kingdom into the hundreds of places in this State that have not yet heard this glorious message, would unite in ordering their tents they might be purchased at [illegible] discount. Any desiring in this way to [illegible] of the Lord's money, if they will correspond with the Secretary he will furnish them with [illegible] and practical suggestions.

R. C. BROWN, Treas.

The Ordination Committee asked instructions and for more time. Granted.

Br. Hobbs, in behalf of the church at Springwater invited the Annual Meeting to be held with them. The invitation was accepted, and Br. D. Cogswell appointed to deliver the address—Br. J. H. Whitmore alternate.

An afternoon session was more especially for considering the final report of the Ordination Committee. It was generally understood that the church at Lockport, over which Sr. S. M. Stoddard has now the pastorate, were asking her ordination, and the report was awaited with interest; the committee of last session having been a unit against it. The chairman of the committee submitted a careful, verbal report, in which they had united, evidently considering it sufficiently compromising to meet the case and pass easily. It was also further evident that the committee was laboring cautiously between a warm, personal sympathy with Sr. Stoddard as an efficient and untiring laborer in "word and doctrine," and a worthy and beloved sister in the Lord, and the fear of establishing a dangerous precedent in the ordination of women not expressly (if at all) approved in Scripture or authorized by any example of Christ or the Apostles. A free and kind discussion followed, which resulted in tabling the report until another meeting. In the interim, by informal but unanimous agreement, Br. J. H. Whitmore and Sr. E. S. Jennings were requested to prepare essays which shall aim to bring out the exact Scriptural features of this whole question, and thus enable this conference to take a decided, and if possible, a right position, and then maintain it.

The W. A. C. P. Association presented the conference, by the hand of Br. Whitmore, two books of blank license and ordination certificates. They were accepted and the compliments of the body returned in a hearty vote of thanks.

The business session then adjourned sine die.

Besides a collection, and private donations given to "Mother Ongly" (amount unknown to the Secretary) a collection of $37.75 was taken for our preachers, which, augmented by individual sums—the payment of which was prescribed by the donors—amounted to $63.03; and was apportioned according to their various necessities in the judgment of the Devotional Committee, as follows: two received $2 each; three $3 each; three $4 each; three $5 each; one $7; one $10.56; and one $25.45. Thus, the total amount raised at this conference, it will be seen, is not less than $150.00; a noble offering, not for the State, but for those who came or were represented there. May it not be hoped that our cold, inactive and indifferent brethren and sisters who have too little interest to attend conference themselves, or send a delegate or collection, will thereby be "provoked unto love and good works."

The meeting was one of great interest. It was good to be there, as all could testify; and some said it was the best conference they ever attended. There were eight sermons, five prayer and social, and three business meetings. The social meeting Sunday evening began at six o'clock and continued uninterruptedly and spiritedly till nearly or quite eight o'clock, and then some desired the sermon to be dispensed with, and the meeting continue. After the sermon Sunday afternoon 130 united in celebrating the Lord's Supper, and many of them felt that but few more such seasons would pass before the great Master of the marriage feast shall "gird himself and come forth and serve them." At the depot Monday morning we parted regretfully, but hopefully, with the customary song—"Sweet by and by."

WESTERN DISTRICT, Q. M.

This meeting commenced at Brunswick, Eau Claire Co., Feb. 1, and continued until the evening of the 4th. From its commencement it was very profitable and seemed to increase in interest and spirituality to its close. It was attended mostly by brethren and sisters of like precious faith. But few of other class of mind attended. The great body of the people in that region is of the know-nothing and do nothing order, prophetically and doctrinally blind and willing to remain so. Notwithstanding all this the congregation was full, some coming twenty-five miles through the cold, and rejoicing that they had made the sacrifice. Some who had been on the back ground took fresh courage. Sinners showed by moistened eye the deep feeling of their heart. One promised to serve the Lord. Some who had recently been led to see the truth (by the labors of Br. Turner), from near Mendora, attended and were greatly encouraged. Our last meeting seemed to move all hearts with the mingled feelings of sorrow and joy. Our sitting together in Christ had been sweet (yet 'sweet' is a poor name for it), and the parting hour had come. And while we all joined in singing the sweet farewell—"To meet you in glory, I give you my hand, our Savior to praise in a pure social band," our sorrows were melted into joy at the precious prospect of soon meeting again in the land of Israel, purified and lifted up.

This church have been steadfast in the gospel from the first, sustaining two meetings each week, and always helping after a gladly manner those that had need. It was a pleasure to break the bread of life to them.

Br. Turner was with me during the meeting. He has been laboring in the vicinity of Mendora to good acceptance.

Our fast connected with this meeting, I will mention for the benefit of others. A sister, who lives near by the place of meeting, [illegible] was opposed to her being associated with us, and did all he could to turn her from the truth by forbidding her meeting with us; taking her down to Mindora to an orthodox donation party, where "no-soulites" formed the target at which they discharged their pop guns, loaded with cotton wool, wet in nitric acid, on his return home remarked to her that she saw she could never be anything respectable as long as she held that doctrine. But this did not move her from the hope of the gospel. So when the Q. M. began he would not let her attend. Her comfort was in Jesus, and in weeping and praying for him. But the last evening God moved his mind to let her come, and she was filled with joy to overflowing. Sisters, you that have good husbands, be thankful for them, and pray for those that have not.

P. W. HOUGH.

HUTCHINSON DISTRICT, Q. M.

The last Q. M. was held at Silver Lake, McLeod Co., commencing Friday, Feb. 23. The last in the series of quarterlies, it must be set down as one of the best. The Lord was present, in the word preached, and in the hearts of all present who were lovers of the Lord. There seemed to be a fixed purpose in all that were present, to so live that they might be ready for the coming of the Lord at any time, believing it to be an event at hand, and not afar off. Preachers present were, Raymond, Parsons, Wood and Miller. All took a part in presenting truths from the Bible bearing more or less upon the time in which we live, which were well received, and we trust made good impressions upon all who heard. The closing series were solemn and interesting. About fifty partook of the Lord's Supper. We trust our brethren will make these quarterly meetings a speciality, and endeavor to see that every church and neighborhood is represented in the several districts throughout the State. By so doing we learn what is being done in other parts; our work will be more harmonious, and we shall be more likely to build up ourselves upon the most holy faith, and to keep ourselves in the love of God, than otherwise.

G. W. MILLER, Evangelist.

OTTAWA, Q. M.

Our Q. M. at this place was well attended, and closed with the best of feelings on the part of all who were in attendance. We found that the difficulties with brethren Scott, Bacon, and Parsons had been misunderstood, and the matter was settled up to the satisfaction of all present. The papers as ordered by the Annual Conference were delivered, with the understanding that each has the right to private opinion, while we would strive to work together for the glory of the Master, and the spreading of the knowledge of the coming One.

Brn. Scott and Wood had been holding a series of meetings before the Conference, in which several were converted, and others reclaimed. Eight were baptised on the last day of the Conference. In the evening forty-five came around the table to celebrate the Lord's Supper, which was a solemn and yet interesting season. We felt that it was good to be there.

G. W. MILLER.

Iowa.

MANCHESTER, Q. M.

Met with the Elk Valley church, Elkport. A goodly number of ministers and brethren present. Visiting brethren invited to participate in our deliberations. By the request of the Spring Branch church, Sr. H. A. Plank was granted a letter of recommendation as a laborer in the gospel. The meeting was a decided success. One precious soul was buried by baptism, and three added to the church. Saturday two confessed Christ, and Sabbath eve. three rose for prayer. Forty came to the Lord's table. God poured out of his Holy Spirit and we all felt that it was indeed good to be there.

Br. and Sr. Seymour, from Michigan, were with us, and added greatly to the interest of the meeting. Their visit there will long be remembered with pleasure and profit. Br. Dutton also aided in preaching the word. May God always bless the faithful labors of his servants.

Adjourned to the Odell S. H. three miles N. E. of Greeley, time to be specified hereafter. Meanwhile let every lover of Jesus prepare to go and labor for God. This is a new field: but the harvest is all ripe.

A vote of thanks was tendered to the brethren and friends of this vicinity for their kindness and liberality during this meeting.

Iowa and Missouri.

The Q. M. of S. W. Iowa and N. W. Missouri met with The Empire chuch, March 1st. The bounds of the quarterly conference being so large and the roads in some places nearly impassible, many were prevented from attending.

E. A. Marsh was elected Secretary pro tem. Visiting brethren were invited to take a seat. E. A. Marsh was admitted to membership. The Greenland church was represented by Brn. Nicholson and Arnold, and reported in a prosperous condition. Since its organization, April 1871, it has increased from a membership of six to twenty-one, with a prospect of many more additions. It has lately received an increase of six members under the labors of Brn. A. F. Dugger and E. A. Marsh.

A motion was made and carried to petition the next Annual Conference to divide it so as to make it possible for members to attend. As the bounds of the conference are now too large.

A motion was made by the delegates of the Greenland church that Br. E. A. Marsh be ordained. Owing to circumstances it was deemed best to delay it until some future time.

Voted, to meet with the Greenland church at our next Q. M.

C. & N. W. R. R.

The Chicago and Northwestern Railway is now one of the best managed roads leading into the city. Their rolling stock seems to be in an excellent condition, and but few fatal accidents have ever occurred upon this road. Our people when coming into the city will find this an excellent route. Although we are denied the courtesies generally extended to newspapers, yet we would not allow a matter of that kind interfere with our ideas of a well managed road.

Michigan Central Railroad.

The Railroad Gazette says: "This company has prepared entirely new cars for its four great express trains, which will be placed upon the road as soon as the weather becomes a little settled. It is the design of the company to place them on the road as early as the 15th of April.

"The company has contracted for the work of grading for the double track between Detroit and Ypsilanti, and between Niles and Lake Station. The grading is to be completed half the distance within sixty days, and all the heavier parts of the grading to be done by the first day of July. When this work is completed, there will remain but sixty-eight miles of grading to complete the track between this city and Detroit."

Field's Discussion.

For some time this desirable work has been out of print. The main topic is the Intermediate State, or Condition of the Dead. When a new edition was announced, some of the Doctor's old Disciple friends announced that they would buy and circulate it as soon as ready, because they thought it would help their side—that Mr. Connolly had the best of the argument. We shall soon know whether they really so felt, or were indulging mere bragadocio. The book has not yet made any converts to immaterialism that we have heard of; but we have learned of its bringing not a few to adopt the Bible theory.

The book has heretofore been sold at one dollar. The present edition is in paper covers (pp 318), and will be sent post-paid for 80c. We hope for liberal orders.

Book Notices, Etc.

WE are obliged to E. H. Swinney for samples of Swedenborgian tracts. Mr. Swinney is the General Agent of the General Convention. Any who wish to inform themselves of the doctrine of the church of the New Jerusalem can obtain tracts and other documents by addressing him at 20 Cooper Union, New York city.

GOOD TIDINGS.—We have just read this new and valable book, and wish to say we think it worthy the title it bears—"Good Tidings." We would rejoice to know that every Christian in the land had a copy. It cannot fail to benefit every thoughtful Christian who reads it, and will awaken deep inquiry concerning the nature of man, of future punishment, and the closing up of this dispensation. The subject of the atonement is not so clearly and Scripturally stated as is desired, on page 190. The chapters on Dan. 7: and 11, Rev. 7 and 17, are clear, convincing, and of great value to all Bible students; showing that the Lord is coming soon to close up the gospel dispensation.

I. C. WELLCOME.

Obituary.

WEAVER. Fell asleep in Jesus, March 22, 1872, Sr. Melissa Jane, wife of Dr. S. S. Weaver, of Hesperia, Mich.: aged 21 years.

She united with the church about eighteen months ago. She was dearly beloved for her piety and exemplary life. Eld. A. N. Seymour delivered a telling discourse to an audience of more than 800 people, on her funeral occasion, from Rev. 14:13. W.

Notices, Etc.

To the Brethren.

I am engaged in preparing a work, designed especially for the ministry, on the importance and necessity of preaching the second coming of Christ, as an event nigh at hand. My object is, in cooperation with the brethren, to have a copy placed in the hands of every minister of the gospel in the United States. All can see the importance of such an enterprise. If one only out of five hundred could be induced to give the trumpet a certain sound, it would pay for the labor and outlay. Of course, it will not be expected that those for whom the work is designed, will purchase it. This will be the work of our brethren all over the country to see that a copy is placed in the hands of every preacher of the gospel.

I propose then to request pledges and subscriptions from the brethren, in order to secure its publication, the amount subscribed to be repaid in books, if required. The nature of the work may be gleaned from the following outline:

The Christian minister—a watchman; the duties of a watchman; Watchman, what of the night? The time of the end; Signs of the times—Fulfillment of Prophecy: Prophecy in relation to the First Advent: Prophecy in relation to the Second Advent; Signs of the Second Advent, Celestial, Terrestial, Moral, National. The Papacy, Spiritism, Time, Tarrying Time, etc., etc.

I would also state that the work will be useful to all for reference, as it will be largely interspersed with Scripture quotations. Any who may feel disposed to aid in this enterprise, may address Miles Grant or G. T. Adams, Crisis office, Boston, Mass.; J. V. Himes, TIMES office, Chicago, Ill.; or myself at Arena, Wis.

[n*444] GEO. THOMSON.

Advertising alone does not produce success. The thing which is advertised must have intrinsic merit, or else large advertising will eventually do it more harm than good. If you have anything which you know to be good, advertise it thoroughly, and you will be sure to succeed; if it is poor, don't praise it, for people will soon discover you are lying.

Such is the policy of the Burlington Route, which runs to three great regions in the West: 1st, to Omaha, connecting with the great Pacific Roads. 2d, To Lincoln, the capital of Nebraska, and all that beautiful region south of the Platte, filled with R. R. lands and homesteads. 3d, To St. Joseph, Kansas City and all Kansas points.

The roads are splendidly built, have the best bridges, finest cars, the Miller platform and coupler, and the safety air brake (to prevent the loss of life that is everywhere else happening); Pullman's sleepers, Pullman dining cars, large and powerful engines (to make quick time and good connections), and are in a word the best equipped roads in the West. So that if you desire to go safely, surely, quickly and comfortably to any point in Southern Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, or on the Pacific Roads, be sure that you go "By way of Burlington."

All who wish particular information, and a large map, showing correctly the Great West, and all its railroad connections, can obtain them, or any other knowledge, by addressing General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

THE BIBLE BANNER FREE!

We desire to call the attention of the readers of the ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES to our offer in the Bible Banner, to send it to every minister of the gospel of any denomination who will send us his address, or otherwise signify his desire to receive it.

We request the readers of the TIMES to aid us in presenting this offer to such ministers as are devoted men of God, and who would probably accept, and be benefited thereby.

Do not urge any one to accept, for we have not the means, at present, to send very many papers free, but trust the Lord will provide enough to send it where it should go to prepare the way for our weekly papers, and stir up the watchman to sound the alarm to a guilty world. A copy of the Banner from one with whom the minister is acquainted is worth a dozen sent by mail from the office of publication.

THE BANNER AND TIMES.

We will send the Banner six months free to all new subscribers to the TIMES, and to all old subscribers who mention this offer when they remit (to TIMES office) for 1872. We make one condition to this offer, viz, before the close of the six months they must either notify us to discontinue, or remit for the future, as soon as convenient.

We expect to present a large fine engraving in every number of the Banner, hereafter, which will illustrate and add new interest to Bible truth. We have already commenced the series of illustrations. Send ten cents for three sample copies. Address:

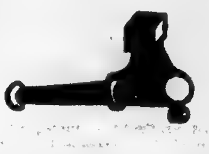
E. H. WHEELER'S
IMPROVED
AXLE & THIMBLE SKEIN



PATENTED JAN. 12, 1872.

THE LIGHTEST, STRONGEST, AND BEST AXLE BEFORE THE PUBLIC.

Less liable to break, and cannot spring under any amount of weight that can be put upon it.

It takes a smaller sized axle and bolster or sand-board than the same sized skeins of common style; is more simple and easier to fit, the skein being of uniform taper, without shoulders upon the inside a better fit is secured. The axle can be turned in a common lathe to fit the thimble, by putting one end out of center.

The arm, or spindle, is so made as to secure the proper set of the wheels, when moderately dished, with the bottom line of the spindle on a parallel line to the bottom of the axle, an important principle never before attained. The set of the wheels is a perpendicular or right angle to the bottom line of the axle upon the face of the spokes, upon their lower half.

This cut shows the thimble and lug for the tension rod across the bottom of the axle, from thimble to thimble, and the socket for the bottom, or the sand-board, as the case may be. I also use a sand guard to keep the dirt out of the shoulder of the hub; but it is not shown in this cut.

RIGHTS FOR SALE.

Sample thimble skeins furnished to purchasers of rights, at actual cost. For further information address

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, April 16, 1872.

What Next?

They tell us the world is getting better; that we are taking higher grounds; that all the world is being converted, and that the gospel of Jesus Christ is being promulgated in every tongue.

Well, this may be the case. We are not far advanced in years, but we have heard the aged sigh for the good old times, when they worshipped God in the leafy temple, and by the vine-bowered shades of nature. Has there been any degeneracy in their day? Else why should they sigh for their first love?

We are led to these reflections by observing the events passing around us. We all learn more or less by observation. How except by hearing others talk do we learn the dialect? How are we to determine our brethren, except by the language they may use? How are we to know darkness from light, except we have that sense which enables us to a discernment of the same? How do we know to discriminate between the good and the evil, except by the ruling of God's revealed will? We are expected to bring forth certain fruits, and if we bring forth fruit, will not that fruit be of a nature like unto the parent stock?

But I did not set out to sermonize, but rather to relate an incident that recently came under my own observation.

A Sunday school had need of funds with which to meet all the necessary expenses incident to such organizations. It seems a settled fact that people had rather get some immediate return for the outlay, even if not the worth of the expenditure, than to make a free offering to support other than that in which they are financially interested. The great rage of the American public to-day is—the stage. The pulpit, even, has become in too great a measure a stage, whereon the church worship "that splendid prayer," or the fine dramatical effect of the new parson. Does not this account for the lack of interest both in Sunday schools and churches? But to the festival, social, or amateur theatricals, more properly, the church go with lightning speed. Now so far as this is concerned, we do not wish to be understood as opposed to ammusments of a proper kind. Yet to be sure, my judgment and that of my worthy brother might be at variance.

The arrangements are all made, the pieces all selected, the actors drilled and drilled again, until perfect, or at least so considered by each other, and the people are notified that upon such and such a time the "amateurs," will give an intertainment at the Hall for the benefit of the Sunday school. Admission 25 cents.

The mere announcement of what it is intended to relieve draws many there who would not otherwise go, could they not thus stifle conscience, by saying "It is for a good cause." In this case we have a few love-sick tableaux, music by an orchestra of violins, etc., comic songs, in character, about the fondness for ardent spirits, or, as the trite saying is—the whole concluding with a scene from negro minstrelsy, ending with a hoe-down dance by all hands, all for the benefit of the Sunday school.

This is not imagination. But the programme of a successful Sunday school exhibition. To say that this was all, would be stating an untruth, though there was a higher (?) appreciation of those character negro comicalities than for aught else. There are, of course, those who stand aloof from all such entertainments, and many who think it all out of place.

What a lesson is this that is being taught the young by modern theologians! Is it a wonder that so many drift upon the shoals and sand bars of life? When we see, as in the case stated above, church members covered with burnt cork, to personate a low, love-sick, dandy, unnatural plantation scene, we are led to inquire, WHAT NEXT?

Honesty is the Best Policy.

Personalities are very unpleasant, but I hope that you and the readers of THE TIMES will have patience a little longer, as I have no other way to defend myself against the personal attacks so often made upon me through the columns of the Review within the last few years.

In the Review of March 12, 1872, Uriah Smith in a leading editorial, undertakes to present me in a false light before his readers. It is one of his old tricks. He is used to it. The fact which I now wish to put upon record is this: From my book entitled 'The First-Day Sabbath,' Eld. Smith makes an unfair quotation, by commencing on p. 365, where will be found the commencement of my review of his comments on the seventh of Romans. In order to expose the fallacy of his views on that chapter, I gave an analysis of his theory by reducing it to questions and answers, numbering in all twenty-two. But the Elder's ingenuity led him to see if he should quote only six of the first of these twenty-two questions and answers, leaving the other sixteen out altogether, wherein his theory was involved in many self-contradictions; then he could have an opportunity to make me appear in a false and ridiculous light before his readers. And for the want of better work, he descended to this dishonorable—though familiar work with him—to give just so much of my writings as would suit his purpose, and no more! But he will fail in this dishonest work. God is just; and justice, though slow, is nevertheless sure. If we will but wait a little, such men will be rebuked; and Uriah Smith stands rebuked before the world by his prophetess—Mrs. Ellen G. White. The facts are these: some few years since, when I held a discussion with M. E. Cornell, in Portland, Me., on the Sabbath question, this same Elder Smith was there as reporter. And what did he do? (1) By perverting some of my language, (2) by leaving out altogether my main arguments, and (3) by exaggerating and extolling Cornell's side of the question; he put me through —"the little end of the horn," as those would be likely to judge those who were governed by his report of the discussion, as given through the columns of the Review.

But a few weeks subsequent to this debate, however, Mrs. White had a vision respecting this discussion, which may be found recorded in Mrs. W.'s "Testimonies for the church, No. 13." In this "vision," respecting our debate, Mrs. White says of Cornell: "While he was so confident, he was shorn of his strength.... His sufficient spirit came near making the discussion an utter failure;" etc. From this we can now see, that, if the vision of Mrs. W. was true, then the report of this Portland discussion as given by Uriah Smith was false; as all his personal attacks upon me have been. And if his report is true, then Ellen G. White's "vision" was false.

Which "horn" of this dilemma will Elder Smith take? T. M. PREBLE.

That "Analysis of the Bible."

I notice that Br. I. Adrian has given a word of caution in THE TIMES, relating to the above work. To this I wish to add, that while the work has had a very large sale in New England, at a great price, I have never found one, out of several hundreds I have conversed with, who are satisfied with it. I have several times exchanged Berean's Casket for it, until I could find no sale for them. I have more than twenty testimonies that Berean's Casket (costing only $2,) is worth from one to ten times that of the "Analysis," as a reference book.

I. C. WELLCOME.

The Christian Life.

The Countess of Warwick

She was not less solicitous to make others good, than to be good herself. She well remembered our Savior's charge to Peter:—"When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren.

She would drop a wise sentence, or moral or holy apothegm, with which she was richly furnished from her own making, or her collection, and by commending or improving that, she would turn the conversation into a useful channel without offence, and even with pleasure. She kept a book of such wise and weighty sayings; greatly valuing sentences which contained much in a little compass.—The following were a few out of the many:

"The almost christians are the unhappiest of men; having religion enough to make the world hate them, and yet not enough to make God love them.

"The servants of God should be as bold for their master, as the servants of the devil are for theirs.

"O Lord, what I give thee doth not please thee, unless I give thee myself. So what thou givest me shall not satisfy me, unless thou givest me thyself.

"O Lord who givest grace to be humble, give me grace to be humble.

"He loves God too little who loves anything with him, which he loves not for him.

"So speak to God as though men heard thee, so speak to men as knowing God hears thee.

"By how much more the vile Christ made himself for us, by so much the more precious should be to us.

"He who takes up Christ's cross aright, shall find it such a burden as wings to a bird, or sails to a ship.

"It is a great honor to be almoner to the King of Heaven. To give is the greatest luxury. How indulgent then is God to annex future rewards to what is so much its own recompence!

"To be libelled for Christ is the best panegyric.

"Where affection is heavy, there is sin light.

"Sin brought death into the world, and nothing but death will cary sin out of it.

"The best shield against slanderers, is to live so that none may believe them.

"He who revenges an injury acts the part of an executioner; he who pardons it acts the part of a prince.

"She would thus make her attempts upon the friends for whom she had a kindness, and whom she longed to rescue from ruin," "Come, come, my friend, you must be good; you shall be good. I cannot be so unkind, nay so unfaithful to the laws of friendship, as to let you persist and perish in a way which you know as well as I leads down to hell. It grieves my very soul to have so good a nature ensnared against the dictates of its own light, by custom, example, or anything else. If they replied with excuses, she would stop them thus: Pray my friend have patience; hear me out. I know, or guess at least, what you would say, and I would not have you say it. None sin so dangerously as those who sin with excuses.—Use no arguments which will not hold at the day of judgment."

The good Countess had learned St. Paul's lesson to perfection, 'to speak evil of no man.' As a wife, it may be truly said, that the heart of her husband trusted safely in her, and that she did him good and not evil, all the days of her life.—Memoirs of the Countess of Warwick.

Intended Reformation.

How dangerous to defer those momentous reformations which the conscience is solemnly preaching to the heart! If they are neglected, the difficulty and indisposition are increasing every month. The mind is receding, degree after degree, from the warm and hopeful zone; till at last it will enter the arctic circle, and become fixed in relentless and eternal ice.—John Foster.

A good deacon, who was naturally a high-tempered man, had been used to beat his oxen over the head, as all his neighbors did. It was observed that when he became a Christian, his cattle were remarkably docile. A friend inquired into the secret. "Why," said the deacon, "formerly, when my oxen were a little contrary, I flew into a passion and beat them unmercifully. This made the matter worse. Now, when they do not behave well, I go down behind the load, sit down, and sing 'Old Hundred.' I don't know how it is, but the psalm tune has a surprising effect upon my oxen."

Secret Sins.

The ichneumon fly lays its eggs in the body of the caterpillar. When the egg is hatched the larva begins to feed at once on the body of the poor worm. It avoids, by a remarkable instinct, the vital parts, and the caterpillar creeps on his way feeding as unconsciously as if he were in no danger.

So many a soul is lost by some secret sin. The friends of a young man were shocked by finding him suddenly transformed into a drunkard. Before they suspected him, he was lost to all shame or self-respect. He had been for years drinking in secret, before this exposure, and the last stages were very rapid.

There is a little weed which sometimes creeps into our canals and rivers, which seems very insignificant at first. But if left to itself it grows so fast, and its rope-like stems become so matted that it seriously hinders navigation; just such a multiplying evil is one secret sin suffered to take root in the heart.

Let us offer every day the prayer, "Cleanse thou me from secret faults." —American Messenger.

The Silver Rule.

Paste it up. You all know the Golden Rule—"Do unto others as you would wish them to do unto you." Here is a rule which is almost a part of the Golden Rule, but which we will put by itself, and, because of its value, call the "Silver Rule:" "Think and say all you can of the good qualities of others; forget and keep silent concerning their bad qualities." You cannot conceive how much such a course will lighten your own happiness, and raise you in the esteem of your companions. Did you ever think any more of a boy or girl because he or she found fault with others? Never call your schoolmates or playmates ugly or cross to their faces or behind their backs. If they are ugly, or stingy, or cross, it does not make them better for you to talk or think about it, while it makes you love to dwell upon the faults of others, and causes your own soul to grow smaller, and to become like the foul bird that prefers carrion for food. Rather tell all the good you can, and try to think of some good quality of your mates.—Youth's Companion.

From Mary A. Tibbetts.

My heart desires that I should write to you, and the dear ones of the office, now that you are settled in your new Chicago home, not only to congratulate you on your prospects for future usefulness, but to tell you how lonely we have felt during the last two weeks in the absence of our weekly and welcome visitor the TIMES. I have thought, if we are so cheerless without it for even so short a period of time, how do many good brethren and sisters do without it altogether? But it came last evening, and its contents have been read and duly appreciated, and among other things of interest, that article on "The Coming of the Lord," not only comforted me, but threw a flood of light upon the teachings of the great apostle Paul, in contrast with the teachings of the present day; our Baptist brethren have been holding meetings for the last three weeks, in our neighborhood, and have had great success; many additions have been made to the church, and much good has apparently been done. I have met with them, and worked with them, trying to do good and get good, but my heart during the time, has on many occasions been made sad at their utter silence in regard to the coming of the Lord. One would suppose from the preaching of the present day, that no such doctrine was ever taught in the sacred oracles, and that Paul had never exhorted his brethren to be comforted with those blessed words, the coming of Jesus to wake the sleeping saints and translate or change the living ones; but instead of that, it would seem from his teaching that he hoped to be among those who would personally meet the Lord, for he says, "we which are alive and remain," as though he expected and believed the time close at hand when the Lord would be revealed from heaven, to his waiting people; and hence this subject, now almost ignored by modern theologians, was made a prominent theme in his writings. I have sometimes thought that more ministers believe this precious truth than we are aware of, but are unwilling to teach it lest they should be thought to favor the Adventists, who have come squarely out on this and other great Bible truths pertaining to these days. If this be so, (and I think it is), I pray that their whole duty may be made so plain, and the claims of conscience press so hard, that they will leave the inferential theology, and come to the chapter and verse theology of the Bible. I trust that as a body of Christians we shall live worthy of the blessed truths we profess. O, let every house have a family altar, where the incense of morning and evening prayers shall ascend to the Mercy Seat, bringing in return the rich blessing we daily and hourly need; let us also be faithful in our closet duties and in the daily reading of the Scriptures, and then all other duties will become easy. We shall be able to live above the vanities and amusements of the world; its pleasures will cease to interest us, and we shall not only avoid bringing reproach upon the cause we love, and the profession we have made as those waiting for our Lord, but be ready when he shall come with the many mansions he has gone to prepare for those who love his approaching.

A DISCUSSION

BETWEEN

Eld. Clark Braden, of the Christian Church, and Eld. Himes, of the Advent Christian Times.

Upon Four Propositions, Involving the Nature of Man, the State of the Dead, and Future Rewards and Punishments.

ELD. HIMES' SEVENTH RESPONSE.

My brother has been either a very frugal or a very careless reader upon my side of this question, or he never would have styled Prof. Hudson "the Magnus Apollo of soul-sleeping." The Prof. was never a soul-sleeper at all, but held, as do many, especially in England, to the survival of all souls until the judgment, believing that then the sinning soul will become extinct. I will notice one other inaccuracy, and then attend to what is said of the parable of Lk. 16.

My brother disposes of my remarks upon Phil. 1: 21–25, by simply denying that analuo ever means return; even in Lk. 12: 36. Inasmuch as no version or translation under heaven ever rendered it anything else than return in that passage, and Hink, McKnight and Liddell and Scott all give return as our definition of the word, my brother would do well to revise his declaration. Such glaring inaccuracies can only injure his cause.

As all my brother has said upon the parable of Dives and Lazarus turns upon one point, I need pay attention to no other. His position stands or falls with his affirmation that Christ endorsed the views of the Pharisees by using them in a parable. This is absurd upon its very face. A parable may be founded upon either fact or fiction. The framer of parables enjoys as large a license as does the poet. One might as well assert that Jotham believed the trees had a meeting to choose a king, as that Jesus assented to the heathen fables of the subterranean intermediate state. But says Eld. Braden; "if he did not, he was a deceiver," because his hearers would necessarily understand him to do so. There is a good deal of groundless assumption concerning the views of the Jews in our Savior's day, as there is of those of the heathen. It is commonly urged that the heathen generally believed in a future life, and many suppose that the masses really did believe all the fabulous stuff about hades, and Charon, and the Styx, etc. But the fact is, there was a general disbelief of the doctrine of a future life, and the vagaries of the poets were justly regarded as fables. Just how much of the trash that has come down to us in that receptacle of human tradition, the Talmud, was believed by the "common people" of Judea, I of course cannot say; but it is begging the question to affirm that they were so imbued with Pharisaic theology as to not be able to discern the fact when it was used as the imagery of a parable, to enforce a lesson intended for a special class. They certainly had common sense, and knew that it was lawful to use either fact or fiction in parables.

There are many objections to my brother's theory. I will mention a few of them. If he endorsed the Pharisaic system, he did so unreservedly. He made no qualifications, no reservations. Hence, he must have sanctioned the non-resurrection of the wicked, the materiality or substantiality of the soul, and, worse than all the rest, that crowning puerility, that the abode of departed spirits is underground. The Pharisees' fable ran, that God had fitted up a place underground, in two apartments, separated by a "deep gulf." To one or the other of these all the dead go, as disembodied souls. In one of these chambers beneath, if Eld. Braden is right, the lost are to-day wailing in literal fire. So the Pharisees believed; and he says Jesus endorsed their views. I cannot confidently say whether the righteous are underground or not. Their apartments may be "To Let!" for we have had vague hints that the souls confined there all took flight to heaven when Jesus was raised from the dead. We wait for more definite information on that point. But that the wicked are there, being punished, seems certain: they are being punished, and also awaiting the day of judgment—an arrangement that makes a broad farce of the predicted day of judgment, at the second advent. Jesus says, "then shall every man be rewarded;" but Eld. Braden says every dead man is being rewarded now.

More than this; if Jesus became the backer of Pharisaic theology, in doing so he flatly contradicted those Scriptures to which he had referred the Jews for a knowledge of a future life. From the list of all the passages in the Bible containing the terms sheol and hades my readers will have already perceived that there are three classes of these texts; (1) those that mention the term, but neither assert or imply anything definite as to its meaning. The word could be used in them with equal propriety, whether sheol were a state or a place, or whether its inhabitants were conscious or unconscious.

(2) Those texts which make mention of them in such a way as to make certain inferences necessary. As when Jacob says—"I will go down to sheol." So far as this passage is concerned it might be a place of either consciousness or unconsciousness; but its location cannot be in heaven, or away from the earth; but "down," or in the earth. (3) We have plain, direct, and unequivocal assertions as to the conditions of sheol, and of those who fall into it. And the difference between my brother and myself is, that I make these Scriptures the standard of interpretation—let God be his own interpreter. I take those unambiguous, explicit utterances of the Holy Spirit, which contain positive, and plainly literal statements, as the basis of faith, and explain indirect and ambiguous allusions by them. Do, in fact, just the opposite of what he so unjustly charges me with doing. But my brother cites a long array of heathen traditions, adopted by the Rabbis, Scribes and Pharisees, and lays them down as a premise, and then shows that certain passages where sheol occurs can be harmonized with the heathen idea, while he deliberately sets aside the third class of texts I have mentioned, as uninspired utterances, or accommodations to the ignorance of those ages. But the Book says, "Let God be true," even if it makes "every man a liar." I must then be pardoned for believing that Zoroaster and not Job, that Homer, not David and Solomon, that Philo, not Isaiah, that Plato and not Paul, were "ignorant;" and that God's chosen ones both knew and told the truth concerning the state of man in death. When the Holy Spirit affirms that the dead are "silent in sheol" (Ps. 31 : 17), I decline to set aside the explicit statement on the authority of the Talmud, or any other writings. I read in God's word that the dead do not praise or even remember him (Ps. 6 : 5; Is. 38: 18), that there is no work nor device nor knowledge nor wisdom in sheol (Eccl. 9: 10); and that the dead know not anything, (v. 6). Tradition and philosophy assert that the dead are conscious, and that there is wisdom in sheol! The issue is a square one. Which is true: the Bible or tradition?

My brother denies that the traditions are of heathen origin. They are from God, or they are not. If from God, let him cite chapter and verse. If not found in Scripture, they are "not to be required of any man that they be believed." He then as much as admits that they are of heathen origin, and endeavors to retrieve their character by associating with them the thought that the idea of the resurrection first came to the surface in the scum and froth of tradition. We are not now discussing the origin of this doctrine, but my brother's assertion that Moses, and Job and Abraham, and I know not how many more of the ancient worthies, had no idea of the resurrection, is pure unwarranted assumption. The coolness with which he sets aside a half of the Bible as an unsafe instructor upon this topic, and cites the trash of the Talmud as final authority as to the Scriptural usage of terms, is decidedly refreshing, though far from convincing.

The notions of the non-resurrection of the wicked, of the materiality of the soul, a spirit world inside the globe, with a flat contradiction of the Scriptures, and setting up "human tradition" as the final standard of appeal in exegesis, are too great a burden for my brother's theory; hence, it breaks down, and his argument from the parable of Luke 16 has no force whatever.

One can prove anything by "combining Scriptures." My brother says, "Tartarus is the abode of the wicked in sheol, and the fallen angels are there. This Jewish idea is true!" Is it, though. I ask better proof than a bare assertion. I affirm it is false. The devils are not in sheol, for the excellent reason that they are not dead, but alive, and conscious and intelligent. Only the dead are in sheol, and they "know not anything." His remarks concerning the Sodomites are equally gratuitous. They are nowhere said to be in Tartarus, but Peter declares they are turned to ashes, and that this was their exemplary punishment. No, says Eld. Braden, they are now "suffering the vengeance of eternal fire." But if Jude 6 proves that the Sodomites are now consciously "suffering," it equally proves that they are still engaged in the same practices that led to their overthrow.

I would here call attention to the fact that my brother agreed to affirm the following proposition: "Man is by the constitution God gave him in creation, and which he still retains, a being that possesses a spirit that will endlessly exist in a state of consciousness." We have now had seven letters, most of them long ones, and not one direct argument to the point. Those who recollect the proposition next in order, that I am to affirm, relating to the condition of man in death, will have perceived that instead of attempting to prove his own proposition, he has let it severely alone, and only paid attention to the question of the survival of the soul in death. In closing his seventh letter, all he claims to have established is, that the dead "are conscious between death and the resurrection." And now having devoted seven letters to my first affirmative proposition, he attempts to still further prejudice the case, by here, to use his own inelegant phrase, "lugging in" the question of the future punishment. I will attend to that, and to his mis-translation of 2 Pet. 2:9 when we come to it. Meanwhile let us hope that before leaving proposition I, our brother will at least sew together a few fig leaves of argument to cover its desolate nakedness. Our readers are too intelligent for him to succeed in his attempt to make them believe that by attacking my affirmation he is defending his own. Why not candidly admit, as most intelligent immaterialists do, that the doctrine of his proposition is not taught in the Scriptures; that is at best an inference. The Scriptures are silent on the immortality of the soul or spirit. The fact that my brother has written so much without one direct argument to the point, is the best possible proof that Alex. Campbell was right when he said—"Immortality, in the sacred writings, is never applied to the spirit of man. It is not the doctrine of Plato which the resurrection of Jesus proposes." And who of my readers is prepared to dispute those other words of the same great mind—"We are always suspicious that if the word is not in the Bible, the idea which it represents is not there." What candid mind can face the fact that man nor any part of him is ever in the Bible styled immortal with the other fact that he is called mortal; that he is never compared to any thing permanent or enduring, but the opposite; that the intelligent being is said to die; that death is again and again predicated of the soul; that even the spirit of which he makes his boast is the common heritage of all sentient creatures; and the fact that man's life is but spirit is cited as proof of its frailty—what candid mind, I say, can look these things in the face and doubt that not only these words are in the Scriptures, but that the ideas they represent are there also?

The people of God have always been the common people. Common sense, then, teaches us that his revelation to them should be expounded from the simple to the obscure, and not from the difficult to the plainly literal: otherwise only the learned could receive and understand the Scriptures. This is the Romish doctrine, and it has obtained, in effect, only too widely among Protestants. And when the Scriptures are explained from a basis of parables and confessedly difficult and obscure passages, are lighted with the lamp of tradition rather than used as a light, the privilege of the common people, the right of private judgment, is taken away; and we are told, in effect, that only those who can read Homer and Virgil, and the Talmud, can understand the allusions of Scripture, or the Bible usage of words. Let those who will, receive such doctrine. It will hardly obtain among Disciples, who were first organized upon the principle of demanding a "Thus saith the Lord" for every item of faith as well as practice, unless they shall recede from that high ground.

My brother passed by my objections during two articles, in order to lift the discussion "out of the ruts into which it had fallen:" but he has got well back into them in his last letter. He charges me with dishonesty in arraying his second against subsequent letters. Our readers have his letters and my specifications of his self-contradictions, and can judge whether my points are well taken.

I do not know that Homer and others spoke of the departed as the Hebrews did; for they spoke of them as alive, and the Hebrews spoke of them as dead, exactly opposite conditions. The law prohibiting necromancy proves nothing to my brother's purpose. He has admitted that the only case described in the Bible was an imposture—that a demon pretended to be a dead man. He has admitted that communication with demons, and even actual deception, with no spirit communication of any kind was proscribed by this law. Can assurance go further, then, than to set up the claim that the law against so-called necromancy necessarily implies that communication with the dead is possible? Is. 8: 19 does not afford the evidence my brother thinks. It affirms nothing but that certain ones "sought to the dead." Saul sought to them; but it was not the dead man that communicated with him.

Ex. 3: 6 comes up again. I confess my astonishment at my brother's dealing with this passage. He now says: "It is now agreed by both parties that the purpose of God in Ex. 3: 6 was to declare to Moses his relation to the patriarchs." And yet when he introduced this argument he was careful to declare of this very point—"Mark! I do not say that this was the intended meaning of the passage, nor even that Moses so understood it!" Now I believe just what I have said—that the passage was intended to remind Moses of God's covenant relation with Abraham; that certain promises made to him were yet unfulfilled; and that in saying "I am the God of Abraham," he simply meant that Moses should understand that he considered himself still bound by the covenant he had made with "the friend of God." My brother's repetitions that God could not say "I am the God of Abraham," unless he were conscious and alive, is the baldest assumption; and the only argument he has produced is a totally inapt illustration. I might as well say, "I can only truthfully say that I am the son of A. B. while A. B. is alive and conscious." And the inference that because God said to Jacob while Isaac was alive, "I am the God of Abraham and Isaac," that Abraham had "as real an existence as Isaac," if it proves anything, proves—"as the copula is not used in different senses in relation to Isaac and Abraham," that Abraham was alive in the same sense Isaac was. This is trifling with the question—not argument.

My brother stakes his reputation as a scholar that the sentence, "I am teaching a Normal Class, does not affirm the existence of a Normal Class." He then endeavors to split a hair "'tween the west and northwest sides," by making a distinction between an implication that is positively essential to the assertion—the assertion could not exist without it—and the assertion itself. And to crown all he affirms that "I am the God of Abraham" "as necessarily implies" the conscious existence of the patriarch, as "I am teaching a Normal Class" implies the existence of said class. Think of the clouded intellect of Moses. He is told as plainly as "I am teaching a Normal Class" tells of the existence of said class, that Abraham is alive, and yet Eld. Braden dares not affirm that Moses so understood it. Poor Moses! However, as the idea the assertion "I am the God of Abraham," was intended to convey, and how Moses understood it "is no part of the argument" (see Eld. Braden's third letter), it is perhaps a matter of not much consequence. But I cannot help suggesting whether my brother's course on this and some other points does not lay him open to the suspicion that some of the decidedly unchristian and uncourteous epithets which he has substituted for arguments have been evolved from the depths of his own consciousness.

My remarks upon the transfiguration are replied to by the charge of "playing 'Now you see it, and now you don't,'" and of "thimble-rigging." These terms characterize me as a willful and deliberate deceiver. They are no more nor less than personal abuse. I may be in error, and my arguments may be weak; but my brother's resort to vile abuse is a tacit confession that even if he is on the right side, he has no arguments to confute mine. Who believes that he would have cried "thimble-rigging" if he could have produced a demonstration that my exegesis of the vision on the mount was incorrect. More Bible and less Billingsgate would be an advantage to his cause.

He intimates that I have kept back my definition of spirit. In my second letter, and I think elsewhere, I clearly defined the term.

My brother's forte is evidently in asking questions. He wants to know what 1 Thes. 5:23 means? And he endeavors to spice the question with ridicule. Will he tell us what this passage means? "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and soul and strength and mind." A candid answer to this question is an answer to his own. Dividing soul and spirit means dividing life and being. A living man is a living soul: when his spirit or breath of life is taken away, or divided from the soul, it is no longer a living soul, but a dead soul or man.

My brother misrepresents me when he says I avoid the passages where spirit and soul "can have but one meaning." He forgets that I showed that they both can and do have another meaning. Paul's "spirit was stirred within him," is one of Eld. Braden's stock passages. I have shown that here, as in a hundred other places, spirit means the mind.

Mat. 10: 28—destroy can't mean destroy because "the destruction is inflicted after death." I can hardly believe my brother serious in such talk. The destruction is [illegible] only after death, but after the resurrection also, when both soul and body are destroyed beyond redemption in gehenna. The [illegible]ence between this death and that suff[illegible] many believers at the hands of their persecutors, is just this. That God's dead [illegible] live again, and live forever, while those who sink in the second death are blotted from existence. Their punishment is eternal. They will never see light again.

Concerning the use of hades in the N. T. my brother is mistaken. He said; "It occurs eleven times in the N. T., and invariably with the meaning 'abode of spirits.'" Now he says he meant "it never meant grave." He did not say so. The exaltation and descent of Capernaum are both figurative—to heaven, means very high: to hades means very low. The expression is made very plain by Is. 14, where the descent to sheol is explained to mean a total destruction; which is just what happened to Capernaum, and occurs to all that goes into sheol.

He says that writers of my class "attempt to set aside the clear teachings of plain passages by quoting figurative language and obscure passages." This is decidedly cool for one whose sheet anchor is a parable, and who sets aside Eccl. 9: 5–10; Ps. 6: 5; Is. 38: 18, and indeed pretty much everything in the O. T. that militates against his theory.

Take No Thought.

Thus reads the common version of Mat. 6: 25. But what are we to understand by this injunction? If we receive it in its literal, obvious sense, the inquiry arises, What worldly enterprise, what benevolent undertaking, what religious work can be either commenced, carried forward, or brought to a successful completion, without "thought?" What farmer can raise his grain, his live-stock, or his fruits—and thus obtain his food and clothing—by "taking no thought" about them? What mechanic can suit his customers, what merchant can succeed in his business, what physician or lawyer, or minister of the gospel can gain the confidence of the people, or prosper in his calling, by "taking no thought?" How can the young gain an education, or learn a trade or a profession, with "no thought?" How can a person obtain a knowledge of his own sinfulness, and of Christ as his Savior, by "taking no thought?" Or how is it possible for any of us to obtain our needful food, drink and clothing, without earnest and continuous "thought," on the part of ourselves or others? Can it be that Jesus meant to enjoin upon his disciples what the words "take no thought" impute to him? Would not such an injunction practically carried out, lead men to be thougtless, indolent and improvident? And do not other Scriptures expressly direct, "Think"—"meditate on these things?" And "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven;" "provide things honorable in the sight of all men;" each direction implying earnest "thought," yea *fore*thought, and effort? And further, "If any man provide not for his own....household, he has denied the faith, and is worse than an unbeliever?" (Phil. 4: 8: 1 Tim. 4: 15: 5: 8; Rom. 12: 17.) Yet the injunction remains, "Take no thought." It is given as a practical direction for man's conduct; and as such, it should be in plain, unmistakable words, used in their ordinary sense, and capable of being readily understood and applied. Certainly a translation which thus misrepresents an important duty, by contradicting other Scriptures and universal practical facts, cannot be termed either good or correct.

Previously to the King James' version, Tyndall, Cramner, the Genevan, the Rhemish, and the Bishop's Bible, had all rendered the passage, "Be not careful for your life, what ye sha eat." This rendering corresponds more nearly with the true meaning of word merimnao; which refers more to feeling, than to thinking. The verb is derived from the root or ground form mer; meros and meris both meaning a part, and merizo, to divide into parts. Hence merimnao naturally and properly signifies, to have the mind divided or distracted, to be uneasy or disquieted, to be distracted with care or anxiety. "To be disquieted" makes good sense in the whole class of thirteen like passages, where merimnao occurs. For example, "Be not disquieted for your life, as to what you shall eat." "Which of you by being disquieted can add to his stature one cubit?" "Be not disquieted in respect to the morrow; for the morrow will be disquieted of itself." "When they deliver you up, be not disquieted as to what or how you shall speak." (Mat. 6: 25, 27, 34; 10: 16.) "Martha, thou art disquieted, and troubled about many things." (Lk. 10: 41.)

This rendering harmonizes words of Jesus in Jno. 14: 1, 27, "Let not your heart be troubled." "Peace I have with you, my peace I give to you;" etc.

It also exactly meets a want which Christ's disciples often deeply feel. They are sometimes tried in regard to obtaining the necessaries of life. Sometimes they are in pain of body, or in distress of mind; they meet with disappointments and trials, or they are troubled with doubts and fears, or with evil forebodings. And just here, in their time of need, and when other helps fail, these sweet words of Jesus come to their relief, like ministering angels of mercy: "Be not disquieted about food and raiment but trust your Heavenly Father's care and love." "Let not your heart be troubled; believe on God, and believe on me." "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give to you;....let not your heart be troubled, nor let it be afraid." And that precious exhortation of the apostle: "Be disquieted in regard to nothing; but in everything, by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known to God. And the peace of God, which surpasses all understanding, will guard your hearts and your minds, in Christ Jesus." (Phil. 4: 6, 7.)

From this brief examination, we may learn the great desirableness and importance of having God's word clearly and faithfully translated; (1) That errors may be removed or avoided. (2) That we may receive from it just the instruction, and the measure of peace and joy which our Heavenly Father has provided for us in this priceless record of his fidelity and love.

C. W. WATERHOUSE.

Some of the Evils of the Times.

We are not of those who say the former times were better than these. The highest wisdom has characterized the doing so as unwise, not because the saying may not be true, but that in any case making such comparisons is an unprofitable exercise. The distinctive evil and good of each period are largely its own, and differ from those of other times, and usually they are connected with the governing influences of their various epochs. There are vices and virtues that thrive best in times of war, while others spring up and flourish in seasons of peace. Poverty has its peculiar vices and virtues, and wealth its. The learned and the unlearned, the cultured and the rude, the renowned and the obscure, the flattered and the neglected, those of each class have their several temptations, and develop in life their own peculiar good and evil traits. Every age, locality, or division of society has its own distinctive moral character, affording in each case materials for the panegrist or the artist. The genuine reformer has to do with the evils of his own time and place, not because they are greater than others may have been, but because they are before him and invite his efforts.

Sitting at our table, in this great center of the nation, and in contact with the social and religious public, we are brought to contemplate the evils most prevalent among us. We sometimes figure to our imagination the scene that would appear could we see, as the divine Omniscience sees, all the abominations transacted or in process at any given moment in this city; and we are thankful that it is hidden from our eyes. But enough comes to the surface to make the heart sick if they are dwelt upon moodishly, or to rouse the soul to earnestness if contemplated as wrongs to be righted or as evils to be removed. The world will never become right until sin shall be destroyed, and it is pretty well ascertained that sin is most effectually overcome, not by direct assaults, but by promoting the growth of the opposite moral qualities, as noxious weeds are most surely kept down by the steady growth of the cultivated plants. There is but little to be hoped, therefore, in the way of reformation, from the mere satirist; and yet the satirist has his mission—that of a rough handed Baptist, appointed to prepare the way for a more radical, because a more spiritual, reformer. It is, however, a good work to detect vice, and to force it from its coverts into open day—to strip it of its false livery and present it in its true colors. A vice newly detected is half destroyed; but tolerated for a time after its detection, it soon claims and is accorded immunity.

Ours is a period of unprecedented activity, and out of that fact spring the distinctive qualities, good and bad, of our times. This spirit of the age, exercised upon the vast physical resources of the country, made the more available by the facilities of modern machinery, results in an unprecedented increase of wealth. Success stimulates desire, till at length greed of gain has become the characteristic of the age; and out of this springs nearly every form of our specially prevailing vices. The service of Mammon begins its course of ruin by searing the conscience and deadening the moral susceptibilities, and after that the development of specific forms of wrong is only a matter of occasions and opportunities. Political corruption, rapacity in trade, gambling speculations, defalcations, embezzlements and extortions, are the more flagrant forms of its development; while its less offensive, and only less destructive, forms are over-tasking of one's self and others, engrossing of one's time and thought and feelings and being in "business," to the exclusion of domestic, social, and religious culture and enjoyments. Here, if we mistake not, we may detect the source of many of the evils that afflict us.

Our activities are not themselves vices; commonly they are reckoned cardinal virtues; but how naturally do they lead on to the chief vices of our times? And till some nobler purpose shall call forth these energies, and their results shall be consecrated to some better end, our solemn moralists will hurl their satire to but little purpose.

But the earnest and acquisitive devotees of Mammon comprise but a comparatively small part of society. The toilers for daily and yearly subsistence, who literally take no thought for the morrow, are scarcely less slavishly devoted to gain than those higher up the financial scale. Some few, indeed, determine to become rich by what is esteemed legitimate means, and generally they succeed, for wealth is within the reach of nearly every one who will accept the conditions upon which it is offered. They labor diligently, live frugally, study economy, expend almost nothing for self-culture or mere pleasure, but live only to grow rich; and while wealth acquired brings honor, the process of its acquisition very likely eliminates every trace of real excellence from the heart, and actually reduces the value of the man to just so many dollars and cents. There are always such to be found scattered here and there through society—mere savings banks, or life insurance policies for the benefit of others—but they do not constitute the most numerous class.

The greed of getting is not always accompanied by a corresponding lust for accumulating. Men acquire to spend as earnestly as to increase, and the resultant effect upon character of prodigality is quite as deleterious as that of avarice. The desire for costly living is indeed the crying vice of the age. It pervades all ranks of society; it tasks the laborer till life becomes a burden; it impoverishes the trader, robs the farmer, mechanic, the artisan, of the little capital needed to enable him to prosecute his business successfully, and tempts trusted agents to peculations and embezzlements. It destroys contentment among the poor, leads to trades-unions and "strikes," and at once makes the acquisition of wealth a necessity and impossibility. Under its influence the simple pleasures and homely virtues of the poor have been swept away together, and everywhere is heard the maddened cry for more money.

A sensational religious satirist has lately published a volume on the "Abominations of Modern Society," one chapter of which is entitled the "Power of Clothes," which, after the writer's wont, disregarding any definite classification, treats of all sorts of fashionable extravagances, from the fitting of a glove to the display at a "splendid" funeral. This passion for display is peculiarly the vice of our women (though not a few of them are guiltless of this indictment), and in many families it fairly counterbalances the greed of gain on the other side of the house. To dress richly and wear costly jewelry, "flashing diamonds;" to live in costly houses, sumptuously furnished and well stocked with servants; to ride in fine carriages, drawn by gayly caparisoned horses, and driven by a coachman in livery, and to find out occasions for the exhibit of all this wealth of ornamentation, fill up the ideal of the fashionable lady of the times—a name to which thousands aspire whose limited financial resources make such aspirations doubly criminal. The race of coxcombs in male attire is less than at some former times; and now men set out the "lady members of their families" to display their quality in clothes and equippage, somewhat as the Orientals have their dancing done for them—by their slaves.

Out of this unwholesome love of display has grown the intolerable expensiveness of living, which has become a subject of almost universal complaint. To maintain a family or keep a house is no longer possible except to the favored few whose annual incomes are reckoned by thousands. Hence the idea of a home has grown to be old-fashioned, a matter of memory of former times and remote places. Families, somehow nearly always with but few children, board at the hotels, or live in apartments and "feed" at the restaurants; while young men avoid marriage as a luxury quite beyond the reach of their income, a condition of society that indicates a far-gone stage of moral decay. Still others, struggling to respond to the vicious demands of fashionable life, adopt all possible means to increase their gains. They urge themselves onward to the most painful efforts in business; they embark in hazardous adventures, or, finding opportunities, they are tempted to misappropriate whatever may have been intrusted to them. There can be no doubt the combined financial and moral ruin of many who had before borne unblemished reputations have grown out of causes operating within their own family circles. To the vicious prodigality of the times, more than to any other cause, must be charged the fearful prevalence of criminal procedures in all sorts of money matters.

In rapid succession there have recently been developed around us a series of gigantic frauds, the noise of which fills the civilized world. With a suddenly assumed virtuousness, the public are pouring their execrations upon the heads of the chief delinquents—very justly, no doubt, and yet these are emphatically the men of the times. Our Tweeds and Sweeneys and Ingersolls are the natural productions of their evil times; and he, the chiefest of them all, who lately fell by the murderous hands of a rival in one of his many forms of criminality, is the fairest, though the foulest, specimen of the monstrous overgrowth of vicious greatness. But, worst of all, the same conditions that have made such men and such careers possible have also vitiated the whole mass of society. The moral tone of society in respect to all financial matters, and especially as to all fiduciary trusts, has become sadly depressed. Departments of business of at best doubtful morality are readily engaged in if they only promise large gains. Places with very moderate compensations, but affording opportunities for peculations are eagerly sought for, and men grow rich in positions whose legitimate incomes afford but a moderate living.

The practical lessons taught by these things are various and vastly important. They suggest the inquiry whether indeed it is not possible to secure pecuniary success at too high a cost; whether it is wise to make the getting of money the great business of life, and whether the use of money compensates for the pains and labors of obtaining it. With the possession of wealth the temptation to luxury, ostentation, and profligacy is always strong and acting at great advantage. How hardly shall a rich man avoid these evil influences, and with how much greater difficulty shall the children of rich men escape these dangers!

"Society,"—the mysterious and powerful something so-called—is neither virtuous itself, nor a promoter of virtue; and they who would escape its contamination must avoid too close a contact with it. It is more exacting than death, and more greedy than the grave. The rich purchase its favor at a great price, while poverty with it is an unmitigated offense. Fashion is its code, to which all who submit themselves must part with their liberty, their manhood, and their domestic happiness. Its service must be paramount, and right and honor and honesty must yield to its behests. That a Christian should be a "society man" is as impossible as that a man should at the same time serve God and Mammon. All attempts in that direction are miserable failures and contemptible shams.—Chr. Advocate.

Correspondence.

From P. W. Hough.

SIBESVILLE. At this place and was called to attend a funeral, Aug. 27. My text was Mk. 16: 15. I held three meetings in the day. Two were baptised in the afternoon. I received an earnest request to hold a series of meetings with them at my earliest convenience.

There had been a Disciple church in the place, and a Methodist class near by: but these two bodies did not work together agreeably. The people lost much of their interest, the meetings ran down and finally were given up. It was as cold a place as I ever want to be in.

Commenced Oct. 22, gave five discourses to full congregations that gave good attention, but no special moral movement, only they agreed to hold weekly prayer meetings, if Br. Graves of Henrietta would meet with them. This was agreed too. At my return, Nov. 19, there was quite a good interest. Prayer meetings had been largely attended; but I learned that during my absence the Methodist preacher had preached to them, and also the Disciple minister, and one of the old Christian order, and the last had organized a church of thirteen members. I gave three discourses to crowded houses, but there was a great want of living laborers in the meeting. One who had been a deacon in the Disciple church, said he had learned since he had come to these meetings that baptism was not all of religion. He believed it had its place in the economy of God, but it was sometimes presented in a wrong way. For his part he could say he had made no advances since he was baptised: but now he would lay all the altar and go into the vineyard of his Master one of the work hands. By this time there was more spirituality than formerly. But no break down in the ranks of unbelievers.

My next visit was Dec. 24, in the even[illegible]. The old Christian order h[illegible] meetings the same day [illegible] they had obtained Eld. [illegible] of their ablest divines, [illegible] preach [illegible] them that day. His text [illegible] the a. m. was the thief on the cross. [illegible] asked him to take part in the opening [illegible]vices. He did so. I chose Rev. [illegible], and gave for a subject, a history of the events and time of the opening of the seals, making but few remarks concering the souls under the altar, then gave liberty for questions or remarks. Eld. W. arose; said there was a good many kinds of wheat, but it was all wheat, and so of corn, and so of mind, on theology. He had read a great many commentators on the Revelation: but the best he ever saw was the one that said "let it alone," and as for those souls under the altar, they were in heaven—bringing the usual proofs. About the coming of Christ, he believed he came where two or three meet, and when we die, quoting Mat. 24: 44. Also he believed Christ would come personally, but that time was far distant and concealed in the mind of God. Also he believed in a resurrection, but with what body, who could say?

I said I was glad he had given us a synopsis of his faith. All I wished to say was, that taking his faith for his lamp, he must walk sometimes (to say the least) in darkness: for Jesus says the apocalypse is a "Revelation God gave to him; and he had sent an angel to make it known unto his church, and had proclaimed a blessing would follow them that read it, or even heard it and kept what was written. However the brother might be of that class that the Savior spoke of that were so rich in goods they had no need of anything more. (Rev. 3: 17.) As it respects the souls under the altar he differed widely from Paul, who speaking about the pious saints who had died in his day, who, he declares, had perished, if there was no resurrection. (1 Cor. 15: 18." As to the coming of Christ, at death, at conversion, etc., Paul said he had been here once, and to them [illegible]at look for him he would come a se[illegible]d time. If the brother could get an [illegible]termediate coming between the first an[illegible]d second he was ahead of me.

I then said, "Brother, do yo[illegible]elive in the literal re-living of the dead?" He replied, "I am not obliged to answer." I said, "Certainly not: I asked the question for your own benefit: for I feared from what you said before you took your seat that some in this audience would judge that you did no believe in the literal re-living of the dead. I therefore took this method to have you change that statement."

He arose and said that he believed in the resurrection, but Paul said, With what body do they come? There was a natural body and a spiritual body. He was then living in the seventh body he had had since he was born, and that there was not a particle of matter in his whole system that was in him seven years ago. He was not the same man.

I replied that he misunderstood Paul; for he made "It" that was the "natural body" the same "it" that constituted the spiritual body; proving thereby a literal re-living of the dead. I then asked him: "Suppose I stole a horse of you or some one else—sold it in LaCrosse, got money enough to go to Canada and remained there seven years. At my return would you get out a writ for me?" No answer. Suppose I was brought before the court, and I declared I was not the man: would they acquit me? (Mum.)

Again I asked: "Are you a married man? (Mum.) I know you are, and you was married years ago, and are still living with the same woman that, if you are sincere in what you say, is not your wife. Why not be honest and tell your wife you are not her lawful husband; or get some one to marry you over every seven years; or go get some one else you may like better? Why don't you tell your children that you are not their father? Their father died when they were seven years old.

We then sung the doxology and I asked him to pronounce the benediction. I have not seen him since. The people made request for me to still continue my labors with them. On my return I found that the Disciples had held a series of meetings, and also Methodists and Disciples had removed their organizations. The Methodists had made arrangements to preach to them as they might need. I had very full congregations, and on Sunday closed the evening service with the Lord's supper. It was a precious time. I then told them they knew how things were with them when I commenced to labor with them. I was glad of so much interest and good understanding and feeling among them: that as they had the ministry of three orders I did not deem it best to leave another appointment with them, as I had calls elsewhere. I wished them to be faithful and love one another and pray for me.

It was hard to part with them. I had received many tokens of kindness from them, especially the young people that comprized more than half of the audience. My prayer is that they may all come to Jesus and be ready for his coming. Amen.

From O. D. Gibson.

My late discussion reported in the TIMES was at Palmer, instead of Morrisonville, as expected. Some at M. being dissatisfied that it was not held here, besought me to accept a challenge of a Methodist minister by the name of D. S. Snow. Upon their pledge that he should treat me and the subject with candor and Christian courtesy, I accepted; he also signing an agreement to the same effect. He was to affirm three points, and myself but two. However, we discussed but one point, which was this:

Resolved, That the soul of man is an immaterial substance.

To sustain this, my opponent arrayed all the belief in ghosts, shades, hobgoblins, and phantoms from the ancient poetry down to the Spiritism of present day, interspersed with tirades against materialism. He claimed immateriality of the soul because we have consciousness. I proved the same for animals. He claimed it because man reasons. I proved the animals do the same. He then attempted to apply some Scriptures, but with the same vague inappropriateness in their application as his former illogical reasonings. But all this was nothing to his personal comparisons, theatrical and clownish slurs, and ridicule. What he could not argue down he would laugh down, or attempt to. He was repeatedly called to order by the moderators. I gave notice before the third session, if there was not more candor and Christian courtesy exhibited during that session, it would close the debate. The moderators decided that his course was abusive, and if persisted in, I would be justified in closing the debate. He denied it all, and continued in the old track, so the debate closed, to the regret of many. I remained in the place and gave several sermons, and then left for other fields of labor.

Met on the Sunday following with Br. Calkins, at Maple Grove, five miles from Palmer. Here is a small church that I organized over a year ago; they are growing and the truth is prospering in the neighborhood. I expect to visit them once a month, for a season. I visited a district three miles west from Springfield, where the seed is taking some root, and I hope will bear an hundred fold. I have received a challenge from F. M. Jacobs, a Campbellite Christian, to discuss the life and death question, March 12, to continue some days.

I wish to mention one or two thoughts presented by Eld. Worley in our debate at Palmer. He presented 1 Pet. 3: 18, 19, to prove the conscious state of the dead, claiming that Christ's spirit, while his body was dead, went and preached to the spirits of the antediluvians. I inquired what he went to preach to them for? Was it to taunt them, or was there probation in hell after death? He replied he went to this prison-hell, or hades to comfort them with the news that the promise was fulfilled, i. e., that he, the promised Messiah, had come and died! But he did not tell how this could comfort them, they having been disobedient, unless there was probation for them. I write this for the information of others, to whom no doubt like myself, it will be news to learn why Christ visited "hell," and what the burden of his sermon there was. I expressed surprise at the information, and desired the worthy gentleman to inform the audience the source from whence he derived it, but get no light on the point. So all will have to take it for what it is worth. It strikes me as being one of Paul's last-day "fables" that were to take the place of "sound doctrine" with the masses. How blessed the truth looks beside of error!

An Appeal.

In a recent conversation with Br. T. M. Preble, I became aware of his loss of the plates of the "200 Stories for Children," in the Chicago fire.

He had made all the necessary arrangements to issue a new and much needed edition, in Boston, when he became aware of his loss, and of course, could not proceed with the work without help.

I remember reading these well selected stories, when a boy, with the greatest pleasure; and had strongly urged Br. Preble to issue another edition. He says his loss will be about $200. In order to make up this loss, I hereby offer to be one of twenty to pledge ten dollars each, the amount to be paid when the whole has been subscribed. Let those who have the means take hold of the matter, and the object will soon be attained.

O. P. ALLEN.

Pledge to aid Br. Preble make up loss on plates of 200 Stories:
O P Allen, $10 00.

NOTE: The plates had been kept in a fire proof vault, but with many more had been stored for a few days, in course of removal to a new vault, in another place. Many thousands of dollars worth of plates were destroyed with them. On our part, we will make the plates of a new edition at cost. ED. TIMES.

Vallejo--California.

Yesterday (March 24) was a High-Day for the Advent Christian church in this city. Their commodious, convenient, and well built chapel (finished, save plastering, which will be done as soon as the rains are over) was dedicated to the Lord by appropriate services.

Prayer, by Eld. D. D. Reed. Reading of the Scriptures, by Eld. D. C. Abbott. Sermon, by Eld. O. R. Fassett.

This Advent Christian chapel Eld. Reed calls "the first Light House on this coast." I have had the privilege of preaching the dedication sermon of the first A. C. chapel in Wisconsin, Minnesota, and now in California and on this coast.

The lot on which the house is built is the munificent gift of Gen. Frisbie, of San Francisco, a large land-holder in this city, and not an Adventist. Without this generous donation we could not have built at this time. The house was erected under the superintendence of Brn. David West and A. G. Young, who, together with other brethren and some citizens who volunteered their services, gave in their time and labor free. Near seven hundred ($700) dollars was pledged on the day of dedication to free the chapel of all debt, and finish it! The church here is in earnest.

In the afternoon I baptised four candidates, the Baptist clergyman of the city, Rev. Mr. Hatch, offering a fervent prayer by the water side. In the evening six members were received into the church.

Br. Reed and myself, and our wives, intend holding meetings each evening through the week. This evening we ordained Br. David Abbott, of Saratoga, Cal., to the work of the Christian ministry. He is a man of ability, influence and piety, and will be a noble help to our cause in this State. On Thursday evening next we ordain Br. Norton, of Santa Clara, who goes direct to Oregon, furnished with means for travel, and with tracts and books, by Br. and Sr. Reed, to distribute in that new field. They send him before them to that State, and intend to follow soon. Br. Reed wishes me to accompany them.

Br. Grant is expected here next week. O. R. FASSETT.

Some will believe and be baptised: others remain careless or obdurate.——Five were added to the church at Kings, S. H. Ripley Co. Ind., at the close of a recent meeting by Br. G. W. Green.——A church has been organized at Almont, Mich., by Brn. Paton and Beals. Fourteen members, with good prospects.——A California Correspondent remarks—"The early Christians were allowed to worship in catacombs at Rome; but in Sacramento even the 'cellars' of the churches are denied to the Advent Christians." Festivals, and the like, are freely admitted 'up stairs.'——A brother says he not long since heard an immaterialist singing—"Had I the wings of Noah's dove, I soon would soar to worlds above." Correspondent wants to know if we think he would go if the wings were provided. We think if he could go in the body, very likely he would: but if he must be disembodied, or dead, he would cling to his life, precious life.——Br. John H. Paton baptised two souls at Almont, Mich., on the 7th.——Twelve have started to serve God in a meeting by Br. Thomson, at Helena, Wis.——Br. Brown has organized two new churches in Arkansas—one at Flatwoods, the other at Iron Point. A good work is going on in that State.——Sr. A. E. Rathbun has just closed a two weeks meeting at Broughton, Ill., from which we have an excellent report. Seven souls were converted and much prejudice removed.——Eld. L. F. Cole, of Stewartstown, N. H., arrived here last week, and is to make his home in the West. He will settle and labor where the Master of the vineyard may direct. He is an efficient and earnest worker, and is deeply interested in the unity and success of our work in the West, and will be a true yoke-fellow.

A Correction.

Why will "seventh-day" men quote from Jones' Church History, p. 260, that the Waldenses "kept the Sabbath day," and in such a manner as to lead the reader to conclude that it refers to Saturday, or the old Jewish seventh day, when, on p. 245 of the same history, it is stated that, "they ceased from working on no day EXCEPT THE LORD'S DAY, and referring to the first day of the week.

Are such teachers to be trusted?

T. M. PREBLE.

Correspondence.

From Wm. McCullock.

Through the providence of God, by the earnest solicitation of brethren in N. W. Missouri, I came to this place (Quitman, Nodaway Co.) to help Br. Hink and others in sounding the glad tidings of Jesus' soon coming, and the resurrection of God's dear saints to inherit the glories of his reign on the renewed earth. I received a hearty greeting from Br. Richard Black and others. I arrived at Maryville March 21, and was greatly disappointed to learn that Br. Hink was away from home, attending the Q. M. in Cass Co. Iowa. Hoping he would soon return, I concluded to lose no time nor let the disappointment defeat the object for which I came. So I went to work in the name of the Lord, to cheer the hearts of the dear saints in Quitman, and add my testimony to the truths already presented by Br. Hink, who, under God, has been instrumental in bringing some fifty into the fold of Christ, to wait for him from heaven. It was indeed heart-cheering to see so many new converts to Jesus and his precious truth; and they are not backward to acknowledge what Jesus has done for them.

Here I also met some of our old and tried veterans in the cause—several to whom I preached for years in Illinois. Among them were Sr. Samuel Black, Sr. Watson, and Br. W. McLothan and wife, who came twenty-five miles to see and hear me preach once more. Praise the Lord for brethren and sisters, yes, and fathers and mothers in the Lord. And sometimes the good Lord gives us children in the faith. God bless them all.

Well, we visited and labored through the week till Friday, when the coming of Br. Hink was to me like the coming of Titus to Paul. Although strangers in the flesh, I felt at first sight that he was my brother in Christian bonds; and he welcomed me to this new and interesting field as a co-laborer. God bless him in his arduous work. The field here is large, the harvest great, and it seems to be ripe. But the laborers are few. Would that the Lord of the harvest raise up laborers for this great field.

Br. Hink is doing a good work; but his health is poor, and his constitution feeble. He needs help. Calls from every direction are pressing hard, with two or three churches to supply. Who will come to his aid?

I had hoped to have seen Brn. Dugger and McClure upon this visit, but the failure of the notice to appear in the TIMES of my visit to this place is in all probability the reason in part, they not knowing of my contemplated visit to this place. And if I ever am permitted to visit this section again, I hope to have due notice given through the TIMES, and thus enjoy the privilege of seeing all the laborers in this vicinity.

[NOTE: Br. McCullock's appointment was received just as we were moving to Chicago, and after the last paper published at Buchanan was printed. We trust no appointments will ever again be delayed by a removal of the office. ED.]

The cause here is young, but God has raised up some strong men to sustain it.

This is a beautiful country—high, rolling prairie, with rich soil, especially near the Nodaway River. While standing upon an elevated prairie overlooking the river, and the lovely landscape spread out before my view, a sort of inspiration seemed to come over me as my eyes feasted on the sight, and I took out my diary, and almost for the first time in my life, tried to give vent in poetical strains to my feelings:

On Nodaway's rich and fertile banks
A wandering pilgrim stands,
And views with wonder and delight
Missouri's sunny lands.

Here, once the native Indian roamed,
And hunted with delight;
But oh! how changed! the white man's march
Has driven him from sight.

But, oh the Nodaway River's banks
And rolling lands around,
Are unsurpassed in any State
That ever yet I've found.

It is a land that's rich enough,
And pleasant to behold,
And can't be beat in any place
For richness of its soil.

'Tis healthy, too, for all who come
From other lands to roam,
Or seek a fortune in the West,
Or find a pleasant home.

Well, Br. Himes, this soliloquy was broken by the announcement that it was time to start for meeting, and no one knows what might have come of it if I had been left alone a little longer to view the rapturous scene. But here the curtain seemed to fall, and I was not able to catch the strain again.

Sunday forenoon I made my last effort with the church at Quitman, and came to Maryville with Br. Hink, to spend the week holding up the precious truths of God's sacred word in the Christian chapel. Here we have a fair hearing, but much prejudice exists, and everything seems to conspire against the success of the truth.

After preaching four evenings it seemed to me that the people were determined not to hear. In fact I learned that they were warned by their shepherds not to run after or hear this new doctrine. So they gave me a severe letting alone, and I concluded to shake the dust off my feet as a witness against them.

To-night we go five miles east, into Br. Wright's neighborhood, where the Macedonian cry is heard. May the good Lord go with us. Our time is limited, and I must soon return to Illinois again.

I have withdrawn from all pastoral labor for the ensuing year, purposely, to help in new fields, where God in his providence may open the door. And I would say to the scattered and isolated brethren, if they wish my labors in their neighborhoods, I will endeavor to respond to their calls as fast as I possibly can. My P. O. address is New Rutland, Ill.

I expect to spend a month or more before long in the Southern part of Illinois, in the vicinity of Union and Johnson counties, as Brn. Lawver and Childs may arrange, of which I hope to give due notice in the TIMES.

From Geo. W. Miller.

I have just returned from a tour among the churches. As a general thing I leave them in better heart and spirits than I find them. They seem to love the truth as well as ever, but the great trouble is to live the truth. The great power of truth is gone, if the life element is lacking. It seems to me to be the work for this time to bring the churches up to that standard of truth which is designed to make ready a people for the coming of the Lord, an event my soul believes is nigh at hand.

From F. E. Cook, Saline Co., Mo.

Br. A. F. Dugger has been holding meetings in this neighborhood, and as the result, has organized an Advent Christian Church of twenty-five members.

We are building a house for worship, and when it is completed we want some good minister to locate here and preach the good word to us. Br. Dugger's health is very poor, for which reason he will be compelled to give up preaching for at least one year. Though we fail to obtain preaching, we do not purpose to die out, for we have men of experience and talent, and withal, good Bible students in our organization, and we are determined to work together in social meeting, that the good cause move forward.

From Br. D. S. Clark.

I drop a few lines to let the friends and brethren know that I am again at home, after an absence of four months in south-western Iowa and am now ready to labor as they may desire. My P. O. address will be Amboy, Ill. I found good brethren and sisters in Iowa, ready to work, and the Lord blessed them and added many to their numbers, such as will be saved, it is hoped. May the good Lord continue to bless them, is my prayer.

Our Young Folks.

Little Children.

What can little children do?
  Little preachers of the word,
Can those tiny dimpled hands
  Labor for the blessed Lord?
Little hearts can beat for him,
  Thinking how he blessed them;
Took them in his arms of love,
  And smiled as he carried them.
Little lips can speak for him,
  Careful that no naughty word
And no harsh and angry tones,
  Only loving ones, be heard.
Little feet can run for him,
  Carrying comforts to his poor;
Gentle messengers of love,
  How they'll bless you o'er and o'er!
Little children, love the Savior,
  Strive his blessed work to do;
Then among the "many mansions,"
  One he will prepare for you.

How Not to Do an Errand.

George was sent to the fish market to buy a mackerel for breakfast. "It is for this morning's breakfast, George," said his mother, "therefore be as spry as you can." Twenty minutes would have done the errand. Twenty minutes passed—thirty—forty—fifty—fifty-five. Where is George?

George went to the market spry. The first thing which caught his eye was a big iron pot, into which a man was shoveling lobsters—to be boiled—green lobsters, which came out red. That, George thought, was funny enough, and he must look; but, you see, it took time, and that time was not his. Then he thought of the mackerel and bought it. On his way home he met a small dog with a red blanket on his back. That took his eye, and he had to stop and look; and another boy stopped and looked, and they both stopped and had a bit of a talk about something else; but, you see, it took time, and that time was not his. Presently he went along and he met another boy, and the other boy had something to say; and there was a loud "Whoa! whoa!" down the side street, which they both ran down, just to see what the matter was with a cart and horse at odds with each other. All this ate up the minutes. The cook, out of all patience, ran out to the gate with her gridiron in her hand, to see what had become of the mackerel; for the coffee was waiting, and the cakes were waiting, and what was worse, the children were hungry, and the father was going off on the cars, which, like time and tide, wait for no man. At last, the father had to go without his breakfast, or with only half a breakfast; and there was General Delay, with his two aids, Fretting and Grumbling, putting this well ordered family quite out of sorts. At last, the cook at the gate spied George shuffling along, his toes one way and his eyes another. The mackerel came at last, but did not taste half as good as it would in season. Is this the way to do an errand? Will a boy who does his work so ever be wanted? I think not.—Child's Paper.

A Puzzle.

The following puzzle is said to have been composed by the Bishop of Oxford: I have a trunk with two lids, two caps, two musical instruments, two established measures, and a great number of instruments a carpenter cannot dispense with: then I have always about me two fine fish and a great number of smaller ones, two lofty trees, fine flowers, and the fruit of an indigenous plant, two playful animals, and a number of smaller and less tame breed, a fine stag, some whips without handles, some weapons of warfare and a number of weathercocks, the steps of a hotel, the House of Commons on the eve of a division, two students or scholars, and some Spanish grandees to wait upon me. Answer—The human body, eyelids, knee-caps, drums of the ear, feet, nails, soles, muscles, palms, tulips, hips, calves, hares, heart, lashes, arms and blades, veins, insteps, eyes and nose, pupils, tendons.

The Boy and His Newspaper

(From the Herald and Presbyter.)

Now, a word about the newspapers. I always feel hopeful of a boy who reads habitually the daily or weekly papers. I set all such down for live, wide-awake boys, when I see them taking such an interest in the current news of the day.

But I wait first till I see to what part of the paper they turn most eagerly. If, as the sheet is unfolded, they run over the telegraph column to see what is passing in other countries as well as our own, then I know theirs is an intelligent interest. Their ears have been open to the discussions among the older members of the family and their mind has been at work, too. There is no excuse for ignorance now. When all the nations of the earth are knocking at each other's doors, we may learn what we will.

If I see the eye brightened over some noble deed of charity to the poor and suffering, then I am glad; for I know there is a generous spark down in their own hearts that shall yet kindle into a flame of its own, and glad den some other day with other noble deeds.

But if I see them, with eager interest, reading the horrible details of crime and murder, hope dies out of my heart, and I turn away with real pain It is a crying evil of our day, thus publishing in such minuteness those loathsome details of crime. I see no end or purpose of justice to be answered by it, but only fearful harm. Your young hearts should turn in instant recoil from such brutal force.

Boys, if the public journal, that should be a school of better morals, spreads this snare before you, do not walk in it. It will blunt all your finer feelings, and familiarize your mind with forms of cruelty and sin, that you otherwise would never come in contact with. Every one knows that anything made familiar to the mind loses half its deformity. Never suffer yourselves to read one of those articles. If your eye catches one of those startling headings, pass it instantly by. Do not fill that mind of yours, which should be all manly and noble, with those dreadful pictures of sin and guilt.

Conference Minutes

Missouri and Iowa.

QUARTERLY MEETING.

Our quarterly conference meeting, held at Lewis, Cass Co., Iowa, March 16, 1872, was well attended, and very interesting. We had the use of the M. E. Chapel. The preaching brethren present were D. S. Clark, D. O. Hink, D. L. Kent, M. B. Hubbell, E. Blanchard, G. L. McClure and W. Morphy. Delegates were present from the several churches in the district, and some brethren lately settled in this section met with us for the first time. Three churches, on request, were admitted into the Conference. One of these, at Greenfield, has been raised up this winter, under the labors of Elder D. S. Clark, who has labored in this section to good acceptance, and greatly to the upbuilding of the churches. We now have six churches in this quarterly conference. We are all in earnest, united and harmonious, and not ashamed of the name Advent. Our meeting commenced Friday evening, with preaching by Br. Clark, whose vigorous style just suited the people. Br. Hink also preached to good acceptance, but was obliged to leave in company with Br. Kent on Monday. The people showing a willingness to hear, Br. Clark stayed and preached five evenings longer, having a good audience every time. Quite an interest is awakened, and many are disposed to read and find out if these things are so. The brethren here are much encouraged and hope for good results. Two were baptised. One thing contributed to the interest of the meeting in no small measure: we had an able corps of singers who could do justice to our glorious hymns, and best of all, they could sing in the spirit and understanding.

To the brethren scattered abroad we would say that we have found these conference meetings a source of great strength, and every meeting shows an increase.

For my own part I confess that I have felt an honest pride as I looked around upon so many honest and manly faces, assembled at Lewis, for the purpose of laying plans for, and encouraging one another in the great work of spreading the light concerning the speedy coming of the blessed One, and concurrent events as set forth in the sacred volume. Our love feast on Sabbath morn was indeed a feast; the Lord was with us. Elder Clark has made many friends here, and will be sure of a good hearing if he ever comes again. Our next conference is to be at Greenfield, Adair Co., about the first of June. Due notice will be given in the TIMES. The officers of the conference are, A. Collins, President; W. Morphy, Secretary, and E. Blanchard, Treasurer.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT Q. M.

Convened in Munger S. H. March 20, and continued over Lord's day. There were but few of the preachers present. Most of the preaching was by Br. Wilson, Sr. Tuttle and Br. C. Fox. Brn. Preston, and Holler reported by letter; the former has sickness at home, and death of his father; the latter has a protracted meeting in progress. Jackson church reported seven withdrawn (disaffected,) but a rising interest in the congregation. They have preaching every Sunday p. m. and evening in the chapel, corner of Ganson St. and Lansing Ave. Churches at Rives, Aurleius, Grand Ledge, Delta and Charlotte represented. A good interest through the meetings.

QUARTERLY MEETING.

The A. C. Conference of Northern Penn. and Southern New York held its second Q. M. at Hornellsville, N. Y. March 23. All the brethren invited to participate with us. S. W. Owens, S. W. Shirley, S. Gates appointed a committee on devotional exercises. Elds. A. C. Newell and E. F. Sergisson, visiting brethren. Ministers of the Conference present: W. Marlatt, J. W. Taylor, A. H. Briggs. Absent: D. B. Hunt, Benj. Butler, Ira Stocum, E. H. Eggleston.

The church of God at Little Marsh, Pa. was received into the Conference.

Brn. S. Gates, S. W. Shirley and A. H. Briggs were appointed committee on campmeeting, to confer with committees from the New York and Hoosick Valley Conferences.

The religious exercises were usually interesting.

Adjourned to call of the President.

Thus ended our second Q. M. of the present year. The representation was rather small, but we had a good spiritual feast. Union, harmony, and love were the prevailing elements; and to God be all the praise. Brethren, let us be faithful until our Savior comes.

Kansas

MISSION ASSOCIATION.

Brethren and sisters of the "like precious faith" throughout the land:

WHEREAS, We have long felt that Kansas is peculiarly destitute of the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom, and knowing that at present there is no organized means of proclaiming it to the inhabitants of this state, and believing that under the blessing of God, an Association can be organized by which the "truths we hold dear," may be sounded throughout our borders, to the glory of God, and the preparation of a people who shall be "ready," as a bride adorned for her husband, in the day of his coming, we have therefore proposed the organization of such an Association, under the following Constitution and By-Laws:

CONSTITUTION.

ART. 1. This Association shall be known as the Kansas Advent Christian Mission Association, and shall be composed of persons who shall conform to its regulations irrespective of class or locality, and each member shall be entitled to one vote on all general questions coming before it.

ART. 2. The objects of this Association shall be to proclaim, as far as possible throughout the State, the speedy, personal coming of Christ, together with kindred truths held dear by us, and thus prepare a people who shall be ready at the Lord's appearing: (1) By the employment of at least one State Evangelist; (2) by securing and maintaining a State Mission tent; (3) by the employment of further Evangelical labor; (4) by the distribution of such books, tracts and papers, as are designed to promote the interests of the cause.

ART. 3. The annual payment of one dollar into the treasury of this Association shall be sufficient to constitute membership; considering, always, Evangelists as members during their employment as such by the Association.

ART. 4. Ten members shall be requisite for the organizing of this Association, which shall not be dissolved, its property transferred, nor its objects changed, while there are within the State this number of active members.

ART. 5. The officers of this Association shall be a President, Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer, and such Committees as may be deemed necessary. The four above specified officers shall be residents of this State, who, after the first year, shall be elected at the annual session of this Association, except as otherwise provided in this Constitution and by-laws.

ART. 6. It shall be the duty of the President to preside during the sittings of this Association, to keep order, submit all motions and resolutions that come properly before it, and declare the result; to sign all papers of the acts and doings of the Association; when necessary, call extra sessions, and to take such other supervision as the interest of the cause may demand.

ART. 7. It shall be the duty of the Vice President, in the absence of the President, to take his place, perform his duties, and at all times render him such ossistance as may be necessary.

ART. 8. It shall be the duty of the Secretary to keep an accurate record of the doings and receipts of this Association, in a book kept for that purpose; sign all orders drawn upon the Treasurer; read papers coming before the Association; keep an annual record of the names of the members and officers of this Association; conduct correspondence; prepare reports for publication; publish the time and place of holding annual sessions in two of the leading Advent journals, at least two months previous thereto; and perform such other duties as may rightly belong to the office; to keep and preserve all books, papers, or other property entrusted to his or her care, and deliver up the same to his or her successor in office.

ART. 9. It shall be the duty of the Treasurer to safely keep all monies placed in his hands, until drawn out by an order signed by the President and Secretary; and to make an annual report of all sums received and paid out; and to deliver up to his or her successor in office, all property belonging to the Association.

ART. 10. This Association shall hold within the State one annual session, and such special sessions as may be deemed important to its work.

ART. 11. This Association may make for its further regulation By-Laws not repugnant to this Constitution.

ART. 12. The provisions of this Constitution may be deviated from, at any time, by a two-thirds vote of all its members present at any session, and amended at any annual session of the Association by a two-thirds majority of all authorized voters at the time of such session, provided such amendment has been proposed at the previous annual meeting.

BY-LAWS.

ART. 1. This Association shall hold its first annual session on the second Monday in February, 1873, and thereafter at such time and place as the Association or its authorized agents shall appoint.

ART. 2. When convened, the Association shall be called to order (1) by the President, if present; (2) by the Vice President; (3) Clerk, or (4), if none of the foregoing are present to act, by any member. When, after opening exercises, all vacant offices shall be temporarily filled, either by appointment from the Chair, or vote of members.

ART. 3. After the meeting is thus organized, and the Constitution and By-Laws of this Association read, it shall be the duty of the Secretary and Treasurer to immediately open their books for accessions, or continuation of membership.

ART. 4. The membership fee may be paid into the treasury of this Association at any time, but after the first year all membership shall date from the last annual session, or the next following, as the applicant may choose: and until the membership fee has been paid and duly recorded, no person shall be entitled to a voice in its deliberations, nor to hold office, unless otherwise provided in this Constitution and By-Laws, except by a two-thirds vote of all its members present.

ART. 5. All persons donating to this Association, and desiring to become members, shall specify the same to the Secretary, either verbally or in writing, giving the amount paid in, with name and address.

ART. 6. Members not present shall be entitled to a voice in the deliberations of this Association by sealed ballot, accompanied by name and address.

ART. 7. All officers shall be elected by ballot, and the candidate receiving the greatest number of votes shall be declared elected, who, as soon as notified, shall immediately proceed to the duties of his office, and perform the same until the election and notification of his successor.

ART. 8. All officers, except by absolute resignation or inability, shall be considered in nomination for the same office for the next succeeding term.

ART. 9. In case of death, removal from the State, or non-performance of duty of any officer of this Association, it shall be the duty of the Secretary, under the call of not less than six members, to give notice for the filling of such vacancy at least one month previous thereto, in at least two of the leading Advent journals. And should this occur with the Secretary, any other officer may act in his stead.

ART. 10. This Association shall have a Business Committee of five or more members, including President and Vice President, all except which shall be chosen yearly by ballot, and whose duty it shall be to act in behalf of the Association in all matters not otherwise provided for.

ART. 11. The remuneration of the Evangelists employed shall be stipulated, and they held amenable to this Association. And it shall be the duty of those employed as Evangelists to report progress to the Chairman of the Business Committee, semi-monthly.

ART. 12. It shall be the duty of the Business Committee, through its Chairman, to report quarterly to the Secretary, their acts in behalf of, and the incidental expenses of this Association.

ART. 13. Any provision of these By-Laws may be deviated from by a majority vote of members present at any session of this Association, subject to the same rule of amendment as the Constitution.

Under the foregoing Preamble, Constitution and By-Laws, we organized this Association at Bero, Kansas, on the 31st of March, 1872, with a membership of twenty-one persons, and a fund of seventy-two dollars. The following officers were elected:

President, H. J. Munson, Girard; Vice President, Jesse Faulkner, Bero; Secretary, Tenie Bozley, Bero; Treasurer, Warder Dunbar, Bero.

Business Committee—A. M. Sidwell, Girard; D. D. Hunter and Riley Faulkner, of Bero.

The Business Committee employed H. J. Munson as State Evangelist, for a term of three months, at the rate of $300 a year, not including traveling expenses.

APPEAL FOR AID.

Brethren, sisters, and friends of this cause, everywhere. We wish to address you in behalf of this infant Association, and the destitution of the cause in our State.

First, to the lovers and friends of this 'blessed hope' and glorious gospel of the kingdom within the borders of our own State. You are well aware of the importance of a work among us to the end that the 'present truth' may be proclaimed, that all who will give heed may be brought to embrace the simplicity of, the revelations of God, and so a people gathered from out all classes, who shall love his appearing and be ready for his kingdom.

Many of you have long sighed and prayed for a work of this kind in your midst. As you have read through the beloved papers of the blessed proclamation being sounded in other places, your heart's desire has been—"Oh! that it might be given in our nighborhood and in our State!"

Yes, all of us who love these truths, have felt these longings: and perhaps have been led to inquire, "Why are the tidings being carried to all or nearly all other States, and we left out?" We have felt isolated and weak, able to do but very little at most for the promotion of the cause that we love so well, and the truths that we deem so important in these last days of peril.

Here, then, is an opportunity for 'coming up to the help of the Lord,' and combining all our strength with a reasonable indulgence of hope that if we exercise a self-sacrificing faith, God will raise up unto us friends and help from abroad for this field, now all ripe for the harvest. We know that many of the people of Kansas are poor, but cannot we sacrifice something, even of our poverty, for the sake of the better and more enduring riches? We who have formed this little Association have done so, giving of our penury and limited means, by individuals or families, sums of from $1 to $20, to start this good work. Will you, dear brethren and sisters in other parts of the State do likewise? Will you make the immediate sacrifice of all that you can, and more as soon as you can? We wish at the earliest possible date to put a tent into the field, and press the work to the utmost. The fund already raised is nearly sufficient to maintain the Evangelist three months. Shall we not receive that hearty and prompt response from others, that the tent may be in the field at as early a date as the season will admit, with ample funds to carry the work steadily and actively on? Let us work while the day lasts, and so stand fully approved in the day of our Lord's coming.

Brethren abroad: We cannot but ask your assistance in this matter. You may become members of the Association, but whether you do or not, will you not enclose something according to your ability, and forward to the Secretary or Treasurer of this Association?

Churches in the 'blessed hope,' who enjoy these truths, the preaching of which the people of this State are almost entirely destitute, will you not consider our case and cause, and form yourselves into a little Kansas Mission Society, and thus aid us from time to time until we shall be better able to sustain the cause ourselves?

Preaching brethren: Will not you, too, remember us in your congregations, and to friends who are able to help. Make mention of this little Mission Society in Kansas, which is trying to struggle into existence.

To the American Advent Mission Society: We have rejoiced from time to time, as we have read of the glorious truths being proclaimed in other hitherto destitute places, through your assistance. We feel that there is now hardly one (and we hope not one) State in the Union as destitute as ours. Will you not give us some prompt and as liberal aid as you may feel justified, and as you may hope will most glorify God?

Although this Association started with a very small membership, we are in earnest, and think we are organized upon a sound basis, whereby great good may be done. Shall we fail for want of means? The Lord grant to send us a prompt, negative answer by breathing a spirit of earnest self-sacrifice into the hearts of the lovers of the cause throughout the borders of our own State, and ready hearts and hands of the lovers of the truth abroad to aid us all they can. Aid us now; and the Lord bless.

All donations of money, and applications for membership, should be addressed to the Secretary, Miss Tenie Bozley, Bero, Cherokee Co., Kansas, and will be acknowledged through the TIMES and Crisis.

We desire to hear immediately from brethren throughout the State, setting forth the probabilities of the accomplishment of a work in their locality. Meantime scatter tracts, talk to your neighbors, &c., and thus prepare the way.

Correspond with the Chairman of Business Committee, A. M. Sidwell, Girard, Kansas.

Donations of Advent books, tracts, and papers are solicited, which should be addressed to H. J. Munson, Girard, Kansas.

H. J. MUNSON.

THE NEW HEAVEN AND THE NEW EARTH.

A Sermon Preached in Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, Newport, Ky., by Rev. Stephen Bowers.

TEXT.—"Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." (2 Pet. 3: 13.)

This is a wonderful planet. It measures two hundred and fifty-six thousand millions of cubic miles, upon which live more than a thousand millions of human beings, and an inferior order of animal life more numerous than the leaves of its forests. As motion is the first condition of vitality, everything connected with our earth is moving. Our globe is continually describing five or six different kind of motions—its rotary, from west to east; its annualar, in which it follows in the line of an ellipse around the sun; its rythmical swayings, as a top turns around and bends over successively in every direction, describing with its axis an ideal cone; its nutations, or more rapid swayings, caused by the attraction of the moon and the vicinity of certain planets; and its translatory motion, by which it is dragged through endless space in the train of the sun at the rate of about 44 miles per second, describing, it would seem, an ellipse around some great center. Besides these motions the continents themselves are slowly moving around the globe, while some portions of the earth's crust are gradually rising and other portions subsiding. But nature brings about the most wonderful events without even the knowledge of the beings she nourishes. Time is the earth's attribute, and mountains are raised until their summits kiss the clouds, and broad seas are dried up without so much as "disturbing the flight of an insect."

Compared with other worlds ours is but as of the balance, lost in the midst of the Milky Way; with great worlds glowing above us, around us, and beneath us. But though in magnitude our earth may be lowest in rank among the heavenly bodies, yet in the variety of its details it may surpass them all. It may have the grandest mountains, the broadest seas, the most beautiful rivers, the loveliest forests, and the purest skies; it may be the only world where Deity veiled himself in humanity. It must be an attractive and interesting world where all these are found. Can we be censured for desiring to live here as long as it is God's will?

But this earth with all its loveliness is but a fallen planet. From the time it was first peopled with human beings it has been a theater for strife and crime. It has been so drenched with human blood that it is necessary that the purifying fires of the Almighty should pass over it and purify it from the effects of crime, and fit it, as we believe, for a higher order of life than it now possesses. That fire is to be the agent in this renovation is clearly indicated in the Scriptures. "For a fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase, and shall set on fire the foundations of the mountains." (Deut. 32: 22.) "For, behold, the Lord will and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire." (Is. 66: 14.) "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with a fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up." (2 Pet. 3: 10.)

There is no conflict between science and the Scriptures on this subject. It is evident that portions of the interior of our globe are liquid with intense heat. In many places heat increases at the rate of one degree to fifty feet as we go downward. In seventy miles this would give us more than seven thousand degrees of heat, which would be sufficient to melt any substance known to the chemist. It is also known that volcanoes exist in every portion of our globe. They seem to be for the escape of the steam and heat within. Here is material close at hand for the final conflagration. As electricity had much to do in the formation of our globe, and especially in its development during the long ages of geology, it will also aid in its purification. God may employ it as the agent for destroying the equilibrium of nature, and for changing the organic laws of combination. Thus water, which covers three-fourths of our globe, may have its gasses—oxygen and hydrogen—dissolved by this agent. At the command of God it may dart out through earth, and sea, and air, and wrap the globe in a vast sea of fire. Science shows us that there is not a substance known in nature but in some form is a supporter of combustion; therefore it nowhere contradicts the inspired Word in regard to the purification of the earth by fire.

The renovation is to take place at the end of the present dispensation, and is to be preceded by the resurrection and the judgment. Paul says, "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the arch angel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." They shall rise before the living are changed. John says, "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works." Immediately after this, the apostle informs us that he saw the new heaven and

THE NEW EARTH.

Peter declares that, "The heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word, are kept in store reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men."

But what will become of the righteous during the final conflagration? We may be able to show you, before the close of this sermon, that they may possess bodies which cannot be affected by any conceivable condition. While we do not propose to get over hard places by appealing to miracles, as we believe a miracle is never resorted to when natural means will do, yet we must remember that the time of which we are speaking is a time of miracles. The resurrection of the dead and the change to be wrought in the bodies of the living, appeals to the miraculous. Paul says, "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump." It is true that science shows us that this earth was developed through unnumbered ages of time, and so we know the human body is slowly developed through a series of years; and now, if it is God's will, as the apostle declares it is, to change these bodies "in the twinkling of an eye," and make them shine like the glorious body of Christ, may he not also, "in a moment"

TRANSFORM THIS EARTH

into a paradise? Why not? But of the question proposed a few moments since, the Bible gives answer: Paul says: "Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air." Isaiah, after referring to the resurrection, says: "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself, as it were, for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For behold the Lord cometh out of his place, to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity." We infer from this that the righteous are to be caught up into celestial chambers until the "indignation be overpast." His fires purify the earth, when the new Jerusalem shall descend adorned as a bride for her husband. With these remarks, we are ready to enter upon the more central idea of our text.

Shall we have a new heaven and a new earth? Peter says: "We, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth." By turning to the Old Testament we have the promise to which the apostle refers: "For behold I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind." (Is. 65: 17.) This language may be figurative, but it seems to be emblematic of those

and the new earth described by Peter. I also understand the prophet to refer to the spiritual seed of Abraham as the legitimate inhabitants of the renovated earth: "For as the new heavens and the new earth which I shall make shall remain before me saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain."

Paul refers to this, doubtless, in the eighth chapter of Romans: "For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain until now." This seems to be a description of the present bound and fettered condition of nature, and the deliverance will take place when the curse of sin is removed. Does not the apostle in this chapter contrast the condition of the sinner with that of the adopted child of God, and the earth cursed with sin with the earth regenerated? As the sinner throws of the shackles of his fallen nature and emerges into the liberty of the sons of God so this earth shall be delivered from the effects of its fall, and in be prepared for a higher order of life than has yet graced it. Will its regeneration be more remarkable than the regeneration of the sinner? Will it be more difficult than the calling up and remodeling of the human body?

The apostle John says: "I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth had passed away; and there was no more sea. And I, John, saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying: "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God." (Rev. 21: 1–3.) This whole chapter relates to scenes beyond the judgment, and it is a description of the glorious state of God's Church to be located on this earth. The change that most forcibly impressed the mind of the apostle was that there was no more sea. The seas now occupy about three-fourths of the earth's surface, leaving but a small portion of the globe for the habitation of man; but then the whole earth, as shall be inhabited. That happy state is depicted under the image of a beautiful city, of which Jerusalem is the emblem. The descent of the city seems to mean that God would descend in great splendor and dwell with his redeemed, which is prefigured by the allusion to the tabernacle or sacred tent. In the fifth verse the apostle says: "And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new." He has just assured us that there is to be a new heaven and a new earth, and here declares that there is to be a new order of things to correspond with this new creation.

He who created and then called together the particles which compose this earth could reduce it to its original gasses and annihilate it, but will he do it? There is no evidence that a single particle of matter was ever annihilated, or that it ever will be. God's will makes fire the agent in the earth's destruction, and fire only changes the form of matter, never annihilates it. The greater part of the earth's crust has already been oxydized or burnt, most of its rocks are metamorphic, but though once liquid with intense heat, they were not annihilated, nor will they be in the final

BAPTISM OF FIRE.

True, Peter represents the atmosphere as passing away with a great noise, but this is nothing more than a chemist would predict in the liberation of the earth's gasses by the intense heat. The new heavens of which the text speaks is the transparent expanse around this material globe, and does not refer to the heavenly bodies, as some flaming poets and prose writers imagine.

Science shows that the earth arrived at its present condition by a slow process. Geology divides its history into five times and six ages. And when we say that each succeeding age was fitted for a higher order and still higher order of life, we by no means countenance the development theory of Mr. Darwin. The first time in the earth's geologic history is called Azoic. Its rocks show that the earth was liquid with intense heat, but revolving in an atmosphere computed to be more than two hundred degrees below zero, in process of time its crust became cooled and finally fitted for life. Events occurring upon our globe from the time of its high temperature to the time it was prepared for vegetable and animal life, were events in Azoic time. Then we have Paleozoic time, or ancient life; Mesozoic, or middle life; Cenozoic, or recent life, and the time of mind. Animal life began with the lowest orders. We first have the Protozoans, as sponges, etc.; secondly, Radiates, as jelly and star fishes etc.; thirdly, Mollusks, as oysters, snails, etc.; fourthly, Articulates, as worms, insects, etc,: and lastly, Vertebrates, as fishes, reptiles, birds, and mammals. Thus the earth was gradually fitted for man, for whom its foundations were laid in the beginning.

The number seven is consecrated in the Bible, and is regarded as the number of perfection. In six days God created the heaven and the earth, or perfected that which he called into existence in the beginning, and he consecrated the seventh to repose. This, according to Paul, typifies the rest his people are to enjoy in

THE ETERNAL FUTURE.

As stated, our earth has passed through five ages, and is now passing through its sixth age, the Silurian, or age of mollusks; Devonian, or age of fishes; Carboniferous, or age of coal plants; Reptilian, or age of reptiles; Mammalian, or age of mammals; and the age of man. Now, in order to reach the age of perfection, another age is before it, which is its age of rest and glorious immortality.

The truths I am delivering to-night may conflict with the preconceived notions of some in this large audience. You may say: "We are hearing strange doctrine to-night." Nay, brother, this is not strange doctrine; it is as old as the Bible, but you are the stranger. I court your fullest inquiry into the basis upon which these truths rest, and I cheerfully submit them to the most crucial tests. But what have been the views of theologians on this subject. Dr. Chalmers says: "Out of the ruins of this second chaos may another heaven and another earth be made to rise, * * and the whole world be peopled

WITH MATERIAL LOVLINESS."

Tholuck says: "According to Peter and John, the kingdom of God is placed upon the earth. * * This exposition has been adopted and defended by most of the oldest commentators as Chrysostom, Theodoret, Hieronymus, Augustine, Luther, Koppe, and others." Dr. Griffin says: "It is a most animating thought that this visible creation, which sin has marred, which the polluted breath of men and devils has defiled, and which by sin will be reduced to utter ruin, will be restored by our Jesus, will arise from its ruins in tenfold splendor, and shine with more illustrious glory than before it was defaced by sin." Dr. Edward Hitchcock says: "The resurrection of the body, as well as the language of Peter, most clearly shows that the future world will be a solid material world, purified indeed, and beautified, but RETAINING ITS MATERIALISM.

* * The change is no other than the conversion of this world into heaven." So we understand Wesley, Adam Clarke, Barnes, Scott, John Pye Smith, Lange, Bengel, Alford, and others to interpret most of the Scripture we have quoted.

We think we have clearly demonstrated from God's Word that this earth is to be purified by fire, and "rise," Mr. Wesley says, "as it were out of its ashes;" and the Scriptural fact is also indicated by science. Now is there clear proof from the Bible that it is to be the future abode of the saints? We think there is. Our text declares it a place where righteousness dwells. It would be hard to separate this from the idea of sinless beings. But the apostle John leaves us no place for doubt. He says of the new heaven and the new earth, "And there shall in no wise enter into it anything which defileth. neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." This clearly points to the fact that those redeemed by the blood of Christ, and have had their names written in the book of life, are to in its purified state.

But what will be the composition of the resurrected body which is to inherit the new earth? That is not so easily answered. But this we do know that it will not be spirit, but matter, unless there be in the universe a third subtance distinct from both mind and matter. Paul assures us that the future body will be as much unlike the present as the stalk of wheat is from the grain from whence it sprang. There is a substance or form of matter which remains the same under all circumstances. It is that "attenuated medium by which light and heat and electricity are transmitted from one part of the universe to another," and is called luminiferous ether. It exists and and acts wherever we find light, heat or electricity, and they are found everywhere. We do not say that the body will be composed of this substance; we only state that it is within the range of possibility. Then it would be unaffected by heat or cold, or any circumstances we can conceive and it could communicate its thoughts and receive knowledge from distances inconceivably great, and with

THE SPEED OF LIGHTNING.

When the wires were completed to San Francisco, they were attached to the pendulum of a clock in Massachusetts, and its tick flew over the wires and registered itself in San Francisco, and returned before the clock could tick a second time. Now, if we could have control of a substance which communicates our thoughts to a friend four thousand miles distant, and then returns to us, traveling eight thousand miles in perhaps one-sixteenth of a second, what might our power of communication and locomotion be if our bodies were composed of this material? Might we not visit other worlds and other systems God has stretched out into infinity, with the velocity of thought itself.

But we will not speculate concerning the substance that shall compose our bodies in the future state. It is enough for us to know that we shall walk embodied under the festooned bowers of our second Paradise; and with bodies as effulgent as the body of Christ on the Mount of Transfiguration, we shall stand in the presence of God our King.

Just what dress nature will put on after the renovation of this globe, we know not, only that it will far the drapery she now wears. When God laid the foundations of the earth "all the sons of God shouted for joy." And when this grand fabric is rebuilded by that same hand that first launched it into space, we shall join our voices with theirs; and the earth upon which we shall walk, and the air that shall be resonant with our songs of joy, will be as material as the first. The River of Life will flow there; trees of eternal verdure will grow along its banks, while birds of the softest melody will sing in their branches; flowers such as mortal eyes have never seen will bloom there, and the whole earth will be filled with the music of unfettered tongues, and of harps not made with human hands. I suppose the luminous atmosphere of the sun shall cease, as the light of the sun will not be needed by day, nor of the moon by night, "for there shall be no light there;" but heaven's concave arches shall be lighted up with a brilliancy which no human imagination can now conceive. Jerusalem, that metropolitan city God has built and adorned, arrayed in Heaven's gorgeous canopy, shall descend to earth, and from her lofty temples shall shine forth, starry, resplendent, the Godhead rays of Christ, our King, and his glory shall light up the abodes of his blessedness.

EXCEL IN SPLENDOR

The Second Coming of Christ.

All Christendom admit that the first coming of Christ to be literal, because they accept the literal interpretation of the prophecies to that event. They discover the fatal mistake made by the Jews in mistaking their meaning; point out the mote which blinded their vision: but fail to see the beam in their own eye, relative to his second coming, from the same cause, and tending to the same fatal result.

If a follower of Jesus receives an erroneous idea touching any Bible doctrine, and that idea enlarges, it soon becomes of sufficient capacity to absorb his entire mind. If he meets with difficulties in the inspired record, a few are examined cautiously, carefully pruned to fit the idea, until finally the idea becomes all in all.

If one plain declaration of inspiration is sacrificed upon the altar of tradition, there is no rule to prevent the destruction of the whole. May we be kept from distorting the word of the Lord upon the rack of worldly wisdom. With the example of the first house of Israel and a variety of views upon the second advent, we wish to present a few thoughts to our brethren, praying that they may be for the glory of God.

Who among the professed followers of Jesus to-day would have recognized the babe of Bethlehem as the promised "Messiah?" (Micah 5:2.) How many would have tarried to view that babe for whom room was not found in the inn, the stall of an ox being his birth place, and a manger his cradle? How many would have done better than that inn-keeper, and invited the mother of Jesus to share their hospitality? How many of the haughty daughters of Zion; who walk with stretched-out neck and wanton eyes (Is. 3:16), would have soiled their garments by holding the babe of "Bethlehem?" Who among the learned Rabbis and doctors of divinity would have cried—"Hosanna to the son of David!" as he rode into Jerusalem upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass? (Zech. 9:9.) Who among their wealthy church members would have asked him to ride in their splendid coaches? Who among them would have asked the "carpenter's son" to supply their pulpit? Who among the amphibious God-and-mammon politicians of to-day would have gone into that upper chamber with the Son of God and his disciples, rather than to the political harangue? Vast numbers of this character manifest more zeal in winning souls to their political god in one campaign, than for Christ in a lifetime. If the political orators of the day truthfully represent their opponents, neither party is worthy the support of an honest man, if they do not speak the truth then they are liars, and here are two good reasons for remaining "pilgrims and strangers" to political organizations.

But to return. Does not consistency demand, and the Spirit of the Lord teach us, that we apply the same rule of interpretation to the second, as well as the first advent of Jesus Christ?

The first house of Israel would as surely have stumbled over the second advent, as the first, by the same method of interpretation. The second house, who contend for the literal fulfillment of the first in all its features, would have made the same fatal mistake there. The ministers and lawyers, doctors and lay members of the church, authorized the crucifixion of the Son of God. They could say Lord, Lord, make long prayers, pay their weekly subscriptions, attend church regularly; hear the prophets read every Sabbath day (Acts 4:18, 24, and 13:27), hoping thereby to atone for deeds of damnable infamy, conceived and executed during the other six days of the week. See Mat. 23 All this was the result of cruel unbelief, and terminated by their passing the verdict, "Crucify him, crucify him." "His blood be upon us and our children." If he was again to appear with the same mission, would he be received more favorably at the hands of his friends?

In Is. 53 the prophet asks: "Who hath believed our report?" well knowing that his description of the humiliating and sorrowful character of the "man of sorrows" would not find a lodgment in the hearts of his people. This chapter draped in mourning covers the first advent. The same prophet (25:8, 9) sees the veil lifted, and death triumphantly swallowed up in victory at the second advent. He suffered at the first: his glorification will follow at the second. (1 Pet. 1:11.)

Different views of Christ's coming exist, two or three only of which we shall notice.

1. That he comes at death.
2. That he comes at the destruction of Jerusalem; and
3. One of recent origin and somewhat novel in its features,—"That Christ is to come personally, yet so secretly that not a single sinner who may be living on earth when he comes will know that he has come; that none of his people will know it except those found at the precise locality of his coming, and these are to inform all other saints that he has come, as no angels attend him to gather his elect. As to the resurrection of the sleeping saints, a faint ray of light foreshadows its probability at some indefinite point in the future; while from what process the earth is to be delivered from its curse doth not yet appear, but it is intimated that it may be accomplished by the united efforts of the saints," as no fire will be used to purify and remove it. We desire to consider these views candidly in the light of divine truth, and especially the latter view as it is said to be intended for those who are looking for the coming of Christ, and essential that they should receive it.

With our present light neither of these views appear to be correct. If, however, we are wrong, we sincerely desire to be taught the right way by the Spirit of God. We will prayerfully inquire:

1. If death is the gate to "endless joy," and Christ comes at death to open the gate, why do the friends of the believer who is about to enter, summon to their aid skillful physicians and incur vast expense, to prevent an entrance? From this stand-point, was it not strangely inconsistent for Jesus to call Lazarus from there, after having shuffled off this mortal coil, and again, by a resurrection from the dead restore to him the ills and sorrows of a mortal life? See John 11. One objection to this view in this case is, that Jesus was absent when Lazarus died, but when he came where Jesus was, Lazarus lived.

Is. 38. King Hezekiah was told to set his house in order, for he should die and not live. If this view be correct, here certainly was a pleasing prospect of Christ's coming to him, and of a speedy entrance through the gate. The king, however, was exceedingly sad at these tidings, and wept bitterly and prayed to his God, who heard his prayer and closed the gate against him for fifteen years more, which so pleased the king that he praised the Lord for it, the reason for which is found in the ninth and tenth verses, where he says he should not "see the Lord, even the Lord in the land of the living," and should "behold man no more with the inhabitants of the world." Evidently the king did not believe Christ would come to him at death, neither that modern Spiritualism is true; for he adds, (18, 19), "Death cannot celebrate thee, the grave cannot praise thee; but the living, he shall praise thee." because, "the dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." (Ps. 115:17.)

2. Christ coming at the destruction of Jerusalem appears impossibe, because the signs of his coming must precede the event, and the beloved John, who listened to those signs as recorded in Mat. 24, was, in A. D. 96, banished to Patmos, where he received a revelation from Jesus Christ containing (6:12, 17,) the sixth seal. Now as Jerusalem was destroyed about A. D. 70, and the signs of Christ's coming were given to John A. D. 96, Jerusalem was destroyed at least twenty-six years too soon to receive credit for the fulfillment of this prophecy.

3. The secret coming of Christ as previously stated seems to deprive the event of any glory whatever. Says Jesus (Mat. 25:31), "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations." As this is a prophecy, how will the friends of the secret coming avoid the discrepancy between themselves and the apostle (2 Pet. 1:20), who declares that "no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation?" Mat. 16:27:—"For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then shall he reward every man according to his works." Could the sleeping saints be rewarded then, while their resurrection is indefinitely postponed in the future? Mat. 24:30:—"And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." We require to know by what process this Scripture is reduced to a harmony with the view of our friends? Rev. 1:7:—"Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." Even so, amen. By what method will every eye be closed? Rom: 2:5:—"But after thy hardness and impenitent heart treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God. Again we request our friends, to whose vision the day of wrath and righteous judgment of God is apparently lost, to aid us in comprehending the import of this passage. Is. 40:5:—"And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." Must we again come in conflict with the apostle, and give this prophecy a private interpretation to preserve the theory in question? The apostle (2 Pet. 1:16–18) refers to the glory of God (Mat. 17:1–9) as witnessed by him at the transfiguration, when those holy men prostrated themselves, overwhelmed by the splendor and magnificence of the scene.

The meek Moses exceedingly feared and quaked (Heb. 12:21; Ex. 19:24; 16:17) before the glory of God while in the mount, and the vast mountain itself shook exceedingly, as if to divest itself of the curse, and become the receptacle of that "enduring glory" which will ultimately mantle the whole earth.

The prophet who pointed out the birthplace of that lovely babe (Micah 5:2), expressed no more truth than the prophet (Isaiah 26:21) who said:—"For behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity; the earth shall also disclose her blood and no more cover her slain." In 2 Pet. 3 the apostle presents a vivid and glowing picture of the momentous change which the earth, now laden with the curse, is to undergo; and when from its fiery ordeal it shall spring forth the new creation of God, the promise (Is. 15:17), "Behold, I create new heavens and a new earth," finds it fulfillment. With Peter's experience, I apprehend it would be difficult to convince the advocates of the theory under consideration that this chapter was of traditionary origin.

If the saints at the point where Christ first comes are to notify the rest of the scattered flock of his coming, we ask, Suppose a brother from New York should appear to brethren in Massachusetts announcing such a fact, and they reply that Jesus said, "Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not" (Matt. 24:23, 26), how would the brother making the announcement extricate himself from the unpleasant position of fulfilling this scripture? For, says Jesus (27), "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."

The adverb of time (Matt. 24:23) then, clearly proves, with the context, that this scripture does not receive its fulfillment until after the great tribulation upon the church of God, and near the end of time. With the testimony of eye witnesses and inspired witnesses, all uniting to exalt to the highest degree the universal manifestation of the glory and power attending the coronation of "Bethlehem's babe," when he shall be crowned Lord of all, we do not feel justified in degrading an event of such infinite magnitude far beneath the level of earthly glory, neither to accuse the divine law of imperfection and imbecility by denying the revelation of the righteous judgment of God, in the day when he shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to the gospel (Rom. 2:5, 16; Matt. 16:27), and "reward every man according to his works."

As the fruits of the Spirit are of a pure and heavenly character, so may we by its holy influence lead upright lives, do the will of God, and then we shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God, or whether men speak of themselves. John 7:17.—O. D. Woodruff, in Crisis.

"And to Look for his Son."

"Waiting for the adoption, to-wit, the redemption of our bodies."

This beautiful language expresses a world of truth. "Waiting!" Yes, this is the spirit of the gospel. It is expected of the Bride that she be waiting, watching and looking for the Bridegroom. Paul taught his Thessalonian brethren thus as is evident from the following passage in his first letter: "Ye turned to God from idols to serve the true and living God: and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus." Serving God with particular reference to the second advent, was no small part of the apostolical doctrine. To-day, if a man says he is waiting for the coming of Jesus, he is looked upon as a fanatic, if not heretical. But let us follow the old landmarks, even if men do call us heretics.

In Titus 2:13 we are taught the same doctrine. "The grace of God" not only taught Paul to "deny ungodliness, live soberly," etc., but, also, to "look for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ." There has been no change in the divine economy. God expects the same to-day of his children that he did in the days of the apostles, so far as this matter is concerned. If it was their duty to look for the Savior's appearance, it is ours, also. And how very reasonable this seems when we consider it in its true light.

We love the Savior. Well, then, we will love to think that he is coming back to us again, and the sooner, the better. If I have a friend that I dearly love, I love to be with that friend. If that friend is absent, I love to think of his return, and of his speedy return. This is natural, and when applied to the Christian, is emphatically true. What shall we think then of professors of religion who become angry when we speak of the second coming of Christ? "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment;" so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation. (Heb. 9:27, 28.) Dr. McKnight says: "Jesus will return for the purpose of declaring to them who wait for him that they are accepted, and of bestowing on them the great blessing of eternal life. (Rom. 2:7, 6, 23.) This is the great salvation which Christ came to preach; and which was confirmed to the world by them who heard him." (Heb. 2:3.)

"Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day [of his appearing, v. 1]; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." (2 Tim. 4:8.) All that love the appearing of Jesus are with Paul to receive a crown of life (1 Pet. 5:4), at the appearing and kingdom of the chief Shepherd, when the living and dead are to be judged. The learned Clarke says: "At the day of judgment, all who live in expectation of the coming of Christ, who anticipate it with joyfulness, having buried the world and laid up all their hopes above, shall receive this crown. Here is a reward, and this reward is common to all the faithful; it is given not only to the apostles, but to all them that love his appearing. This crown is laid up—it is in view, but not in possession!"

In 1 Cor. 1:7, we read: "So that ye come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ." And in Phil. 3:20: "For our citizenship is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." "The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ." (2 Thes. 3:5.)

There will be a company on the earth when Jesus comes, waiting and looking for his appearing. When they see him coming in the clouds they can say: "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us! This is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation!" (Is. 25:9.)

doctrine, and that idea enlarges, it soon becomes of sufficient capacity to absorb his entire mind. If he meets with difficulties in the inspired record, a few are examined cautiously, carefully pruned to fit the idea, until finally the idea becomes all in all.

If one plain declaration of inspiration is sacrificed upon the altar of tradition, there is no rule to prevent the destruction of the whole. May we be kept from distorting the word of the Lord upon the rack of worldly wisdom. With the example of the first house of Israel and a variety of views upon the second advent, we wish to present a few thoughts to our brethren, praying that they may be for the glory of God.

Who among the professed followers of Jesus to-day would have recognized the babe of Bethlehem as the promised "Messiah?" (Micah 5:2.) How many would have tarried to view that babe for whom room was not found in the inn, the stall of an ox being his birth place, and a manger his cradle? How many would have done better than that inn-keeper, and invited the mother of Jesus to share their hospitality? How many of the haughty daughters of Zion; who walk with stretched-out neck and wanton eyes (Is. 3:16), would have soiled their garments by holding the babe of "Bethlehem?" Who among the learned Rabbis and doctors of divinity would have cried—"Hosanna to the son of David!" as he rode into Jerusalem upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass? (Zech. 9:9.) Who among their wealthy church members would have asked him to ride in their splendid coaches? Who among them would have asked the "carpenter's son" to supply their pulpit? Who among the amphibious God-and-mammon politicians of to-day would have gone into that upper chamber with the Son of God and his disciples, rather than to the political harangue? Vast numbers of this character manifest more zeal in winning souls to their political god in one campaign, than for Christ in a lifetime. If the political orators of the day truthfully represent their opponents, neither party is worthy the support of an honest man, if they do not speak the truth then they are liars, and here are two good reasons for remaining "pilgrims and strangers" to political organizations.

But to return. Does not consistency demand, and the Spirit of the Lord teach us, that we apply the same rule of interpretation to the second, as well as the first advent of Jesus Christ?

The first house of Israel would as surely have stumbled over the second advent, as the first, by the same method of interpretation. The second house, who contend for the literal fulfillment of the first in all its features, would have made the same fatal mistake there. The ministers and lawyers, doctors and lay members of the church, authorized the crucifixion of the Son of God. They could say Lord, Lord, make long prayers, pay their weekly subscriptions, attend church regularly; hear the prophets read every Sabbath day (Acts 4:18, 24, and 13:27), hoping thereby to atone for deeds of damnable infamy, conceived and executed during the other six days of the week. See Mat. 23. All this was the result of cruel unbelief, and terminated by their passing the verdict, "Crucify him, crucify him." "His blood be upon us and our children." If he was again to appear with the same mission, would he be received more favorably at the hands of his friends?

In Is. 53 the prophet asks: "Who hath believed our report?" well knowing that his description of the humiliating and sorrowful character of the "man of sorrows" would not find a lodgment in the hearts of his people. This chapter draped in mourning covers the first advent. The same prophet (25:8, 9) sees the veil lifted, and death triumphantly swallowed up in victory at the second advent. He suffered at the first: his glorification will follow at the second. (1 Pet. 1:11.)

Different views of Christ's coming exist, two or three only of which we shall notice.

1. That he comes at death.
2. That he comes at the destruction of Jerusalem; and
3. One of recent origin and somewhat novel in its features,—"That Christ is to come personally, yet so secretly that not a single sinner who may be living on earth when he comes will know that he has come; that none of his people will know it except those found at the precise locality of his coming, and these are to inform all other saints that he has come, as no angels attend him to gather his elect. As to the resurrection of the sleeping saints, a faint ray of light foreshadows its probability at some indefinite point in the future; while from what process the earth is to be delivered from its curse doth not yet appear, but it is intimated that it may be accomplished by the united efforts of the saints," as no fire will be used to purify and remove it. We desire to consider these views candidly in the light of divine truth, and especially the latter view as it is said to be intended for those who are looking for the coming of Christ, and essential that they should receive it.

With our present light neither of these views appear to be correct. If, however, we are wrong, we sincerely desire to be taught the right way by the Spirit of God. We will prayerfully inquire:

1. If death is the gate to "endless joy," and Christ comes at death to open the gate, why do the friends of the believer who is about to enter, summon to their aid skillful physicians and incur vast expense, to prevent an entrance? From this stand-point, was it not strangely inconsistent for Jesus to call Lazarus from there, after having shuffled off this mortal coil, and again, by a resurrection from the dead restore to him the ills and sorrows of a mortal life? See John 11. One objection to this view in this case is, that Jesus was absent when Lazarus died, but when he came where Jesus was, Lazarus lived.

Is. 38. King Hezekiah was told to set his house in order, for he should die and not live. If this view be correct, here certainly was a pleasing prospect of Christ's coming to him, and of a speedy entrance through the gate. The king, however, was exceedingly sad at these tidings, and wept bitterly and prayed to his God, who heard his prayer and closed the gate against him for fifteen years more, which so pleased the king that he praised the Lord for it, the reason for which is found in the ninth and tenth verses, where he says he should not "see the Lord, even the Lord in the land of the living," and should "behold man no more with the inhabitants of the world." Evidently the king did not believe Christ would come to him at death, neither that modern Spiritualism is true; for he adds, (18, 19), "Death cannot celebrate thee, the grave cannot praise thee; but the living, he shall praise thee." because, "the dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." (Ps. 115:17.)

2. Christ coming at the destruction of Jerusalem appears impossibe, because the signs of his coming must precede the event, and the beloved John, who listened to those signs as recorded in Mat. 24, was, in A. D. 96, banished to Patmos, where he received a revelation from Jesus Christ containing (6:12, 17,) the sixth seal. Now as Jerusalem was destroyed about A. D. 70, and the signs of Christ's coming were given to John A. D. 96, Jerusalem was destroyed at least twenty-six years too soon to receive credit for the fulfillment of this prophecy.

3. The secret coming of Christ as previously stated seems to deprive the event of any glory whatever. Says Jesus (Mat. 25:31), "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations." As this is a prophecy, how will the friends of the secret coming avoid the discrepancy between themselves and the apostle (2 Pet. 1:20), who declares that "no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation?" Mat. 16:27:—"For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then shall he reward every man according to his works." Could the sleeping saints be rewarded then, while their resurrection is indefinitely postponed in the future? Mat. 24:30:—"And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." We require to know by what process this Scripture is reduced to a harmony with the view of our friends? Rev. 1:7:—"Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." Even so, amen. By what method will every eye be closed? Rom: 2:5:—"But after thy hardness and impenitent heart treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God. Again we request our friends, to whose vision the day of wrath and righteous judgment of God is apparently lost, to aid us in comprehending the import of this passage. Is. 40:5:—"And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." Must we again come in conflict with the apostle, and give this prophecy a private interpretation to preserve the theory in question? The apostle (2 Pet. 1:16–18) refers to the glory of God (Mat. 17:1–9) as witnessed by him at the transfiguration, when those holy men prostrated themselves, overwhelmed by the splendor and magnificence of the scene.

The meek Moses exceedingly feared and quaked (Heb. 12:21; Ex. 19:24; 16:17) before the glory of God while in the mount, and the vast mountain itself shook exceedingly, as if to divest itself of the curse, and become the receptacle of that "enduring glory" which will ultimately mantle the whole earth.

The prophet who pointed out the birthplace of that lovely babe (Micah 5:2), expressed no more truth than the prophet (Isaiah 26:21) who said:—"For behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity; the earth shall also disclose her blood and no more cover her slain." In 2 Pet. 3 the apostle presents a vivid and glowing picture of the momentous change which the earth, now laden with the curse, is to undergo; and when from its fiery ordeal it shall spring forth the new creation of God, the promise (Is. 15:17), "Behold, I create new heavens and a new earth," finds it fulfillment. With Peter's experience, I apprehend it would be difficult to convince the advocates of the theory under consideration that this chapter was of traditionary origin.

If the saints at the point where Christ first comes are to notify the rest of the scattered flock of his coming, we ask, Suppose a brother from New York should appear to brethren in Massachusetts announcing such a fact, and they reply that Jesus said, "Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not" (Matt. 24:23, 26), how would the brother making the announcement extricate himself from the unpleasant position of fulfilling this scripture? For, says Jesus (27), "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."

The adverb of time (Matt. 24:23) then, clearly proves, with the context, that this scripture does not receive its fulfillment until after the great tribulation upon the church of God, and near the end of time. With the testimony of eye witnesses and inspired witnesses, all uniting to exalt to the highest degree the universal manifestation of the glory and power attending the coronation of "Bethlehem's babe," when he shall be crowned Lord of all, we do not feel justified in degrading an event of such infinite magnitude far beneath the level of earthly glory, neither to accuse the divine law of imperfection and imbecility by denying the revelation of the righteous judgment of God, in the day when he shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to the gospel (Rom. 2:5, 16; Matt. 16:27), and "reward every man according to his works."

As the fruits of the Spirit are of a pure and heavenly character, so may we by its holy influence lead upright lives, do the will of God, and then we shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God, or whether men speak of themselves. John 7:17.—O. D. Woodruff, in Crisis.

"And to Look for his Son."

"Waiting for the adoption, to-wit, the redemption of our bodies."

This beautiful language expresses a world of truth. "Waiting!" Yes, this is the spirit of the gospel. It is expected of the Bride that she be waiting, watching and looking for the Bridegroom. Paul taught his Thessalonian brethren thus as is evident from the following passage in his first letter: "Ye turned to God from idols to serve the true and living God: and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus." Serving God with particular reference to the second advent, was no small part of the apostolical doctrine. To-day, if a man says he is waiting for the coming of Jesus, he is looked upon as a fanatic, if not heretical. But let us follow the old landmarks, even if men do call us heretics.

In Titus 2:13 we are taught the same doctrine. "The grace of God" not only taught Paul to "deny ungodliness, live soberly," etc., but, also, to "look for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ." There has been no change in the divine economy. God expects the same to-day of his children that he did in the days of the apostles, so far as this matter is concerned. If it was their duty to look for the Savior's appearance, it is ours, also. And how very reasonable this seems when we consider it in its true light.

We love the Savior. Well, then, we will love to think that he is coming back to us again, and the sooner, the better. If I have a friend that I dearly love, I love to be with that friend. If that friend is absent, I love to think of his return, and of his speedy return. This is natural, and when applied to the Christian, is emphatically true. What shall we think then of professors of religion who become angry when we speak of the second coming of Christ? "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment;" so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation. (Heb. 9:27, 28.) Dr. McKnight says: "Jesus will return for the purpose of declaring to them who wait for him that they are accepted, and of bestowing on them the great blessing of eternal life. (Rom. 2:7, 6, 23.) This is the great salvation which Christ came to preach; and which was confirmed to the world by them who heard him." (Heb. 2:3.)

"Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day [of his appearing, v. 1]; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." (2 Tim. 4:8.) All that love the appearing of Jesus are with Paul to receive a crown of life (1 Pet. 5:4), at the appearing and kingdom of the chief Shepherd, when the living and dead are to be judged. The learned Clarke says: "At the day of judgment, all who live in expectation of the coming of Christ, who anticipate it with joyfulness, having buried the world and laid up all their hopes above, shall receive this crown. Here is a reward, and this reward is common to all the faithful; it is given not only to the apostles, but to all them that love his appearing. This crown is laid up—it is in view, but not in possession!"

In 1 Cor. 1:7, we read: "So that ye come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ." And in Phil. 3:20: "For our citizenship is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." "The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ." (2 Thes. 3:5.)

There will be a company on the earth when Jesus comes, waiting and looking for his appearing. When they see him coming in the clouds they can say: "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us! This is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation!" (Is. 25:9.)

doctrine, and that idea enlarges, it soon becomes of sufficient capacity to absorb his entire mind. If he meets with difficulties in the inspired record, a few are examined cautiously, carefully pruned to fit the idea, until finally the idea becomes all in all.

If one plain declaration of inspiration is sacrificed upon the altar of tradition, there is no rule to prevent the destruction of the whole. May we be kept from distorting the word of the Lord upon the rack of worldly wisdom. With the example of the first house of Israel and a variety of views upon the second advent, we wish to present a few thoughts to our brethren, praying that they may be for the glory of God.

Who among the professed followers of Jesus to-day would have recognized the babe of Bethlehem as the promised "Messiah?" (Micah 5:2.) How many would have tarried to view that babe for whom room was not found in the inn, the stall of an ox being his birth place, and a manger his cradle? How many would have done better than that inn-keeper, and invited the mother of Jesus to share their hospitality? How many of the haughty daughters of Zion; who walk with stretched-out neck and wanton eyes (Is. 3:16), would have soiled their garments by holding the babe of "Bethlehem?" Who among the learned Rabbis and doctors of divinity would have cried—"Hosanna to the son of David!" as he rode into Jerusalem upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass? (Zech. 9:9.) Who among their wealthy church members would have asked him to ride in their splendid coaches? Who among them would have asked the "carpenter's son" to supply their pulpit? Who among the amphibious God-and-mammon politicians of to-day would have gone into that upper chamber with the Son of God and his disciples, rather than to the political harangue? Vast numbers of this character manifest more zeal in winning souls to their political god in one campaign, than for Christ in a lifetime. If the political orators of the day truthfully represent their opponents, neither party is worthy the support of an honest man, if they do not speak the truth then they are liars, and here are two good reasons for remaining "pilgrims and strangers" to political organizations.

But to return. Does not consistency demand, and the Spirit of the Lord teach us, that we apply the same rule of interpretation to the second, as well as the first advent of Jesus Christ?

The first house of Israel would as surely have stumbled over the second advent, as the first, by the same method of interpretation. The second house, who contend for the literal fulfillment of the first in all its features, would have made the same fatal mistake there. The ministers and lawyers, doctors and lay members of the church, authorized the crucifixion of the Son of God. They could say Lord, Lord, make long prayers, pay their weekly subscriptions, attend church regularly; hear the prophets read every Sabbath day (Acts 4:18, 24, and 13:27), hoping thereby to atone for deeds of damnable infamy, conceived and executed during the other six days of the week. See Mat. 23. All this was the result of cruel unbelief, and terminated by their passing the verdict, "Crucify him, crucify him." "His blood be upon us and our children." If he was again to appear with the same mission, would he be received more favorably at the hands of his friends?

In Is. 53 the prophet asks: "Who hath believed our report?" well knowing that his description of the humiliating and sorrowful character of the "man of sorrows" would not find a lodgment in the hearts of his people. This chapter draped in mourning covers the first advent. The same prophet (25:8, 9) sees the veil lifted, and death triumphantly swallowed up in victory at the second advent. He suffered at the first: his glorification will follow at the second. (1 Pet. 1:11.)

Different views of Christ's coming exist, two or three only of which we shall notice.

1. That he comes at death.
2. That he comes at the destruction of Jerusalem; and
3. One of recent origin and somewhat novel in its features,—"That Christ is to come personally, yet so secretly that not a single sinner who may be living on earth when he comes will know that he has come; that none of his people will know it except those found at the precise locality of his coming, and these are to inform all other saints that he has come, as no angels attend him to gather his elect. As to the resurrection of the sleeping saints, a faint ray of light foreshadows its probability at some indefinite point in the future; while from what process the earth is to be delivered from its curse doth not yet appear, but it is intimated that it may be accomplished by the united efforts of the saints," as no fire will be used to purify and remove it. We desire to consider these views candidly in the light of divine truth, and especially the latter view as it is said to be intended for those who are looking for the coming of Christ, and essential that they should receive it.

With our present light neither of these views appear to be correct. If, however, we are wrong, we sincerely desire to be taught the right way by the Spirit of God. We will prayerfully inquire:

1. If death is the gate to "endless joy," and Christ comes at death to open the gate, why do the friends of the believer who is about to enter, summon to their aid skillful physicians and incur vast expense, to prevent an entrance? From this stand-point, was it not strangely inconsistent for Jesus to call Lazarus from there, after having shuffled off this mortal coil, and again, by a resurrection from the dead restore to him the ills and sorrows of a mortal life? See John 11. One objection to this view in this case is, that Jesus was absent when Lazarus died, but when he came where Jesus was, Lazarus lived.

Is. 38. King Hezekiah was told to set his house in order, for he should die and not live. If this view be correct, here certainly was a pleasing prospect of Christ's coming to him, and of a speedy entrance through the gate. The king, however, was exceedingly sad at these tidings, and wept bitterly and prayed to his God, who heard his prayer and closed the gate against him for fifteen years more, which so pleased the king that he praised the Lord for it, the reason for which is found in the ninth and tenth verses, where he says he should not "see the Lord, even the Lord in the land of the living," and should "behold man no more with the inhabitants of the world." Evidently the king did not believe Christ would come to him at death, neither that modern Spiritualism is true; for he adds, (18, 19), "Death cannot celebrate thee, the grave cannot praise thee; but the living, he shall praise thee." because, "the dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." (Ps. 115:17.)

2. Christ coming at the destruction of Jerusalem appears impossibe, because the signs of his coming must precede the event, and the beloved John, who listened to those signs as recorded in Mat. 24, was, in A. D. 96, banished to Patmos, where he received a revelation from Jesus Christ containing (6:12, 17,) the sixth seal. Now as Jerusalem was destroyed about A. D. 70, and the signs of Christ's coming were given to John A. D. 96, Jerusalem was destroyed at least twenty-six years too soon to receive credit for the fulfillment of this prophecy.

3. The secret coming of Christ as previously stated seems to deprive the event of any glory whatever. Says Jesus (Mat. 25:31), "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations." As this is a prophecy, how will the friends of the secret coming avoid the discrepancy between themselves and the apostle (2 Pet. 1:20), who declares that "no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation?" Mat. 16:27:—"For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then shall he reward every man according to his works." Could the sleeping saints be rewarded then, while their resurrection is indefinitely postponed in the future? Mat. 24:30:—"And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." We require to know by what process this Scripture is reduced to a harmony with the view of our friends? Rev. 1:7:—"Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." Even so, amen. By what method will every eye be closed? Rom: 2:5:—"But after thy hardness and impenitent heart treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God. Again we request our friends, to whose vision the day of wrath and righteous judgment of God is apparently lost, to aid us in comprehending the import of this passage. Is. 40:5:—"And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." Must we again come in conflict with the apostle, and give this prophecy a private interpretation to preserve the theory in question? The apostle (2 Pet. 1:16–18) refers to the glory of God (Mat. 17:1–9) as witnessed by him at the transfiguration, when those holy men prostrated themselves, overwhelmed by the splendor and magnificence of the scene.

The meek Moses exceedingly feared and quaked (Heb. 12:21; Ex. 19:24; 16:17) before the glory of God while in the mount, and the vast mountain itself shook exceedingly, as if to divest itself of the curse, and become the receptacle of that "enduring glory" which will ultimately mantle the whole earth.

The prophet who pointed out the birthplace of that lovely babe (Micah 5:2), expressed no more truth than the prophet (Isaiah 26:21) who said:—"For behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity; the earth shall also disclose her blood and no more cover her slain." In 2 Pet. 3 the apostle presents a vivid and glowing picture of the momentous change which the earth, now laden with the curse, is to undergo; and when from its fiery ordeal it shall spring forth the new creation of God, the promise (Is. 15:17), "Behold, I create new heavens and a new earth," finds it fulfillment. With Peter's experience, I apprehend it would be difficult to convince the advocates of the theory under consideration that this chapter was of traditionary origin.

If the saints at the point where Christ first comes are to notify the rest of the scattered flock of his coming, we ask, Suppose a brother from New York should appear to brethren in Massachusetts announcing such a fact, and they reply that Jesus said, "Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not" (Matt. 24:23, 26), how would the brother making the announcement extricate himself from the unpleasant position of fulfilling this scripture? For, says Jesus (27), "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."

The adverb of time (Matt. 24:23) then, clearly proves, with the context, that this scripture does not receive its fulfillment until after the great tribulation upon the church of God, and near the end of time. With the testimony of eye witnesses and inspired witnesses, all uniting to exalt to the highest degree the universal manifestation of the glory and power attending the coronation of "Bethlehem's babe," when he shall be crowned Lord of all, we do not feel justified in degrading an event of such infinite magnitude far beneath the level of earthly glory, neither to accuse the divine law of imperfection and imbecility by denying the revelation of the righteous judgment of God, in the day when he shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to the gospel (Rom. 2:5, 16; Matt. 16:27), and "reward every man according to his works."

As the fruits of the Spirit are of a pure and heavenly character, so may we by its holy influence lead upright lives, do the will of God, and then we shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God, or whether men speak of themselves. John 7:17.—O. D. Woodruff, in Crisis.

"And to Look for his Son."

"Waiting for the adoption, to-wit, the redemption of our bodies."

This beautiful language expresses a world of truth. "Waiting!" Yes, this is the spirit of the gospel. It is expected of the Bride that she be waiting, watching and looking for the Bridegroom. Paul taught his Thessalonian brethren thus as is evident from the following passage in his first letter: "Ye turned to God from idols to serve the true and living God: and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus." Serving God with particular reference to the second advent, was no small part of the apostolical doctrine. To-day, if a man says he is waiting for the coming of Jesus, he is looked upon as a fanatic, if not heretical. But let us follow the old landmarks, even if men do call us heretics.

In Titus 2:13 we are taught the same doctrine. "The grace of God" not only taught Paul to "deny ungodliness, live soberly," etc., but, also, to "look for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ." There has been no change in the divine economy. God expects the same to-day of his children that he did in the days of the apostles, so far as this matter is concerned. If it was their duty to look for the Savior's appearance, it is ours, also. And how very reasonable this seems when we consider it in its true light.

We love the Savior. Well, then, we will love to think that he is coming back to us again, and the sooner, the better. If I have a friend that I dearly love, I love to be with that friend. If that friend is absent, I love to think of his return, and of his speedy return. This is natural, and when applied to the Christian, is emphatically true. What shall we think then of professors of religion who become angry when we speak of the second coming of Christ? "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment;" so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation. (Heb. 9:27, 28.) Dr. McKnight says: "Jesus will return for the purpose of declaring to them who wait for him that they are accepted, and of bestowing on them the great blessing of eternal life. (Rom. 2:7, 6, 23.) This is the great salvation which Christ came to preach; and which was confirmed to the world by them who heard him." (Heb. 2:3.)

"Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day [of his appearing, v. 1]; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." (2 Tim. 4:8.) All that love the appearing of Jesus are with Paul to receive a crown of life (1 Pet. 5:4), at the appearing and kingdom of the chief Shepherd, when the living and dead are to be judged. The learned Clarke says: "At the day of judgment, all who live in expectation of the coming of Christ, who anticipate it with joyfulness, having buried the world and laid up all their hopes above, shall receive this crown. Here is a reward, and this reward is common to all the faithful; it is given not only to the apostles, but to all them that love his appearing. This crown is laid up—it is in view, but not in possession!"

In 1 Cor. 1:7, we read: "So that ye come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ." And in Phil. 3:20: "For our citizenship is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." "The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ." (2 Thes. 3:5.)

There will be a company on the earth when Jesus comes, waiting and looking for his appearing. When they see him coming in the clouds they can say: "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us! This is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation!" (Is. 25:9.)

By a new arrangement SMALL SUMS of money can be sent by express at a low rate. $25 or any smaller sum can be sent to us from any office of the American Merchant's Union Express Company for 15c.

From an office of any other company, 30c. This is cheap, and absolutely safe. Any who send money in this way should direct to J. V. Himes, Norwood Park, Ill., and prepay the charges: otherwise the package will not be received.

Field's Discussion.

For some time this desirable work has been out of print. The main topic is the Intermediate State, or Condition of the Dead. When a new edition was announced, some of the Doctor's old Disciple friends announced that they would buy and circulate it as soon as ready, because they thought it would help their side—that Mr. Connolly had the best of the argument. We shall soon know whether they really so felt, or were indulging mere bragadocio. The book has not yet made any converts to immaterialism that we have heard of; but we have learned of its bringing not a few to adopt the Bible theory.

The book has heretofore been sold at one dollar. The present edition is in paper covers (pp 316), and will be sent post paid for 50c. We hope for liberal orders.

BORN. In Wexford, Mich. March 21, 1872, Frank, only child of J. C. and S. S. A. Born: aged 3 months. Words of comfort by Br. H. H. Skinner, from Ps 30: 5. "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." A. B.

BUCKALEW: Fell asleep in Jesus, after a short and painful illness, in Litchfield, Hillsdale Co. Mich. March 23 1872, Alpheus Buckalew; in his 46th year.

Thus one after another of the faithful ones are gathered to their father's to wait till Jesus comes. Just one year and six days only had passed since the companion of his youth went to rest. Both cherished the blessed hope. Our brother was lately married again to a very interesting sister in the Baptist church, who is now left with four children, to mourn his loss. Truly they cannot mourn as those that have no hope. Br. B. was an earnest and true Christian. His every day walk will continue to speak, although he sleeps. The church has lost a faithful worker, the community a valuable citizen, the children a kind father. A very large concourse of people gathered at his funeral. Words of comfort and counsel were given by the writer, from Job 17. 13

Crisis, please copy. A. E. BABCOCK.

REYNOLDS. At Kingsbury, Laporte Co. Ind. March 18, 1872, Br. Abram Reynolds; in the 80th year of his age.

Br. R. was born in Washington Co. N. Y. Moved to this Co. in 1836 He embraced the blessed hope of the Second Advent of Christ over twenty years ago; and since that time he lived a consistent Christian life, "Looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing" of the Lord. A few weeks before his death he told me there was not a doubt lingering in his mind, all was bright; and if he must sleep it would be but for an hour as it were, as Jesus would soon awake him; and then he would help sing the new song.

He leaves seven children to mourn the loss of a kind father. May they be prepared to meet him when Jesus comes. Services by the writer.

D MATHEWSON.

WELLCOME: Fell asleep in Jesus at Shelbyville, Blue Earth Co. Minn. Feb. 3, 1872, my dear father, Timothy Wellcome: aged 88 years.

He was the last of a large family of "Wellcomes," formerly living in Minot, Me. five having died during the past six years, the youngest over seventy and the oldest over ninety. Timothy Wellcome was born in Minot, and continued a resident in Maine until about 1840, when he moved west with his family. Settling in Wisconsin he lived there some twelve years and then came to Blue Earth Co. Minn. He and my dear mother have passed through many severe hardships, living on the frontier in new countries for many years in troublous times, Indian excitements, etc. They have had eight children, six of whom are now living. Three of us are in the field trying to preach the gospel and the message due to this generation. One is a physician, the other brother a farmer, and an only sister, with whom my parents are living. During my brother's visit to the West last summer we all had the privilege of meeting after a separation of twenty-seven years.

My father in early life was a rigid Universalist. The idea of eternal torment for the wicked was to him a terrible doctrine, and caused him to shun the orthodox faith; but on hearing the Advent faith promulgated, and reading our papers, his feelings were changed and he was led to see the harmony in the Scriptures: and he could see that God could be just, and justify all that believe in Jesus, but that those who reject Christ would be lost. I spoke to him in regard to the punishment of the wicked during his sickness. He asked for his Bible, and opening to the last chapter of Malachi said to me—"That is just as sea[illegible] can get it; there will be an end of them."

For some years past he has suffered much from disease, but his mind seemed strong and it did our hearts good to see the change in him—his love for the house of prayer and the society of Christians. God spared my dear mother to watch over him, till the last, which was a great consolation to him. For the past few months he was the greatest sufferer I ever saw, but at all times was calm and submissive, saying he was ready to go. In his last hours he often called upon his friends to sing and pray with him, and prayed earnestly himself, until the last, and then calmly sank to rest. All was done for him that could be done by physicians, kind friends and neighbors; but death, the great enemy, claimed him for a while. Thank God! we expect to meet him in the morning, when we shall rise triumphant over the grave, with all the blest family of the redeemed.

Services by Eld. Thurston. Text, Is. 40: 1-8.

Notices, Etc.

To the Brethren.

I am engaged in preparing a work, designed especially for the ministry, on the importance and necessity of preaching the second coming of Christ, as an event nigh at hand. My object is, in cooperation with the brethren, to have a copy placed in the hands of every minister of the gospel in the United States. All can see the importance of such an enterprise. If one only out of five hundred could be induced to give the trumpet a certain sound, it would pay for the labor and outlay. Of course, it will not be expected that those for whom the work is designed, will purchase it. This will be the work of our brethren all over the country to see that a copy is placed in the hands of every preacher of the gospel.

I propose then to request pledges and subscriptions from the brethren, in order to secure its publication, the amount subscribed to be repaid in books, if required. The nature of the work may be gleaned from the following outline:

The Christian minister—a watchman; the duties of a watchman; Watchman, what of the night? The time of the end; Signs of the times—Fulfillment of Prophecy; Prophecy in relation to the First Advent; Prophecy in relation to the Second Advent; Signs of the Second Advent, Celestial, Terrestial, Moral, National. The Papacy, Spiritism, Time, Tarrying Time, etc., etc.

I would also state that the work will be useful to all for reference, as it will be largely interspersed with Scripture quotations. Any who may feel disposed to aid in this enterprise, may address Miles Grant or O. T. Adams, Crisis office, Boston, Mass.; J. V. Himes, TIMES office, Chicago, Ill.; or myself at Arena, Wis.

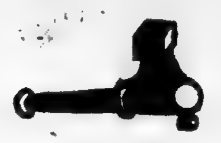
Advertising alone does not produce success. The thing which is advertised must have intrinsic merit, or else large advertising will eventually do it more harm than good. If you have anything which you know to be good, advertise it thoroughly, and you will be sure to succeed; if it is poor, don't praise it, for people will soon discover you are lying.

Such is the policy of the Burlington Route, which runs to three great regions in the West: 1st, to Omaha, connecting with the great Pacific Roads. 2d, To Lincoln, the capital of Nebraska, and all that beautiful region south of the Platte, filled with R. R. lands and homesteads. 3d, To St. Joseph, Kansas City and all Kansas points.

The roads are splendidly built, have the best bridges, finest cars, the Miller platform and coupler, and the safety air brake (to prevent the loss of life that is everywhere else happening); Pullman's sleepers, Pullman dining cars, large and powerful engines (to make quick time and good connections), and are in a word the best equipped roads in the West. So that if you desire to go safely, surely, quickly and comfortably to any point in Southern Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, or on the Pacific Roads, be sure that you go "By way of Burlington."

All who wish particular information, and a large map, showing correctly the Great West, and all its railroad connections, can obtain them, or any other knowledge, by addressing General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

E. H. WHEELER'S
IMPROVED
AXLE & THIMBLE SKEIN



PATENTED JAN. 12, 1872.

THE LIGHTEST, STRONGEST, AND BEST AXLE BEFORE THE PUBLIC.

Less liable to break, and cannot spring under any amount of weight that can be put upon it.

It takes a smaller sized axle and bolster or sandboard than the same sized skeins of common style; is more simple and easier to fit, the skein being of uniform taper, without shoulders upon the inside a better fit is secured. The axle can be turned in a common lathe to fit the thimble, by putting one end out of center.

The arm, or spindle, is so made as to secure the proper set of the wheels, when moderately dished, with the bottom line of the spindle on a parallel line to the bottom of the axle, an important principle never before attained. The set of the wheels is a perpendicular or right angle to the bottom line of the axle upon the face of the spokes, upon their lower half.

This cut shows the thimble and lug for the tension rod across the bottom of the axle, from thimble to thimble, and the socket for the bottom, or the sandboard, as the case may be. I also use a sand guard to keep the dirt out of the shoulder of the hub; but it is not shown in this cut.

RIGHTS FOR SALE.

"The Great Prophetic Apostsay!"

In The Prophetic Key for May 1871, in an article under the caption "The Advent Christian Times," p. 510, you say: "Once we believed Roman Catholicism to be the great prophetic apostasy! Indeed, for many long years, we never heard the doctrine doubted; but now we are thoroughly convinced that the great prophetic apostasy is yet future—that it has not even begun."

This is certainly a startling statement, coming, as it does, from a professing Protestant, and a minister of religion! If it be true—and I am very far from believing it is—then, as there is no apostasy that I know of from Christianity but what is prophetic, it follows that there has, as yet, no apostosy crept into the professing Christian Church. But this no one will admit, no, not even the Romanists themselves; for they delight to call us heretics etc., while we, with more justice, I think, charge them with being the faithful but deluded followers of the foretold apostasy. But if it be true, as you would have us believe, that the great prophetic apostasy is yet future—that it has not even begun — then, I admit, it clearly follows that Roman Catholicism—whatever may be said of Protestantism—is neither an apostasy, nor the great prophetic apostasy; indeed it would be calumny to say it was either.

But before I can believe either that no apostasy has as yet commenced in the professing Christian church, or that Romanism is not "the mystery of iniquity," and the foretold apostasy, I must be furnished with stronger and more convincing proofs than those mentioned in the Key. Before I can ever dare to throw discredit on the great cloud of witnesses, who have, in all ages, borne their unanimous and unceasing testimony against Rome as the great apostasy—before I can think of ignoring the overwhelming and convincing evidence adduced by the ablest Christian writers, in proof of this fact, or attempt to hush the loud cry for retribution which has been going up for centuries into the ear of a holy, but righteous God, from the noble army of martyrs, the holy confessors, the thousands and tens of thousands of her hapless victims, whose cries and tears and groans she has mercilessly disregarded, and whose blood she has remorselessly shed in torrents—whether by the sword, the inquisition, the flames or by her other refined modes of cruelty—before I can impiously do this, and believe with you that every one of Rome's poor victims, as well as the entire Christian church, the Lamb's wife, were found, before God, false witnesses against this relentless enemy, being in profound ignorance and gross error as to the true character of the system which had so long, so cruelly and so persistently persecuted her—I must, I believe, consult a truer oracle, or be instructed by a wiser prophet. The crude and dark sayings of my brother of Kentucky, I can never set up on this point in opposition to the unanimous verdict of the entire Christian church. The piety, the wisdom, and the learning of the great [illegible] wisest and best of men is against you. The Bible is against you.

I have examined your reasons carefully, and I am certainly at a loss to discover any solid or legitimate argument sufficient to induce any thinking man to change his opinion, which he held "for many long years" on this very important subject. Unless you can improve your logic as you display your lore, I think you are not likely to make many intelligent converts to your new views. Had there been any doubts on my my mind previous to reading your article, and I am happy to say there were none, as to Romanism being the foretold apostasy, your reasoning would have completely removed them. This reasoning is so glaringly erroneous that I could have no confidence in any of your expositions in difficult prophecies.

Before, however, I enter on the direct subject of your article, permit me to say that I do not write for the mere sake of controversy, that at best would be an unworthy motive, but to express, however feebly, my unswerving fidelity to long and strongly cherished convictions. With you, personally, I can have no controversy, as we are entire strangers. Your opinions I intend to criticise as severely as I can. If you publish my remarks entire in the Key, you are at perfect liberty to do so, and give them any reply you may think proper. Truth is eternal and must prevail. I do, I assure you, most steadfastly believe now, as you once did, and, to use your own words, "I never heard the doctrine doubted" by any true Protestant, you excepted, (and I do hope you are a true Protestant, for then you will be a true Christian), that the Church of Rome is verily and indeed the foretold apostasy. Every mark of this apostasy has its counterpart in Romanism. The Romish apostasy may not, just yet, have arrived at its full growth or maturity. I can scarcely think it has. Every year seems to increase its enormities; and there is no knowing to what fearful hights of blasphemies, as well as depths of abominations it may yet reach during the few years it may be permitted to continue. Has it not, within our own short memories, promulgated two dogmas that have scandalized the best of its own bishops, clergy and people, and made the entire Christian world to stand in wonder? (Was it in fulfillment of what is written: "And all the world wondered after the beast?)" I refer to the immaculate conception of the blessed Virgin Mary, and the infallibility of the Pope. The first making the Virgin, who undoubtedly was a sinner, equal in purity to the Savior, who was sinless; the other conferring on a weak, sinful, frail, fallible mortal— oh, how sinful! oh, how fallible! even on the "man of sin," a distinguishing attribute of the Godhead—Infallibility.

But although, I repeat, Romanism may not have, just yet, accomplished its vile mission—although it may grow gradually worse and worse in its downward course to perdition—and although the Pope may become more fully and clearly revealed, if that be possible, so that you, even without the aid of spectacles, would fully recognize the likeness of the man of sin, in the person of the Pope; are we therefore to conclude that the Church of Rome is not the apostasy, or the Pope is not the man of sin? Because, I say, this apostasy may not yet have reached its full and foul growth, or finished its dark mission, are we therefore to conclude that it is yet future—not even begun? Most undoubtedly not! An infidel by this mode of reasoning, could prove that Christianity [illegible] yet future—not even [illegible] who will say that the triumphs of Christianity are now complete? It will assuredly put forth fresh power, win new victories, go on in the strength of the Lord and in the power of his might, subduing all enemies and conquering all opposition, until the personal advent of its Divine Author, the Prince of Peace, ushers in the millenium of glory upon an unexpectant world. But would it be good logic, sound philosophy, or true religion to conclude from this that Christianity is yet future—not even begun? Surely not. But the church of Rome has already, and I hope to be able to prove the assertion in its proper place, all the marks of the foretold apostasy, and the Pope is, in my opinion, the living likeness of the man of sin. So sure am I of this, that had I a warrant to arrest the great human errorist for high treason against heaven, and unparalleled cruelties to the inhabitants of earth, (and has he not been guilty of both?) I would go to Rome and arrest the Vicar of Christ! When a full indictment of all his crimes and misdemeanors, and the catalogue is dark and appalling, would be read against him in open court, it would be found, I doubt not, that the concurrent testimony of both Scripture and history, and the impartial verdict of the entire Christian church, would point conclusively to the Pope as the man of sin.

But to return to your article. You triumphantly appeal to Greenfield and Webster's definitions of apostasia and apostasy respectively in support of your new views. I shall have to take your quotations on trust for the present, as I have not the works of these distinguished authors at hand to verify their correctness. However, at a subsequent stage of my remarks I shall have occasion to examine your authorities, as well as others equally celebrated for their learning and ability, as to the correct meaning of these words, not, I venture to say, without good results to the cause of truth which I believe I advocate. At present I have only to deal with your assertions.

Greenfield's definition of apostasia, a defection, departure, apostasy, I readily admit. But, I ask, does not this definition suppose the defection, departure, apostasy, is from the truth? It certainly does. This, then, is a most important distinction, sine qua non, which must not be lost sight of in this most interesting investigation. You cannot seriously hold, particularly when the point is irresistably contested, that a departure from error to truth is Scriptural apostasy.

Webster's definition of apostasy, as given and endorsed by you, "a departure from professed principles," I do not admit in this controversy. It loses sight of this distinction entirely, and therefore is not theologically or philosophicaly correct; and basing your argument on it has led you into gross error. Now if you do not believe, and I do not see how any rational man can, that a departure from erroneous principles, "no matter how strenuously soever they may be professed, is scriptural apostasy; why, might I ask, were you not candid enough to make this admission? Why did you use this definition at all when you might have found a more correct one in the same author? At all events, having used it, why did you not qualify it? But had you qualified it, had you only confessed that it is very limited and restricted in its application, and did not by any means apply one iota to the particular point you wished to prove, you never could have drawn from it the semblance of an argument, or the ghost of a proof that the Romanists by adhering to their professed principles are therefore not apostates, and their church is not the apostasy. You are enough of a logician to be aware that your argument demanded this definition to be used in an unrestricted or universal sense; and it was in this wide sense you used it: but you must also be aware, unless you lay yourself open to the charge of gross ignorance of the commonest principles of logic, that it will not bear this application. To escape, therefore, the charge of ignorance, you must believe that a departure from professed principles, irrespective of their truth or falsity, is scriptural apostasy. On this point, however, I join issue with you, and put in my strongest protest. Once admit the definition to have a general or universal application, which no scholar of the commonest attainments, much less Webster, would ever think of doing, and instead of arriving at the truth in an investigation like the present, it will lead to conclusions the most absurd, extravagant, and erroneous. Of the correctness of this sweeping and solemn charge, I will presently furnish you, I think, with abundant evidence. Before doing so, however, I will first state briefly, your argument, for the benefit of the reader, which may be fairly presented thus:

I. Direct proposition—All those who depart from professed principles are apostates.

1. Converse proposition—All those who do not depart from professed principles are not apostates.

2. All the faithful Roman Catholics —but let me use your own words— "The Pope, his cardinals, his bishops, and arch-bishops," and "a tremendous majority of the (Roman) Catholics, of to-day have always been (Roman) Catholics; have been born (Roman) Catholics, have always strenuously professed the principles of (Roman) Catholicism, they have never departed from professed principles."

3. Therefore, they are not apostates.

This, I think, is, your argument, fairly and logically stated. Now, I am free to admit, if the direct proposition were universally true, and it should be universally true if a departure from any professed principles, true or false, were apostasy, not otherwise; then the converse proposition would be equally true. If the second proposition were true, then I candidly admit your conclusion would logically follow, and your entire argument would be perfectly correct. All the logicians in the world could not find a flaw in it. But if I can show that the direct proposition is not universally true, because a departure from any principles, or from professed erroneous principles is not Scriptural apostasy, then it follows that the converse proposition is not true, and even if your second proposition were true, your conclusion would not be true. It would be an incorrect syllogism, the major premise being particular, when the law of syllogistic reasoning requires that it should be general or universal. This statement of the ca[illegible] no logician, I am confident will [illegible]pute. Now that the direct proposition is thus false, will clearly appear from the following considerations:

(1.) If a departure from professed principles, irrespective of their truth or falsity, constitute apostasy, then to begin with the argumentum ad hominem, you are now, on your own admission, branded an apostate. For once, you say, "we believed Roman Catholicism to be the great prophetic apostasy: but now we are thoroughly convinced that the great prophetic apostasy is yet future, that it has not even begun." My dear friend, you have certainly departed from professed principles. Are you therefore an apostate? I pause for a reply.

(2.) Many infidels and skeptics, some of whom I have personally known, have written much and spoken more in vindication of their professed principles, and were afterwards, by careful investigation of the truth, blessed by God's Spirit, led to renounce and depart from them, and embrace the Christian religion. They departed from professed principles. Did they become apostates when they became Christians?

(3.) The great Martin Luther, and all the glorious reformers, as well as thousands and tens of thousands of their followers were, previous to the reformation, Roman Catholics, were born (Roman) Catholics, and strenuously professed the principles of Roman Catholicism; but by the mercy of the Lord they saw their errors, and were made sensible of their superstitions and idolatries. In a word, they departed from professed principles and embraced the reformed faith. Did they become apostates when they became Protestants? Is Protestantism only another name for apostasy?

(4.) So also Peter and Paul, and all the other disciples, as well as all the first Christians, were once Jews, were born Jews, and strenuously professed the principles af Judaism, and thousands and tens of thousands also of the early Christians were once heathens, were born heathens, and strenuously professed the principles of heathenism; but they were called to the faith and hope of the gospel, and were enabled by divine grace to abandon their professed principles. The converted Jews left their party and forsook the religion of their fathers; the converted heathen, cast their dumb idols to the moles and fats, and embraced Christianity. Did they become apostates when they become Christians? Is Christianity too, in your opinion, only another name for apostasy?

I only need remark that a definition that proves Protestantism an apostasy, primitive Christianity an apostasy, and Romanism not an apostasy, needs no further refutation. Though preached by an angel from heaven, it could not possibly be true.

Fuss is not Work.

You may see this any day and anywhere. As you go along, you see two horses harnessed together before a car. One of them makes a great fuss, as if he had a'l the world behind him, and was in eager haste to get it just where he wants it to be. He dances and prances, jumps up and down and springs into the collar with all his might, and then falls back from it because all does not give way to him. The other makes no fuss at all. He stops and starts at the signal, wastes no strength in violence, but puts his whole weight into the collar just when it is needed.

The one makes the fuss, the other does the work.

What is the difference?

The one is restive, the other is docile. The one is in his own will, the other is in the will of his master.

How like some Christians that you and I could name. One is restive, the other docile. The one is in his own will, the other is in the Lord's will. The one stops when he ought to go, and starts when he ought to stand still. The other is obedient in his faith, and so quick to hear the voice of the Lord that, like the docile horse which does not require bit or rein, or word, but, catching the conductor's signal, stops at the bell tap and starts at the bell tap, he moves forward at the right moment, and at the right moment stops, whether in word or deed.

The one makes all the fuss, the other does all the work.

The way to work wisely and well is to present yourself a living sacrifice unto God, and let his will be your will, and so prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God every day all your life long.—Sel.

A DISCUSSION

BETWEEN

Eld. Clark Braden, of the Christian Church, and Eld. Himes, of the Advent Christian Times.

Upon Four Propositions, Involving the Nature of Man, the State of the Dead, and Future Rewards and Punishments.

ELD. CLARK BRADEN'S EIGHTH LETTER.

We now propose to present a cumulative argument based on the mission and death of our Savior, or rather we shall group around this central idea of revelation, Scriptural statements that are often expanded into a score or more of arguments. There has been much controversy concerning the nature of the penalty inflicted for the first transgression—concerning the death denounced in the law that was broken—concerning the effects of the fall. Since our first parents were in a state of childish innocence, ignorance and simplicity, we need not expect to find these matters fully unfolded and developed in the account of the transgression. Nor do I believe we can find them fully developed in either the antediluvian, patriarchal or Mosaic dispensations. We must look to the gospel of Christ for their full explanation, just as we must go there to learn the full development of the remedy, the expiation of Christ.

If the reader will now turn to the Roman letter, and read from the first to the close of the eighth chapters, and then read the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians, he will find these matters fully discussed and unfolded. From these Scriptures we learn that mankind were to regain in Christ all they lost in Adam. Nay, where sin did abound, grace was to much more abound; or they were to regain more than they lost. They were to regain this on compliance with the conditions of the gospel. By obeying from the heart the gospel, man becomes pure in character. He regains union and communion with God and the Holy Spirit. He is lifted out of his state of death in trespasses and sin, or moral death, into a state of union with God. He is made alive, or begins spiritual life, or he begins eternal life. He not only has eternal life in prospect, but he begins living that life of union and communion with God that the Scriptures call eternal life. His spirit is released from imprisonment in hades between death and resurrection. His spirit is made perfect, or redeemed from this imprisonment, and he, at death, departs, and is with Christ in the presence of God. At the resurrection his body will be redeemed, raised a spiritual body, and he will enter into the full enjoyment of endless happy existence, or eternal life.

It is nowhere taught that Christ saves men from natural or physical death. Nor that he saves them from an utter extinction of all conscious being. Hence these are no part of the consequences of the transgression. Looking at the first of Genesis in the full light of the gospel, we conclude that man was created with body, soul and spirit. He had a spirit similar in nature to the angels, the Holy Spirit, the Logos and God, but lower in rank. He was made, in his spirit, a little lower than the angels. Our Savior, in Mat 10:28, and Lk. 12:4, tells us that death does not extinguish the conscious being of this spirit. Hence "man is, by the constitution which God gave him in creation, and which he still retains, a being possessing a spirit that will endlessly exist in a state of consciousness." Man was created pure and sinless. He was in a state of childish innocence and simplicity. Physically, mentally, and morally, he was more vigorous and acute in power than he ever has been since his nature has been corrupted by sin; but in acquired ideas he was a child. He must have been, for knowledge is acquired by experience, and the use of his faculties, and there had not been time for this. He was, by the angels, taught language, agriculture, the names and uses of animals, and to clothe himself. He was in that state of existence the Bible calls life. In a state that was the beginning of endless happy existence, or eternal life. He would have lived without pain or disease, and have passed without pain, in a spiritual body into a higher state of existence. Perhaps the translations of Enoch and Elijah are intimations of what would have been his final reward.

By the transgression man lost purity and sinlessness of character. He became impure, guilty and sinful. He lost union and communion with God and pure intelligences; and sank into bondage to sin, or into death in trespasses and sin; or a state the Bible calls death. He lives in pain and disease, and dies prematurely and in pain. Until the resurrection of Christ the spirits of all men passed into a state of imprisonment in hades. When Christ ascended out of hades he redeemed the spirits of the righteous out of hades. He removed Paradise, or Abraham's Bosom, to heaven. He abolished hades as far as the righteous are concerned. The wicked are still confined in hades with evil spirits, reserved there until the judgment of the great day. The righteous are with Christ in heaven. At the close of the present age Christ will come again, attended by the spirits of his redeemed. Their bodies will be raised, and the righteous will be united to their spiritual bodies. This is the first resurrection. After the millennial reign the sea and the grave will give up the bodies of the wicked, and hades will give up their spirits. This is the second resurrection. Then comes the general judgment. Death, or the grave, or the bodies of the wicked from the grave; and hades, or the spirits of the wicked from hades, will be cast into gehenna, or into outer darkness, or banished from the presence of the Lord, into that state of punishment called "everlasting punishment," or "everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power," or the second death. Death and hades are by metonymy, used for the bodies from death or the grave, and the spirits from hades. Casting death and hades into gehenna means casting the bodies from the grave and the spirits from hades into gehenna.

The righteous will enter into life eternal in its full fruition, their redemption now being complete in the redemption of their bodies. Christ will now give up his throne, as Mediator, to the Father; and cease to reign, that God may be all in all; and the next epoch of the world's history will begin. I am aware that a part of this outline belongs to my second affirmative, but I introduce it here to give completeness to the outline. I shall, however, discuss only what belongs to this question. Before entering directly on the discussion of this subject, I wish to establish certain truths of Christology; for on them rests my argument. It is a necessary consequence of the system we are now opposing, that it does one of four things. (1) Some deny the divinity of Christ, and say, as he was only a man, his conscious being was extinguished in death, just as they claim is the case with all other men. (2) Some say the Divine Spirit or Logos was incarnate in Jesus of Nazareth only after his resurrection. Hence we have but a human sacrifice for sin, a human expiation, and a human atonement. (3) Some say he (the Logos) never existed until his birth of Mary, and he became subject to an utter extinction of conscious being in death. Such deny his pre-existence. (4) Others believe in his pre-existence before his incarnation, but believe that the Divine Spirit, the Logos, became subject to an utter extinction of conscious being in death. Some of these undertake to befog the issue by saying that the Logos, the Divine Spirit, became flesh in a literal sense—that the Divine Spirit was transmuted or changed literally into flesh and as such lay three days in the tomb. The reader will observe that this system must, of necessity, do one of three things. Deny the presence of the Divine Spirit, the Logos, in Jesus of Nazareth before his resurrection, and give us a human sacrifice expiation or atonement for sin; or make the Divine Spirit, the Logos, suffer an utter extinction of conscious being; or deny the divinity of our Savior entirely. Which form of the trilemma will Br. Himes take?

We now call attention to the following Scriptures: Jno. 1—"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. He was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him, and without him was not one thing made, that now exists. In him was life, and the life was the light of men. And the Word became flesh and tabernacled among us, and we beheld his glory, as the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." Heb. 1—"God has in the last days spoken to us by his Son, whom he has appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the ages [set in order dispensations], who, being the effulgence of his glory, and the exact representation of his essence, and upholding all things by his own powerful word; when he had by himself made expiation for our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on High, being become so far superior to the angels as he hath by inheritance a more excellent name than theirs.... When he brings in the first begotten into the world, he says, 'Let all the angels of God worship him.'" Heb. 10:5—"Wherefore, when he [Christ] comes into the world, he says, 'Sacrifices and burnt offerings thou hast not desired, but a body thou hast prepared me.'"

Phil. 2:5—"Let that mind be in you that was in Christ Jesus; who being in the form of God did not think it an act of robbery to be equal with God; but divested himself by taking the form of a servant and being made in the likeness of a servant, and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself by becoming obedient even to death—the death of the cross." Col. 1:15—"Who [Christ] is the image of the invisible God—the first born of every creature, for by him were all things created—things in heaven and things in earth—visible and invisible, whether thrones or hardships, or principalities or authorities, all things having been created for him and by him, and he is before all things, and by him all things consist." Jno. 17:5—"Now Father glorify me with thyself, with the glory I had with thee before the world was." Jno. 7:59—"Jesus said, 'Before Abraham was, I am.'" Or, before Abraham came into being, I existed. 2 Pet. 1:10—"The prophets searched diligently what the spirit of Christ, that was in them, did signify."

These Scriptures prove that the Logos existed before the world was created, and before all created things. That he created all things. That he set in order the dispensations. That he sent the Holy Spirit into the prophets of the Old Testament. That he entered the body prepared for him. He did not transmute himself into the substance of that body. He became flesh by entering into a body of flesh. He became subject to the death of the cross. Before his crucifixion he declared he existed before Abraham. Jesus prayed to his Father to glorify him with the glory that he had with him before the world was. He declared that he came from the Father. Hence the Divine Spirit, the Logos, was incarnate in Jesus before his crucifixion. Now, what death did he die? What was the event of death to him, for he died as all men die? Death was to him the same event as to all men. Bear in mind that the Jews, in our Savior's day, almost universally believed that all spirits went in a conscious state to hades. The good went to Abraham's Bosom, or Paradise. The wicked to Tartarus. Some thought that they went to the Paradise or Eden of Adam, which had been closed to man since the transgression; and that the bad were banished off the confines of the world in outer darkness.

It was a general expectation that Messiah would redeem the faithful from hades. Some thought he would open Paradise to men and the earth again. When our Savior hung on the cross, the thief prayed to him, "Lord, remember me when thou comest in thy kingdom," having reference to this redemption of the spirits from hades. He did not have reference to salvation from death; nor to a resurrection in the ages to come. Nor, as is generally believed, to power in an earthly kingdom. Many of the Jews expected the resurrection to take place immediately when the Messiah came, and that this redemption from hades would then take place, and begin the Messiah's reign; and that all these events would be almost simultaneous. The thief then meant just this, "On your return from hades remember my spirit." Death was staring him in the face, and our Savior was near death himself. He expected soon to be in hades, and that our Savior would be there. His request then meant, "Remember me in hades when you return from thence, and redeem my spirit." Our Savior replied, "Verily I say unto thee, to-day thou shalt be with me in Paradise." Keeping before us the nature of the thief's request, and the ideas of the Jews, and the meaning of Paradise—that the Jews believed that the good spirits went in a conscious state to Paradise—that Paradise meant in the connection our Savior used it, only the abode of the conscious spirits of the good at the time he spoke, what else can his answer mean but this: "Your spirit shall be to-day with my spirit in the abode of good spirits." So every one would understand it. So it meant in the universal understanding of the Jews. And so our Savior meant, unless he, in the awful agony of that moment, was guilty of deception. This language proves beyond a cavil that the idea of the Jews concerning Paradise and the conscious existence of departed spirits, was sanctioned by our Savior in his dying agony, and is true. That the spirit of our Savior, and the thief also, went to hades into Paradise, immediately after death, and in a conscious state.

We wish now to call especial attention to the following Scriptures: Acts 2:31—"David foreseeing this, spake of the resurrection of Christ, how that his soul was not left in hades [the abode of departed spirits], nor did his flesh [body] see corruption [in] the grave." Rom. 10:6—"But the righteousness which is of faith speaks thus, 'Say not in your heart who shall descend into the abyss" (hades, the abode of departed spirits), that is to bring up Christ again from the dead (for he has already risen). Eph. 4:8—"For which reason the Scriptures say that when he ascended on high he led captive a multitude of captives, and gave gifts unto men. But this, that he ascended—what does it mean—but that he also descended into the lower earthly regions [hades, the abode of spirits]. He that descended [into hades, the abode of spirits] is the same also that ascended high above all heavens that he might fill all things." Acts 1:11—"This same Jesus who has been taken up into heaven, shall come in the same manner as you have seen him go into heaven." 1 Thes. 3:13—"At the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints." Mat. 27:52—"Graves also were burst open, and after his resurrection the bodies of several saints who slept were raised, and came out of the graves and went into the holy city, and were seen by many."

1 Pet. 3:18—"For Christ has also once suffered on account of sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring all to God—being put to death in the flesh, but made alive in the spirit—in which he went and preached to the spirits in prison, who formerly were disobedient, when once for all the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was being prepared; in which a few [that is eight] souls were saved by water. An anti-type to which [transaction] baptism, now also saves us, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God, angels and authorities, and powers being made subject to him." 1 Pet. 4:6—"For this cause was the gospel preached to the dead—that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but made alive according to God in the Spirit."

Heb. 11:39—"All these [ancients] having obtained a good reputation by faith, received not the promises; because God had promised some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." Heb. 12:22—"But you have come to Mount Zion, and to the city of the living God—the heavenly Jerusalem, and to myriads of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first born, who are enrolled in heaven; and to God, the Judge of all, and to the spirits of the just made perfect, and to Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling which speaks better things than the blood of Abel." Rom. 8:11—"And if the spirit of him who raised Christ from the dead dwells in you, he who raised Jesus from the dead shall give life to your mortal bodies, because of his spirit that dwells in you." V. 23—"And we ourselves, who have the fruits of the spirit; even we are ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption—the redemption of our bodies."

From these Scriptures we draw these conclusions. (1) Christ died as all men die. The event of death was to him the same as to all men. (2) His spirit went to hades, the abode of departed spirits. See Lk. 23:43; Acts 2;31; Rom. 10:7; Eph. 4:8, 9; 1 Pet. 3:19. (3) He was alive in his spirit, and in his spirit went and preached to the spirits in hades, or his spirit went and preached to the spirits in hades. (4) These spirits were the spirits of those who anciently were disobedient, when for the last time the long-suffering of God waited while the ark was being prepared in the day of Noah. This explains 1 Pet. 4:6, where the apostle goes back to his declaration a few lines above in the third chapter: "For this cause was the gospel preached to the dead [the antediluvians of whom he speaks in the third chapter], that they might be judged according to men in the flesh; but be made alive according to God in the spirit." Or, as Paul says in Rom. 2—"Those who have not law are judged without law," and Peter says they shall be made alive according to God in the spirit.

I know I shall meet with sneering and infidelity when I present this argument. But I rest on this foundation. These Scriptures declare that when Christ died his spirit went to hades and preached to the spirits imprisoned there. They tell us whose spirits he preached to there. The spirits of those who were disobedient in the days of Noah while the ark was being prepared. The phrase, "while the ark was being prepared," can, by no rule of grammar, be made to modify the preaching, or tell when the preaching was done. It is a violent distortion of the language, and a palpable violation of all grammatical analysis to so construe it. It tells when the spirits in prison were disobedient. It modifies "were disobedient." They were disobedient while the ark was being prepared. Christ then, after his death, went in his spirit; or his spirit went and preached to the spirits in hades (imprisoned there), who anciently had been disobedient in the days of Noah, while the ark was being prepared, and the long-suffering of God waited on them for the last time. This conclusion is demanded by grammatical construction and sentential structure alike, and is confirmed by Peter's repetition of the thought in the sixth verse of the fourth chapter a few lines below.

(5) Christ redeemed and led from thence a multitude of captives imprisoned there. So teaches Eph. 4:8. He redeemed or released the spirits of the righteous, and abolished the dominion of hades over them. Until his triumphant ascent from hades, the spirits of all had been confined there. At his ascent he led them forth. So teaches Eph. 4:8. With this agrees Heb. 11:39. The ancients were not made perfect—obtained not the promises. Heb. 12:23 declares the spirits of the just have been made perfect. From Rom. 8:23 we learn that the bodies have not been redeemed yet, and that the righteous wait for the redemption of their bodies from the grave. Their spirits have been made perfect, and redeemed from hades. (6) Christ led these to heaven with him. In Acts 1 we learn that Christ shall come back as he went into heaven. 1 Thes. 3:13 informs us he is to come back attended by all his saints. So Eph. 4:8 tells us he led these redeemed captives on high when he ascended on high.

With this agrees Paul's desire to be absent from the body and present with the Lord, or to be with Christ in heaven. Christ removed Paradise into heaven, or the redeemed are now in heaven, the third heaven. 2 Cor. 12:4; Rev. 2:7. So also Eph. 1:10. All persons in heaven and earth are to be gathered into one in Christ. 3:15. The family in heaven and earth are named after Christ. Christ came to save only men—to gather in one, men only. Only men wear his name. The church wears his name. Then the spirits of saints now in heaven, and the saints on earth, compose the church. Phil. 2:9, 10. Knees of men in heaven, in earth, and in hades, or beneath the earth, are to bow to Christ. Heb. 11:39. The Old Testament saints were not made perfect without those of the new. 12:22. These saints, or their spirits are made perfect, or redeemed from hades, and constitute, with those on earth, the church of the first born. Our skeptical teachings of modern times have obscured a very important part of the mission of Christ. The Scriptures make the redemption of the righteous from hades a very important part of this work. He redeemed the spirits of all the righteous who, before his ascent as a conqueror, had been imprisoned there; and abolished the power of hades over his saints, and opened heaven to them.

Our Savior in reply to Peter's confession of his Messiahship, declared on this truth—his Messiahship—he should build his church, and the gates of hades should not prevail against this truth—his Messiahship. He referred to this event, his triumphant ascent from hades with his redeemed, as a conqueror. He could not be holden of hades, but led forth his saints, proved his Messiahship, having spoiled principalities and authorities, he made a show of them openly by triumphing over them. Col. 2:15; 1 Pet. 3:22. Recurring now to 1 Pet. 3, we are told that baptism, an anti-type to this transaction, this descent of Christ into hades and his ascent therefrom as a conqueror, now saves us. We are told in Rom. 6 that our baptism is in the likeness of Christ's death, and is the form of doctrine delivered to the saints. In 1 Cor. 15 we learn that the doctrine was the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. Then baptism or immersion is a symbol of these facts, as in our burial in the water and resurrection therefrom, we set forth, or symbolize, or imitate the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. Also our death to sin, our burial thereto, and our rising to walk in newness of life. So also see Col. 2:12.

In like manner Peter tells our burial in baptism and our resurrection therefrom, as conquerors over sin, is the anti-type to our Savior's descent into hades and his triumphant ascent therefrom as a conqueror. Our descent into the water, our being hidden in it, and our rising therefrom to newness of life, is the anti-type to Christ's descent into hades, his being hidden from human sight in it, and his ascent from it, a conqueror. With this agrees the language in Col. 2—"Having been buried with him in baptism [immersion], by which also you have been raised with him, through the belief of the strong operation of God. For you, who were dead on account of trespasses and by the uncircumcision of your flesh, he made alive together with him, having forgiven all your trespasses, having blotted out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, nailing them to his cross—having spoiled governments and powers, he made a show of them openly, having triumphed over them by it."

Then the spirit of the thief went in a conscious state to hades. Christ's spirit, the Divine Logos, who went to hades and preached to the disobedient antediluvians—to their spirits, and triumphed over hades, was conscious between death and his resurrection. The spirits of the antediluvians were conscious in hades. The redeemed were conscious, and were led forth conscious. They are now conscious in heaven. As corroborative of this last statement, we call attention to five passages in Revelations, 5:9; 7:15; 14:3; 19:1-8; 21:4. Also 22:14, 15. It is freely granted that John saw these things in prophetic vision. But he saw them in the order in which they will occur. To this all agree. He saw the first five instances before the judgment. Or he saw in vision the spirits of the redeemed in heaven cotemporaneous with events which happen before the judgment, and before he saw the judgment, and before the first resurrection. Hence the good are in heaven, and conscious and praising God before the resurrection.

We have now showed that death does not extinguish the conscious being of the spirit. That the wicked are conscious between death and resurrection. By the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus. In the case of the antediluvians. In the case of the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah. We have showed from 2 Pet. 2:9 that "God knows how to reserve the being punished unjust unto the day of judgment." This proves the conscious existence of all the wicked. We have showed that the righteous are conscious before and until judgment. Rev. 22:

14, 15 declares that after judgment the wicked will be without the abode of the righteous, and banished from the society of God and all pure intelligences. Our Savior says their worm dieth not, and their fire is not quenched, symbols of endless punishment in a state of consciousness. He says they go away into everlasting punishment or torment, for so the word means. They are to suffer the vengeance of an eternal fire. That the smoke of their torment goes up forever. Hence we have the conscious existence of the wicked and the righteous between death and resurrection, and after resurrection their endless conscious existence.

Apostles always necessary in the Christian Church.

Such is the title of a tract put into my hands through the kindness of Br. Hall, of Enfield, Ct. The writer claims that living apostles in the church have always been necessary for its perfection, in doctrine and practice, and believes and advocates the restoration of the apostolic office before the coming of the Lord. We wish to notice a few of his reasons for his belief.

1. The author says (p. 1.): "If the office of apostle be not now necessary, the original constitution of the church must have undergone a change, either by the will of God or through the unfaithfulness of men." Then he goes on to show that there has been no change by the divine will. Yet he adds: "Yet that economy has been indisputably changed, and so far from the change having been for the better, the state of things produced under it has been such that the question forces itself upon every enquiring mind, "Why do such fruits grow in the garden of the Lord?" To which he answers, "Because the divine plan has been rejected, and human schemes substituted."

That is the true answer, and he thereby overthrows his own argument. "Rejected," not "changed." But he says, "that economy has been "indisputably changed.' Well, if so, then the "office of apostle is not now necessary," according to his own showing! But how do we know what that economy or plan is? Through the writings of the apostles, do we not? Certainly. But if living apostles were always necessary, then the church would be ruled and taught by the personal teachings, and presence of the living apostle and the epistles of their predecessors would be of no account; the church would learn what the plan of salvation was and their duties in connection therewith, through the living apostles, and the epistles of Paul, Peter and James and all the New Testament, would be useless, that is, if living apostles are absolutely necessary in the church, at all times, because they would be the medium of direct communication between the Church and its Divine Head.

2. "An apostleship, however, is only necessary to the church for a specified end—for her perfecting." (p. 2.) "Absolutely necessary for growth, for progress, for perfection." (p. 3.) We had always believed that the apostles were very essential in the establishing and planting of the Christian Church in the beginning; that they were called and fitted for that work; that they were miraculously assisted and protected in that work until it was effectually accomplished. But here we learn that the office of apostle is only necessary for the "perfection" of the church. To illustrate, the author uses the "natural body," with the principal organs wanting, as imperfect. So the church —the mystical body of Christ—without the "office of apostles" would be imperfect; therefore the "office of apostle is absolutely necessary" for the perfection of the body! The fallacy of the foregoing is seen at a glance. The "office" of an apostle, or any other office, was never a "member" of the body of Christ, or ever can be. The "body of Christ" is not composed of "offices" but of "members" bought with his own precious blood. Members may hold office in the church, but there may be, yes, and many there are, who hold no office in the Church of Christ, who, nevertheless, are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones." Therefore the "office" of apostle is not now necessary to the "perfection" of the body."

3. The divided state of the Christian church, is used as an argument for the restoration of the "apostolic office;" that in consequence of the "loss of living apostles, human wisdom supplied substitutes." Therefore, the only way to cement her divisions," to "settle her disputed questions," and "maintain godly order," is the restoration of a living apostleship.

The answer to this is plain. While the apostles were still living they were unable to prevent division in the Church could not prevent bad men and bad influences from creeping into the church and causing divisions even in their day. Could apostles subsequently, when the church had increased in membership a thousand fold, prevent divisions and sectarian parties from springing up better than their predecessors?

We think that the cry "I'm for Joseph," and "I'm for Joshua," would not have been prevented any more by subsequent apostles, than the cry "I'm for Paul," and "I'm for Appolos," was prevented by the first and only apostle of our Lord. We must remember that although there are divisions in the Christian world, the outward church, there is none in the body of Christ," for Christ is not divided.

True, the apostles denounced heresy, thundered their anathemas against those that preached "another gospel," and thereby caused divisions contrary to the doctrine which they taught; nevertheless, there were many anti-christs even in their days, making schisims in the church militant. What the first apostles were unable to prevent, their successors would have found equally as difficult to manage.

Rome has stood undivided for over a thousand years: is she the Church of Christ? She claims successorship to the apostles. Is she therefore the Church of Christ.

4. "But the main reason why this ministry is absolutely necessary to the church is because it was ordained by the Lord himself, as the first of four given for the perfecting of the saints, "till we all come in the unity of the faith, &c.," (p. 8.) Now, says our author, it is evident that the absence of any one member would in itself cause imperfection in the body." Granted. Keeping in view the fact, that the body of Christ is not composed of "offices" but of "members," is not the apostolic membership complete? Let us see. But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him." (1 Cor. 12: 18) But are you sure that he ever put any apostle in the body? "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles." (v. 28) Then the body is not imperfect for the want of apostles. They were the first members, were placed near the head, and may be were "ears," "eyes" and "mouth," to hear, see and speak for the body, to edification and instruction.

But says the author, they were to continue "till we all come into the unity of the faith, &c., and "that desired object is still future." That is, he means, the church is to have living apostles until the desired object mentioned in the text is accomplished, and that accomplishment is still future. Let us read. "When he ascended up on high. he gave gifts unto men." "And he gave some, apostles." Did he give all apostles? By no means. "And he gave some, prophets." Did he give all prophets? Not at all. "And he gave some evangilists, and some, pastors and teachers." What for? For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for edifying of the body of Christ. How long? "Till we all come in unity of the faith." Is that all? No. "And of the knowledge of the Son of God," unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the statue of the fulness of Christ." What more? That we henceforth be no more children tossed too and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive: but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things. It does not seem to me, that the above scripture teaches that the "perfection," "unity," and "knowledge" here spoken of was not to be obtained by the members of the body, until the future and final consummation. Why? Because after they obtain this "unity of the faith," this "knowledge of the Son of God, &c., they are "henceforth no longer to be children, carried to and fro with every wind of doctrine." There will be winds of doctrine afloat. There will be cunning and crafty men about to deceive. But the saints are not to be deceived, for they have come into the uniting power of that "faith" which unites them to the Son of God, and they are now to "grow up into him in all things." This looks like present work, and not future.

There has been no living apostles since the first twelve passed off the stage. And if it was absolutely necessary for the good of the church to have living apostles, why has the vacancy existed? Who, if any one, is to blame?

What is the meaning of apostle? Our author says, "one sent," an apostle of Jesus Christ then would be one sent by him, and him only, to preach his gospel. Christ's apostles could not obtain the office by succession; could not be appointed by kings, emperors, councils, synods or presbyters. They must be commissioned directly by the Great Head of the church. Well, if the church has been without them, since the "beloved disciple" on Patmos died, who is to blame?

If the Lord could only supply the necessity, and has failed to do it, is the church to blame? Dare we say, that living apostles have always been, are now, and always will be an absolute necesity, for the perfection of the church, and that necesity can only be supplied by the Lord, and he has failed to do it. Let him who will, make the charge, we dare not. We do not believe that there is one jot or tittle necessary for our salvation, left undone by the Savior of men.

In closing this too lengthy article, we will give a few reasons why we think the office of apostle will not be restored, or has not been necessary since the twelve have passed away.

1 It was absolutely necessary that the apostle should be in the church during her militant state; apostles would have been continued; for whatever was entirely with the Lord—dependent upon him, and not upon the obedience or faithfulness of the church, must be accomplished. I think every candid mind will acknowledge this great truth. There being no apostles since the first twelve, it has not been absolutely necessary or she would have had them.

2 The canon of Scripture would never have been complete. Living apostles would have been divinely inspired, and would have been the direct medium of revelation, as at the first, between God and the church, and the written Scriptures would always have been incomplete, multitudinous, and comparatively useless.

But it is said, "If the Scripture supersedes the ministry of apostles, it must, upon the same ground, render equally useless that of evangelist and pastor." Not at all. For apostle and and prophet were endowed with the gift of revelation, which in time was to fail—cease; while the others, evangelist and pastor, were to continue to the end to feed the flock—to be examples to the flock—while the gift of revelation, and the power to work miracles were only bestowed upon the apostles and prophets, and ceased, passed away, when they ceased their labors.

3 Living apostles are not needed now, because we virtually have them in their writings. All that is necessary for the salvation of mankind, for the elucidation of the plan of redemption, for direction of all believers, in all ages since the establishment of the Christian religion, in doctrine, in principle, in precept, in practice, public or private, at home or abroad, in all relations of life, in all conditions of society, in all church relations, in everything, the Scriptures given by inspiration, are sufficient "that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. He could be no better off with living apostles.

4 There never could be more than twelve apostles. Don't be startled, reader, for the statement is true. Jesus called but twelve in the beginning, and a vacancy occuring by the apostasy of Judas, the rest of the apostles undertook to fill the vacancy by casting lots, and the "lot fell upon Matthias." The election was not sanctioned by the Lord, for he did not call his apostles by casting lots for them, but personally; so he afterwards called Paul, and qualified him for the work and duties of an apostle, and he took the place of Judas, and the number twelve was complete again. There never were more than twelve, and there never can or will be more than that number. As there were twelve tribes in Israel, so there were twelve apostles of the Lamb. Jesus promised the twelve as follows: "Ye which have followed me in the regeneration, shall sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." There are only "twelve thrones;" there will be but twelve apostles to occupy them. In that city of the living God there are twelve gates, and on the gates the names of the twelve tribes of Israel; there are also twelve foundations, and on them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb. Twelve apostles, not twenty-four, or five hundred.

So, when the King of glory, having gathered together the multitude of the redeemed, out of the twelve tribes, and out of every nation, kindred, tongue and people, and they come flocking from the north and from the south, from the east and from the west, they will find on the north three gates, on the south three gates, an the east three gates, and on the west three gates, for their admittance; and on these gates will be inscribed the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, and the saved from Israel's tribes will say, "We may enter!" and the saved from among all nations will see the names of the twelve apostles on the foundations, and say, "We believed on Jesus through their word," and we can go in and have a share in this glory!"

5 If the living apostle was always necessary in the church, or is to be restored to the church, then the gifts would have always been in the church, or will be restored to her in the last days. The restoration of the gifts the Scriptures do not teach, but the contrary. "Charity never faileth; but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away." (1 Cor. 13: 8.) "And now abideth (remaineth) faith, hope and charity, these three;" if we have not these, we are nothing. The whole faith, and duties, and joys of the Christian life is embraced in these three. We need not look for the restoration of apostles, or of apostolic gifts, for we shall never see them more.

My Three Little Texts.

I am very young and little,
  I am only just turned two,
And I cannot learn long chapters,
  As my elder sisters do;

But I know three little verses,
  That mamma has taught me,
And I say them every morning,
  As I stand beside her knee.

The first is "Thou God seest me."
  Is not that a pretty text?
And "Suffer little children
  To come unto me," is the next.

But the last one is the shortest,
  It is only, "God is love."
How kind he is in sending us
  Such sweet verses from above!

He knows that chapters I can't learn,
  So I think he sent those three Short, easy texts on purpose
  For little ones like me.

A True Bear Story.

"Auntie, did any big black bears ever kill any children when you was a little girl?" asked wee Dotty Dimple.

"No darling, black bears dont often kill little children," replied Aunt Mary, "though we did get badly frightened about my little sister one day."

"Why, what was it?" and the children's eyes opened very wide.

"Nothing wonderful," said Aunty, with a smile, "only this: My little sister had gone with the neighbors' children to gather huckleberries, which grew on a part of my father's farm, quite away in the woods. About an hour after she started, a bear carried off a large hog belonging to one of the neighbors. We heard the hog squeal, and guessed the cause. Soon afterward we learned that some men who were near beat the bear with clubs, and made him give up his prey, but could not kill him, and we were afraid the baffled and enraged animal would attack the children, who were picking berries near this run-way, as we supposed. There was no one at home to go for the children; mother looked anxious, but kept calmly about her work, and I was in a perfect state of excitement till the happy laughing children returned."

"Aunty, I don't see how the bear could carry off another animal as large as himself, and that animal alive and kicking, too," said Harry. They all laughed.

"The bear raised himself on his hind-feet took the huge porker in his fore-paws, or arms, and carried him as you would a naughty screaming child, and if the men had not overtaken him, he would have soon hugged the squealer to death."

"Why, is that the way bears kill things?" asked Nellie.

"Yes, they hug them to death," replied Auntie, smiling.

"Did the children in the woods see the bear?" asked Nellie.

"No; when I told my little sister how anxious we had been, she opened her eyes very wide, and wished she had seen the bear. 'What would you have done if you had seen him?' asked my mother, much amused. 'Oh! I would have just screamed and clapped my hands so,' suiting the action to the word, 'and then he would have run off.'"

"My sister was right; that was the very thing some children did a few years afterward. In an ajoining township, one of the district school-houses was built in a dense forest, half a mile from my house; the spot was romantic, but lonelp. One morning a little brother and sister, aged only seven and five years, started for school; their path lay across a narrow swale, over which was a bridge formed of a single plank. When the children reached the plank they saw a huge bear near the other end coming toward them; they were not at all frightened, but began to shout: 'A bear! a bear!' The bear frightened at the sound of their voices, turned into the swale, where there was less brushwood, and ran for his life, the two children following in hot pursuit, shouting: 'A bear! a bear!'

"But Bruin rapidly increased the distance between them, and it occured to the boy's mind that they might be late to school, so they left the bear and returned to the school-house. Their story alarmed the teacher, a timid young girl, and seeing the father of the children passing, she called him in.

"He listened attentively to the children's recital, then turning to the teacher, said: 'I guess it is so. I'll start my oxen homeward, and go and see.' He went to the swale, and found great heavy tracks, so large that the bear must have weighed four or five hundred pounds, and close beside these, tiny foot-prints of the little ones as they followed after.

"'It made my hair raise,' said he in relating the incident afterward, 'to think how easily that monster might have hugged both of my precious children to death;' and the strong man's lips quivered; 'but bears are afraid of the human voice, and their fearlessness and childish shouts were the means of their safety,' he added quietly. 'And,' thought the listeners, 'the Lord cared for the little ones.'"—Advance.

The History of Opinions Concerning the State of the Dead. No. 2.

Of the opinions concerning the dead till the time of Austin. In the second and third centuries, those who believed that there was a soul distinct from the body supposed that after death it went to some place under ground; but as this is not the doctrine of the Scriptures it could not have been the general opinion at the first of Christians, and how long they kept to the genuine doctrine of revelation, and the dictates of reason and common sense, in this respect, cannot be determined. It appears, however, that there were some Christians who did so, and that in Arabia this doctrine was held by some as late as the third century. For we are informed that they maintained that the soul perishes with the body, but that it will be raised to life again, by the power of God, at the resurrection. It is said, however, that they were induced to abandon this opinion by the arguments and influence of Origen.....Du Pin says, that Tatian also held the opinion of the Arabians with respect to the soul.

It is to be regretted that we have no further accounts concerning these Christians. Ecclesiastical historians call them philosophers; but the system which they held was fundamentally different from that of any other philosophy of those times. It cannot, however be supposed that this opinion was peculiar to these people. The Jewish Christians, at least, must have retained it, and probably as long as they continued to subsist. But we have no distinct account of their opinions, or of anything relating to them. They were not writers themselves, and those that were had little intercourse with them, or value for them.

Whenever the Jews received the opinion of the separate existence of the soul, it was in the imperfect state above mentioned. For they held that there was a place below the earth, which they called paradise, where the souls of good men remained; and they distinguished this from the upper paradise, where they were to be after the resurrection. The Christians borrowed their opinion from the Jews, and supposed that Hades, or the place of souls, was divided into two mansions, in one whereof the souls of the wicked remained in grief and torment and in the other, those of the godly, in joy and happiness; both of them expecting the general resurrection day.

Into this general receptacle of souls, it was the opinion of the early fathers, that Christ descended to preach; they supposing these to be the "spirits in prison" mentioned by the apostle Peter 1 Pet. 3: 19. And as it is said in the gospel that he came "not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance," some of them supposed either that he did not give much attention to the good, or that they did not attend to him; for they say that, whereas he brought away many of the wicked, he left those of the good where they were. But perhaps the original tradition was, that in consequence of converting them, he removed them from the place where the wicked were confined, to this subterraneous paradise, where the souls of the righteous remain in joyful expectation of a happy resurrection. Others, however, thought that our Savior preached so effectually, as to empty the whole of this limbus patrum (for so also they called the precincts within which these patriarchs were confined) and carried all the souls with him into heaven. But this must have been a late opinion, because it was not supposed in the time of the fathers, that the souls of good men in general would be with Christ, and enjoy what was then called the beatific vision of God, till the resurrection,

This opinion is clearly stated by Novatian, for he says, 'Nor are the regions below the earth void of powers (protestatibus) regularly disposed and arranged; for there is a place whither the souls of the righteous and of the wicked are led, expecting the sentence of a future judgment.' This was evidently the uniform opinion of Christian writers for many centuries after this time.

The article concerning the Descent of Christ into hell, in what we call the "Apostle's Creed," is not mentioned by any writer before Rufinus, who found it in his own church at Aquileia; but it was not then known at Rome, or in the East. At first, also, the expression was katachthonia, but 'in the creed that carries Athanasius's name, though made in the sixth or seventh century, the word was changed into hades or hell. But yet it seems to have been understood to signify Christ's burial, there being no other word put for it in that creed.' But in the declension of the Greek, and chiefly in the Latin tongue, the term hades or hell, began to be applied to the mansion of wicked souls; some of the fathers imagining hades to be in the centre of the earth, others under the earth, and some being uncertain about its situation.

The high opinion that soon began to be entertained of the heroism and merits of the martyrs, led Christians to suppose that a preference would be given to their souls after death. For while the souls of ordinary Christians were to await their doom in some intermediate state, or to pass to their final bliss through a purgation of fire, it came to be the general belief that martyrs were admitted to the immediate presence of God and of Christ, the fire of martyrdom having purged away all their sins at once.

It was the opinion of most of the early fathers that the world was to be destroyed by fire, and also that all men were to pass through this fire; that the good would be purified by it, and the wicked consumed. The former part of this doctrine they might learn from the apostle Peter; but it does not clearly appear whence they derived the latter part of it. It is evident, however, that they had no proper idea of the eternity of hell torments. And it was the opinion of Origen, and after him of Gregory Nazianzen, and probably of others of the fathers, that the wicked, after being thus punished according to their deserts, would come out purified, and obtain mercy. Ambrose thought the wicked would remain in this fire, which was to consume the world, but how long, does not appear. Hilary maintained that after the day of judgment all must pass through the fire, even the Virgin Mary herself, in order to purify them from their sins. This opinion was the first idea of a doctrine of purgatory, which was so great a source of gain to the monks and priests in after ages.

Austin speaks very doubtfully with respect to the dead. He sometimes seems very positive for two states only; but as he asserted the last probatory fire, so he seems to have thought that good souls might suffer some grief in their sequestered state, before the last day, on account of some of their past sins, and that they might rise to their proper consummation by degrees. See his sentiments on this subject pretty much at large in his first question to Dulcidius; where he inclines to think that they who have faith in Christ, but love the world too much, will be saved, but so as by fire; whereas, they who, though they profess faith in Christ, yet neglect good works, will suffer eternally. In his treatise, De Civitate Dei, he does not seem disposed to controvert the opinion of those who say that all will be saved at last, through the intercession of the saints.

The Gnostics are said to have maintained that the greatest part of mankind would be annihilated at the day of judgment, which was probably the same thing that was meant by those who said that they would be consumed in the fire that was to destroy the world."—Extracts from the writings of Joseph Priestly, by F. H. Burbank.—(To be continued.)

Light Wanted.

I have often been led to investigate the subject of so-called "spirit communication," and will offer a few thoughts and ask a few questions of the readers of THE TIMES. My point is the ancient "familiar spirits," and their works. It is generally supposed by the world at large, and so far as I know, by Adventists too, that these familiar spirits claimed to be the spirits of dead men, or that those who had them, and those who consulted them, put in this claim for them. Now I wish to know on what ground this claim is based. Does it profess to be based on, and come from the Bible? If so, will some one be so good as to give us the chapter and verse where such a thought is put forth. Now like Paul, I may be guilty of too confident boasting, yet I will assert that there is not one passage to show that the familiar spirits of ancient time, were, or even claimed to be the spirits of men; either live men or dead men. I shall claim this as a fact, and unless some one shall disprove it by chapter and verse, it must stand. If this is a fact, it is an important one. For if they were not, neither pretended to be spirits of the dead, then all argument from them to prove the ghosts of dead men are alive, falls to the ground.

Now let us look at their work. It is generally supposed, that by means of this familiar spirit, those who possessed them could and did call, and converse with the spirits of the dead. Now I shall deny, not only that they did do this, but that they even pretended to do it. If they did, where is the record of it. It was not the spirits of the dead they professed to talk with, but the real dead themselves; not while dead, but they professed power to raise them up to talk with them personally. This I shall assert as a second fact. I wish it moved out of the way, if it can be. But if it cannot be, by the plain word, it must stand as an immovable pillar in the path of immaterialism.

We have, I think, but one account of a professed communication of this kind in the Bible—that of Saul and Samuel. (1 Sam. 28.) Let us read this account and we shall get all the pretensions there is put forth in this, and, of course, all transactions of the kind. The familiar spirit is one ready to communicate; one wise to answer questions. In other words, a demon, a wise one. Now let us see what is expected of the woman by, or through means of it. (v. 8), "And Saul said, I pray thee divine unto me, by the familiar spirit." It is a spirit of divination then. Now notice if it is a spirit he calls for "And bring me him up whom I shall name unto thee." "Whom shall I bring up unto thee?" Not whose spirit, but "whom shall I call up." Now do spirits go down? None claim that they do. Then it is not a spirit that he is after, but something that had gone down. "And he said, Bring me up Samuel." Had Samuel gone down? See v. 3. "Now Samuel was dead, and all Israel had lamented him and buried him in Ramah." So we see he was dead, and gone down in the grave, was buried. So Samuel could not be had, nor conversed with, unless brought up. And this was demanded of her, and this she pretended to do. Now whatever she pretended to bring up, that she also pretended to describe. Said Saul, "What form is he of? She makes no pretense that it is a spirit, but, "she said, An old man cometh up, and he is covered with a mantle." This was no doubt the way he went down or was buried, "covered with a mantle." Hence, to decieve Saul, she must describe him as "coming up," as he went down. She was successful, for we read—"And Saul [from this description] perceived it was Samuel." Here then, is no dead man's spirit, nor any pretence to any. Hence, to try to any argument from this narrative, to sustain the consciousness of the spirit of a man in death, is begging the whole question, and reasoning from pure assumption. Is not our only knowledge of ancient necromancy from the Bible? If so, is it not the present assumption that it was seeking communications from the spirits of the dead, a false position, while the true position is that the witch, necromancer, or what not, through means of the familiar spirit (which is equivalent to the word demon, or wise one, or knowing one) pretended to raise up the dead, and converse with them. Am I correct? If not, will some one set me right. Only so long ago as Salem witch-craft times, a witch was not one who was possessed with spirits of dead men, but one in league with the devil, by means of whom, he or she, bewitched others. If then, a witch, or one who had a familiar spirit, laid no claim to the spirit of a dead man in them, why should others put it in for them at this late date?

We read in Acts 16: 16-18, of a woman, or damsel, who had the same familiar spirit, or spirit of divination, as the woman at Endor; sooth-saying or divining was her business. But Paul commanded the demon to come out of her, in the name of Jesus Christ and it obeyed. A familiar spirit, then, is a demon spirit, or divining spirit, and not a man's spirit. Also, those who possessed them did not pretend it was the spirit of a man, nor that by it they talked with other spirits, but with the dead themselves, and to this end pretended to bring them up. Am I right? To the law and the testimony. Light is wanted. Who has it? Let your light shine. O. D. GIBSON.

Prayer With Reference to the Coming of the Lord.

BY REV. JOHN COX, OF ENGLAND.

PRAYER! what a precious privilege! The Lord's coming! what a glorious prospect! How much does the Holy Spirit dwell on each of these subjects in the New Testament! But we propose now, to study them together, and to inquire, What is the teaching of the New Testament on Prayer, as found in connection with the Lord's personal advent? Having gone over those holy writings with a view to ascertain this point, I would place before the reader the result of this investigation, earnestly inviting every one to search out the subject for himself, and not to take any man's word without personal and prayerful inquiry at the mouth of the Lord.

1. I do not find that our Lord or his Apostles, anywhere in the Gospels or Epistles, taught or commanded the saints to make special supplication that the Lord might return immediately.

2. I do not find throughout the Acts or Epistles that primitive saints ever did so pray; nor do I find any such request in any of the many prayers of the Apostle Paul.

3. I find many prayers and exhortations, in which the Lord's coming is introduced; but all these prayers have a direct bearing on the state of mind, and practical condition of the saints. The terms, "Be ye ready," "Watch and pray always," "Be ye like unto men that wait for their Lord," are used by the Lord himself. A variety of words setting forth what should be the position of saints, in which "waiting" and "patience" are prominent, are found in the prayers and teachings of the Apostles.

These things are specially to be seen in the Epistles to the Thessalonians, where the Lord's glorious personal appearing is so constantly referred to. In them there is no prayer presented for his immediate return. All have reference to practical meetness (see 1 Thes. 3: 10-13; 5: 23; 2 Thes. 1: 11, 12), closing with "the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ." (2 Thes. 3: 5.)

4. Rom. 8; 23-25; 13: 11-13; Acts 3; 19; Phil. 2: 16; 1 John 2; 28, and many other similar texts, refer to "the coming of the Lord," "the resurrection of the body," "the day." In all of these, special mention is made of what should be the habits, feelings and conduct produced by the expectation of this "coming," this "redemption," this "day;" but there is no prayer for the Lord to come immediately.

5. In the Lord's prophecy on Olivet, recorded in Matt. 24, Mark 13, and Luke 21, and in which his second advent is so prominent, there are no directions given to pray for his return. Neither do we find any in his last discourse, John 13-16, in which he dwells so largely on his going away, his absence, and his return. He speaks of the privilege, sufferings, and services of his true disciples, and foretells their persecutions even to death (John 16: 1, 2). From his last words, just before he ascended (Acts 1: 6-8), it would seem to be his will that his people should diligently occupy themselves with their proper work, rather than be curiously inquiring about "the time of restoring Israel."

6. The figure used by our Lord in Matt. 24, and Luke 12: 35-40, i. e. "that of servants waiting for their Lord," would seem to imply that their great business is so to wait, watch and work, as to be always ready for his coming; ready to rise and "open to him immediately." His word is, "Occupy till I come," which means that we should employ ourselves with whatever he has committed to us. (Matt. 25: 14.) Whether we should be continually sending petitions for his immediate return, while the events which he so plainly predicted yet remain to be accomplished, may well be questioned. While thus occupied as his servants, true saints must ever earnestly desire to realize that they "are married to him who is raised from the dead;" and that they should not only seek to "bring forth fruit unto God," but to cherish warm and earnest desires to see him as he is, "to be forever with him," and fully "like him." This submissive waiting, cheerful obedience, and loving, patient longing, should be increasingly found in all the saints of God.

7. In Rev. 22: 20, at the very close of the New Testament, the Lord announces, "BEHOLD I COME QUICKLY," and the loving heart of John readily responds "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." And surely every redeemed heart should feel the same desire. But "quickly," is not immediately; the one expression (see Rev. 1: 1; 22: 6, where a similar word is rendered "shortly") is consistent with the expectation of all the events that the Lord has said must first come to pass; the latter is not. We know that death will reign; Satan will destroy; man will remain unblessed; Israel will wander on in blindness, and nature continue to groan under the curse, till the Lord shall come: and, therefore for that coming we look and long and do not wish it delayed; far, far from that. But is there no difference between such a desire, while we know from the Lord himself that some events must first occur; and prayer for those spiritual blessings which we may expect at once to realize? (See Eph. 3: 16–19; Phil. 1: 9–11, etc, etc.,)

Let us also carefully consider what those words, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus," mean, as used by the beloved disciple; and seek to have fellowship with him in his desire. John does not say, as many make him to do, "come immediately," he simply says, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." Does not this teach us the harmony subsisting, between the thoughts of the Master and those of the disciple? Did not John know that there would certainly be some events first? Had he not just received a prophecy about things yet to occur, which would be crowned and consummated by the Lord coming? Was he not informed that the very begining of this series of events was yet future? (Rev. 1: 19; 4; 1.) Surely we may conclude that whatever reserve as regards time, there was in the Lord's mind when he used the word "quickly," that was submissively acquiesced in by John, when he said, "Even so." John's desire, we believe, was, "Come, Lord, as soon as thine own glory, and the events foretold as first to transpire, will allow." The same thought should occupy our minds while using these words, and also while we say "Our Father, thy kingdom come." We cannot do wrong in studying and using these two expressions in the light of Rev. 11: 15–18; 2 Tim. 4: 1: Luke 21: 25, 31. It is thus we should look and long for his appearing; intensely desire "the coming of God's kingdom," look for and "hasten unto the coming of the day of God" (2 Pet. 3: 12.) The beloved John, while uttering his "Even so, come, Lord Jesus," had no doubt respect to his own well-known rule as regards prayer, "If we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us:" and we should desire the Lord's coming and kingdom according to God's revealed will, and not according to any human theory. God's revealed will is, that he will give some previous signs which the godly shall not mistake, and which the wicked will not regard (Luke 21: 28 and 35); and that then there will be a glorious visible appearing of the Lord, which all will behold (Tit. 2: 13; Rev. 1: 7); but that all will be preceded by a time of sore and unparalleled tribulation.

The human theory teaches a dissociation of the coming of the Lord from the day of the Lord, which are ever blended together in God's testimony—a secret coming and silent rapture—and an exemption of Christians from the persecutions predicted. Prayer for such a coming of Christ as this, is, we believe, not only unknown in the New Testament, but opposed most decidedly to all its teachings. We who believe that there are certain events to transpire before the Lord comes, do yet earnestly desire that coming: it is our "blessed hope," our pole-star, and our theme of rejoicing. We know, also, that intensity of desire for the arrival of a friend, or the occurrence of an event, is quite compatable with a firm conviction that what is desired will not be immediate: yes, that is on some accounts not desireable that it should be immediate. The prophet Jeremiah did most intensely desire the restoration of Israel, though he knew that seventy years must first intervene: and knew also that it was best it should be so. (Jer. 29: 10, 14.) It would be easy to produce other illustrations, and to show how they bear on the coming and kingdom of the Lord Jesus.

It may be objected that this principle would afford a plea to "Post-Millennialists;" but there is this difference in the two cases. They look for a Millennium first, and interpose many ages of blessing for earth, between the present time and the Lord's coming to raise his saints from the dust; we only expect events which are the predicted precursors and accompaniments of the Lord's personal appearing. We can heartily pray "that it may please him shortly to accomplish the number of his elect, and to hasten his heavenly kingdom." We can say, with all humble submission, "How long, Lord?" "Arise, and plead thine own cause." "Rend the heavens and come down," etc.; but how persons can at one and the same time earnestly pray for earth's millennial blessing, intensely desire the Lord's personal coming, and yet believe that the coming is after the kingdom, passes our comprehension. Our firm belief is, that there is not a single plain proof text for either a Post-Millennial or a Secret Pre-Antichrist Advent.

Those who assert that it is impossible to "look," to "watch," and "wait," for the Lord's return, whilst expecting certain events first, and looking out for these as signs of his coming, place themselves in a singular position as regards the saints in apostolic times. We ask especial attention to this point.

Let us turn from human reasoning, and confident assertion, to Divine teaching and incontrovertible facts. We ask the reader to accompany us to Olivet; to sit down with the disciples at the Lord's feet, and hear him sketch the outline of events from his ascension into glory to the end of the age. Matt. 24: 4–14, contains this grand outline. Two things are as evident as daylight. The one is, that our Lord told his disciples that between his ascension and second coming there would be a series of events which would occupy a long time (see his own words, Matt. 25: 12), and which we know has already been more than 1,800 years. The other is that as soon as he was gone to the Father, they whom he addressed, and their associates, should at once take the attitude called for in the conclusion of this prophecy. They were to begin to "wait," "watch," etc. (Matt. 24: 42; Luke 12: 35.) Will any dare to deny that this was their duty, or to say that it was impossible for them and their converts to do this with their previous knowledge that there would certainly be many intervening events and also certain "signs" of the advent? If it was not impossible for them to watch under such circumstances, neither is it for us, who are so much nearer the Lord's return. Therefore we believe that it was to CHRISTIANS, and not to a fancied Jewish remnant, or any other body, the Lord speaks, when he says, "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." Together with this precept and promise, we do well to study the parable that follows respecting the fig tree. (See Matt. 24: 32, 33). Truly the Lord himself will "come as a thief;" and so will "the day" of the Lord come. (Rev. 16: 15; 2 Pet. 3: 10.) But "that day will not overtake those as a thief" who are the Children of the day (1 Thes. 5: 6), not because (as some without warrant, and in the face of abundant testimony to the contrary, have said) they will be taken away before the day comes, but because they will be made aware, if they watch, of the approach of the coming day. What can be more express than the words of Matt. 24: 33: "So likewise ye, when YE shall SEE all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors." The Lord will come as a thief, not to steal away his own secretly, but to surprise his enemies in their security. "For when they shall say, Peace and safety, sudden destruction shall come upon them;" and this will be at the very time, and not years after, when the Lord gives rest to his troubled ones, and is glorified in them that believe. (2 Thes. 1: 10.)

Those persons incur a very solemn responsibility indeed, who at the present period, introduce doctrines so utterly unknown in Scripture as a "secret advent," a "silent resurrection" and a taking away the saints before the time of the last troubles. Such teachings may appear to be spiritual, but if not founded on truth, all the feelings induced by them may produce an unfitness to meet the times of trial, delusion, and persecution which may be very near at hand; and perhaps also lead on to further extravagancies. There have been many sad results in all ages, and some in our own times, in connection with crude and positive teachings about the Lord's immediate coming. These things ought to be a warning beacon at the present time. The enemy of truth and souls ever seeks to lead into error on this point; and has more than once succeeded, by means of extravagances and positive assertions, to prejudice Christians against the doctrine of the Lord's coming altogether. We had need indeed to "watch and pray always;" not only as regards the Lord's coming itself, but as it respects ourselves and our treatment of the doctrine. Concerning two things we feel the greatest confidence: that there will be no time of universal blessing before the Lord comes, and that his personal coming will introduce "the times of refreshing," the times of the restitution of all things. These two facts should make his appearing an object of intense desire. But our desire should be intelligent, as well as intense. We must hope according to God's word. The Thessalonions had intense desire, but lacked intelligence; and soon evil resulted, as is sure to be the case. Paul gave them the needed information in his Second Epistle, and Christ has also given us much needed instruction in his parables and prophecies. Thus (as one says) he takes his people into a place of confidence as regards the future, which it would be most ungrateful in them to overlook. (Jno. 15: 15.)

If a premillennialist is asked, How can you be looking for Christ, if you expect events first? let him not be moved. Paul and Peter both knew that they should die, yet both intensely desired the Lord's coming. Paul often, as an individual, spake of his death (Phil. 1: 21–23; 2 Tim. 4: 6–8; Acts 20: 24; 2 Cor. 5: 1, 2, etc.); but when he spake corporately of the church, using "we" and "our" instead of "I," then the coming of the Lord, the rapture and resurrection, were usually referred to. It is the Lord we look for. We would much rather not die (2 Cor. 5: 2, 3); but this we leave with the Lord of life and conqueror of death.

There are three things which those who are waiting for the Lord's coming should especially take heed to, and pray over much and often.

1. Practical separation from whatever the Lord has denounced in his word, and which is doomed to perish before or at the day of his appearing. "HEW DOWN THE TREE," will soon be uttered by "the heavenly watchers," and this world's greatness and glory will fall to rise no more. (Is. 2: 24.)

Believers have to watch that they be not now found engaged in sustaining or strengthening anything on which the Lord will pour his wrathful judgments in that day. There are principles alive and active in all the great systems in which unregenerate man is at present glorifying, which will no doubt ripen into that last fearful form of evil, which the Lord will smite and grind to powder. "Get away from under this tree, get out of its branches;" is God's plain command. Come out, and be separate; cling to nothing that God has doomed; make excuses for nothing that is contrary to the first principles of his heavenly kingdom, and which conscience, enlightened by his word, writhes under. Strong delusions have twined around those who have resisted truth and conscience in what some think to be small things. Dream not, oh Christian, of being taken away by a "secret rapture" out of that evil which you sanction, or do not protest against, and just leaving others to reap what you help to sow. You cannot build up "wood, hay, and stubble," without being a loser. Ah, have not some real saints good reason to pray that the Lord may not come and find them just where they are, or doing what they now are doing? "Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments," who honestly aims at non-conformity to and separation from this present evil world.

2. To abide by faith in him for whose glorious appearing we look, should be our constant aim. "And now, little children, abide in him; that when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming." (Mark how the words coming and appear are used here interchangeably.) But the great point is "abide in him." Let us study, then, these words in the light of the Lord's last and most precious parable. (John 15: 1–10) Continuous Contact with him —let that be our great aim. To be resting on him: receiving from him; realizing that he is to us all he has promised to be, and that we are in him all that God has said, is our present privilege. Thus believing in him though we see him not, "we shall rejoice in him, with joy unspeakable and full of glory." We shall rejoice in his perfect work—in his present glory, in our oneness with him, and in the hope of his coming. Thus 'abiding in him and his words abiding in us, we shall ask what we will and it shall be done unto us." We shall have his gracious presence here (John 14: 21–23), and hope, through infinite grace, to "be presented faultless before the presence of God's glory with exceeding joy."

3. Loving service in the sphere which he has apointed for us, should become the habit of our life. Not aspiring to what we are unfit for, nor shrinking from what "our hands find to do." "Occupy till I come" are words which we should ever ponder; and, 'what wilt thou have me to do?' "Teach me to do thy will;" "Father glorify thy name," "that Christ may be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death"—are prayers we may and should ever confidently offer. "For our Lord Jesus Christ died for us, that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him." "Wherefore comfort one another with these words." "Gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ."

Everlasting Fire.

This expression is thought to be strong proof in favor of the orthodox theory, of the eternal life of the wicked in a state of endless misery. Hence, I inquire, What is the nature of this everlasting fire? Will it destroy or preserve the wicked? Can it do more or less than eternal fire? Sodom and Gomorrah and the cities about them, were destroyed by eternal fire. (Jude 6.) Are they wrapped in flames and burning to-day? Certainly not. The waters of the Dead Sea now stand over their site. Eternal fire did not preserve them, but according to Peter, turned them to ashes. "And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes, condemned them with an overthrow, making them an example unto those that after should live ungodly." (2 Pet. 2: 6.) Will everlasting fire do less, or will it do more? We read, "Behold the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch....they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet, in the day that I shall do this, saith the God of hosts." (Mat. 4: 1–3.) Mark the expressions: "Burn up the wicked;" "Leave them neither root nor branch;" "They shall be ashes!" These are Bible expressions, and mean something. When a thing is burned up, where is it? When left neither root nor branch, is it still in existence? When the wicked are reduced to ashes, are they still conscious beings, suffering the agonies of a death that never dies? Surely the Scriptures do not teach such absurdities.

These examples show that everlasting and eternal fire, means the same fire, Christ affirms that, "The same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all." (Lk. 17: 29, 30.) This fire Jude calls eternal. Peter says it reduced the cities to ashes. Of the wicked Christ declares "it destroyed them all," and adds "Even thus shall it be when the Son of man is revealed."

It is called everlasting or eternal fire, because eternal in its effects. Hence Paul argues the wicked shall be punished [not banished, as often quoted, but punished] with everlasting destruction." (2 Thes. 1: 9.) Everlasting, because irrevocable. On the same principle, we read of "eternal judgment," not eternally in session, but irreversible, not to be recalled or changed. Hence, the expressions, everlasting fire, eternal fire, and eternal judgment, mean that fire and judgment which are eternal in their results.

" " " Iowa has abolished capital punishment. The horrors of a late hanging in Tennessee, with a thrice broken rope, suggests the propriety of a similar statute there.

" " " Political feeling is already running high, and we may look for a hotly contested campaign from now until next November. The persistency of the opposition to Gen. Grant is only equalled by the fierceness of the opposition to that "opposition." Personalities are bandied with a frequency reminding one of a theological debate.

" " " Beecher, in a recent lecture on Wall street, delivered in Boston, said: "I have buried four generations of men from Wall street in twenty five years. Wall street is a dunghill of mushrooms. There is a vast growth of men in every single year, and every year they are trampled down in hosts. I know but one or two men in that time who have been able to make permanent gains and hold their gains. And they didn't do it by speculation; they added other means of accumulation, which were the foundation of their stability; and I believe that all men are trying to be rich in uncanny ways, and trying to be rich without paying for what they get."

ABROAD.

" " " There has been a great strike of agricultural laborers in England. If reports are correct, they have been but little better off than slaves.

" " " The reports of a new war between France and Germany seem to have been premature. But France is reorganizing her armies upon a vast scale. Able-bodied men will all be soldiers.

" " " We have had a rumor that the ex-Emperor intends to come over from Chislehurst some day, take the head of the army, and hurl himself upon the Prussians in Alsatia and Lorraine, wresting from them the conquered provinces, and proclaiming anew the Second Empire in a reconstructed France. Slightly Quixotic, that.

The Italian king on the throne at Madrid assures Spain he will not remain there unless sustained by a majority of the people; but he warns minorities to be on their good behavior.

" " " Just when California, and the Lower Mississippi, and Antioch have had more or less severe earthquakes, Vesuvius is stirred to unusual activities, and is now spouting flames several hundred feet above its crater. Some of the secular papers suggest that if signs and wonders in the earth are really a sign of its so called "end," that the present days are indeed highly suggestive of that event. So we think.

" " " England seems to be, amused we think describes the public feeling with which the duration of the present ministry is calculated. Gladstone has several bad jobs—the Alabama case, etc.—on hand that no other statesman wants to take in hand, and so he remains in power. The settlement of some of the most difficult problems any premier has been compelled to solve, is to be the sequel for his political overthrow.

" " " Of Church reform in Europe it is said: Not alone in Lutheran North Germany, but in two of the most intensely Pabistical States—Austria and Bavaria—the old Catholics have secured the earnest of a final victory over Ultramontanism. Following in the wake of Prince Bismarck and Herr von Lutz the Auersperg Ministry at Vienna has struck a blow for Dr. Dollinger. It has decreed that, while the Old Catholics voluntarily remain in the Church, they are to be regarded by the Government as Churchmen to all intents and purposes. In respect of recent tangible advantage this signifies much. It implies that the priests who follow Dollinger are to retain the right of celebrating mass, of confirming, marrying, burying, and performing all other functions of their office. It affirms that no change will necessarily result in their legal status from a disavowal of the doctrine of Papal infallibility. It involves ultimate consequences which can hardly be anticipated by minds penetrated, as the German Protestant mind unquestionably is, with a sense of the Grandeur of Luther's own revolution. So far everything has happened favorably for the realization of a certain unuttered hope in the religious breasts of Germany—a hope still too vague and profound for words—rather a patriotic vision than a personal sentiment.

One day the Kaiserthum, it is dreamed, will consecrate itself by the declaration of a purified national faith and the emancipation of the German conscience from dogma. Old Catholicism, by the circumstances of its origin, and still more by the influence of its founders, has struck that chord of religious romance which is ever thrilling through the German heart. Its reverence for the best traditions of the past, and its fervent augeries for the future, have elevated it into a power which has made converts among the statesmen of Berlin, of Munich and of Vienna. The policy it suggested has been executed by the master hand of the Imperial Chancellor. Rome has been warned off the domain of Frederick Barbarossa. The ecclesiastical rights claimed have been conceded even beyond the limits of the Empire, and the permission now given to remain within the church is tantamount to a guarantee that in a few years Germany will be purged from Jesuitism and all the sacerdotal usurpations of the Vatican. In Germany the purgation will be rapid; and, while Prince Bismarck continues Chancellor, it promises to be facile. He has cowed the Ultramontanes too thoroughly for them to make a stand against him. But in Austria they have still incalculable power of mischief. Count Auersperg's preliminary challenge had to be cautiously disguised; nevertheless, since the appointment of a committee, with a strong liberal bias, to regulate the position of the old Catholics, the Austrian clericals have discovered that the Dollinger thundercloud also overshadows them.

The Way.

The way is plain,
And yet how many stray!
The way is peace,
But how few cease
To search for other way,
And strive and strain,
And failing alway, lay
The blame on God,
Who points the road
We all must take—
Ourself forsake,
And Live for him alone—
For him who did atone
For you and me
On Calvary.
That in the dark we might not stray,
But find thro' him the heavenly way

The Bears.

Elijah was taken up to heaven by a fiery chariot; and as he rose, his mantle fell upon Elisha, his successor in prophetic mission. But the glorious departure of the prophet to the skies failed to impress the multitudes. Israel has always had mockers and money-makers, sporting with sacred things, and ready to jeer at the ministers of God. The busy-bodies now laughed at Elisha, and tauntingly talked of his translation also. If one had ascended, why not another, and especially the departed prophet's friend and follower?

Parents made light of the event by sportive word and gesture in the presence of their children. The minds of the young were thus prejudiced against the man of God, appointed to do divine work among the people. Elisha's name had become so common as a by-word, associated, day after day, with vague guesses and grotesque opinions, that he was held in derision by the children who should have been taught to honor and respect the servant of the Most High. No wonder, that, not only neglected, but spoiled by the force of bad home habits, the children should be viciously disposed toward the holy man, and ready at the first sight of the prophet, to mouth their bad manners in his face. When Elisha came to Bethel, a company of their juvenile Hebrews met him and with sneer and scoffing, cried, "Go up thou bald pate!" As much as to say: "Follow your master; you wear his mantle: Get into his chariot. You are his co-prophet: mount up as he mounted."

The prophet hearing this, turned and looked upon the young rowdies and rebuked them for their ill-timed sport and imprudent behavior, and at his word there came from the woods two bears and tore forty-two of them in pieces. Here was a company of mischievous children, made malicious by thoughtless and trifling parents, devoured in consequence of paternal neglect. Their fathers had abused the prophet in their hearing; and they were ready learners, taking impressions and forming habits from the scenes and sounds of home, the lessons they learned were little thought to be so perilous; but so it is when fathers and mothers indulge in mockery of sacred things.

How common, in our own day and Israel, for parents to express contempt and unkind criticism of certain of God's ministers whom they may not esteem! Perhaps without cause, without sufficient opportunity for acquaintance, or for some trivial reason or idle fancy, a preacher entering a new work and beginning a new circle of acquaintanceship, is lightly spoken of, doubted, denounced, even mocked and ridiculed, in the presence of the young and by members of the church; and is it any wonder that indifference and even hatred should be excited in the impressible mind of childhood and youth? And this is the secret of so many of the Methodist young going to destruction in the jaws of the bears.—Meth. Recorder.

The Family Altar.

There are few memories that are so fresh and powerful in after years as the memories of the household altar. I can travel back over the path of forty years and recall the very tones of my father's voice, as he reverently read the Bible, and devoutly prayed, in the midst of his children; how faithfully he taught them the lessons of Christian truth and duty, in those thoughtless days of youth, and I bless his memory now for what I did not appreciate then. I believe that the memories of Christian parents, and the early associations of a Christian home, never die out of heart. Rev. Dr. Adams in his beautiful book on "Thanksgiving memories," gives the following incident: "In the Cathedral of Limerick there hangs a chime of bells, which was cast in Italy by an enthusiast in his trade, who fixed his home near the monastery where they were first hung, that he might daily enjoy their sweet and solemn music. In some political revolution the bells were taken away to a distant land, and their maker himself became a refugee and an exile. His wanderings called him after many years to Ireland. On a calm and beautiful evening, as the vessel which bore him floated on the placid bosom of the Shannon, suddenly the evening chimes pealed from the cathedral towers. His practised ear caught the sweet sound, and he knew his lost treasures were found. His early home, his old friends, his beloved native land, all the best associations of his life were in those sounds. He laid himself back in the boat, crossed his arms upon his breast, and listened to the music. The boat reached the wharf, but still he lay there, silent and motionless. They spoke to him, but he did not answer. They went to him but his spirit had fled. The tide of memories that came vibrating through his heart at that well-known chime, had snapped its strings!"

And so, sometimes, in after life, when the feet of wayward man have strayed far away from the home of his youth, and his heart has wandered far from his father's God, some memory of the past, like the sweet, sad melody of the evening chime, may wake long slumbering echoes and stir long-sealed fountains; and a father's counsels, and a mother's prayers will come up again from the sacred burial places of the past, with wondrous power to melt and win the wayward heart.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

CHICAGO.

Came to Norwood Park, which is to be our future home. The Park is, as has already been stated, a newly laid out town, six miles North of the city limits. As yet there are but few buildings, and about two hundred inhabitants. These are intelligent, moral people. The trustees of the town invited us to remove here with a view to better ourselves, and by bringing a good business into the place, with new families, to build up and benefit the town. The expectation was that we should be a mutual benefit to each other. They have done a noble thing for us, and we do not mean that they shall lose anything by it in a business point of view. I found our office family all at work, busy as bees, unpacking goods and chattels for domestic use, getting ready to live, and to work for our thousands of readers, and to give them THE TIMES as soon as possible. All were in health, and good cheer. They had turned a building erected for a barn, in the rear of the office, into a "Commissary Department," and through the skill and good management of Br. and Sr. Mansfield (who nobly share our privations), we have a common table, which we enjoy all the more for its plain pioneer character and surroundings. And while we have a shanty to live in, we have plenty of rooms in the office-building for lodging, until we can find homes.

SATURDAY, March 30. The busy week has closed. I took the evening train from Chicago, for Harvard, fifty miles North. On the way I saw Mr. Eberhart, one of the Trustees of Norwood. He said our removal had already helped them in the sale of lots, and if they went off at the rate they had done the last week, they would all be taken soon.

On arrival at Harvard, Br. Armstrong met me, and took me to his residence He is the father-in-law of the late John Howell; also of Br. H. V. Reed. They were formerly of Reedfield Me. and old believers in the blessed hope. I had a kind reception, and talked over old times, and the present prospects of our faith and hope.

SABBATH, Mrach 31. One quarter of 1872 is gone. How swiftly the time passes! soon, we that move as shadows over the earth will be gone, or Jesus will come. We should be prepared for either event. Faithful, and contented with our lot, let us not complain of the trials of the way. Always be thankful for such things as we have.

We have a cold snow storm this a. m. I dined with Judge E. G. Ayer, an old, and a prominent citizen. He said to me, that in laying out a portion of the town, he had reserved an eligible block, in a beautiful grove for a Seminary, and remarked, "Mr. Himes I will give it to you for your people if they will build upon it, and establish a school." One of his sons, Edward, who sat with us, said, "and I will give you one hundred dollars towards it." I remarked, it had been my hope to establish a school at some eligible point, and the trustees at Norwood Park had given me encouragement for a lot there. But we were not able to go into this work now thanked them very kindly for their liberal offer, and their good will to us.

At night I attended Br. Woodworth's meeting (F. W. Baptist.) He preaches in the Congregational House, their church not being able to sustain a stated meeting. A wide door is open for Congregationalists, Baptists, Adventists, and others to worship with them, and at present there is unity, and a good attendance.

Br. W, spoke on the subjects of knowledge, and of wisdom, showing that knowledge would be of no account without wisdom to use it. And made an application to religious duties. Men know enough, but they have no wisdom to make a right use of their knowledge.

TUESDAY, April, 2. Came to Buchanan, Mich., which has been my home for the last eight years. But all is now broken up, and we are in a transition state, and indeed we are at best but pilgrims and sojourners here. When I removed from Boston, Mass., some eight years since, Buchanan was a small village. Then real estate was at a low figure, so that we got a comfortable home and were able to live cheap. And, besides, we came among good friends, who received us kindly, and made us feel at home. Soon after we settled there, property began to rise, and the town has since prospered greatly. And now I find that on our leaving that a new spirit of enterprise has come up, and everything bids fair for a still greater prosperity in material things. I pray that they may also prosper in the things pertaining to the life to come.

I find my family, some of whom are still here, in health.

WEDNESDAY, April 3. This has been a busy day, having seen and conversed with many of the citizens, and of the church. Among my calls, I made one on Father Harding, now over eighty years. He has been an active earnest Christian, and for long years an Advent Christian waiting and looking for the coming of Jesus. He is now like a shock fully ripe, and with his aged companion ready for the kingdom.

THURSDAY, April 4. My Wife came with me to-day to Norwood Park, on a short visit, to see the new home that Providence had opened to us. She had a happy reception, from Br. and Sr. Mansfield, and all the families now here, and on a survey of the new home, made up her mind that she, with the rest of us would feel like uniting to make this new place a common home, in which we might spend what little time remains, in increased usefulness. And we hope for greater good in the future, than we have seen in the past.

This evening we were invited to meet with the Baptist people in their social. We all were cordially greeted, and enjoyed a season of religious and social converse and song. None could fail to profit by the interview. We are yet a small people, and there is much good feeling. And although we are known as Adventists, yet we are treated as brethren in Christ. They like our spirit, and our songs, and we hope so to live that none shall have any evil to say of us.

FRIDAY, Apr. 5. We have a variety of work that taxes the brain and muscle, but we have health, hope, and good cheer.

SATURDAY, Apr. 6. Took the cars for Oneida, Ill. Met Br. Shaw, who resides half way between Wataga and Oneida, on the line of the C. B. & Q. Road. He has an excellent farm, and home in this rich portion of the country. Plenty of fruit, and corn, and wheat.

Br. Shaw has been almost alone in this region. But he and his faithful wife have sacrificed, and worked hard to plant the truth, and they have not labored in vain. Some have been enlightened, and come out boldly for the truth. They now hold meetings in Oneida, as a central point, and have good congregations, mostly from the country. They hope to see many others come to the light.

On my way, Eld. C. W. Smith, took the cars at Bristol, for his meeting in Milroy. He has just held a discussion with a Mormon in that place with good results. The church in Milroy are lifting up their heads. Br. S. is one of our most valued and faithful ministers, but is confined to his farm, and is able, as a general thing, only to preach on the Sabbath.

The night was dark and stormy, and with plenty of mud. I spoke in the U. Presbyterian chapel, which is occupied at present by the Adventists. The United Presbyterians were not able to sustain meetings, and have offered the house to our church at a low figure. It is just the house they need, and they may take it.

SABBATH, Apr. 7. I spoke in the a. m. on the kingdom of God, prepared from the foundation of the world. Mat. 25:34, showing that it would be the earth restored, the very world which the first Adam lost by the fall. In the evening, spoke on the the signs, terrestial and celestial, which show the coming of Christ to be near.

We had some new people out to hear and look for good. I trust the wide field open for labor in this region will be successfully accomplished. Eld. Hurd has labored here successfully of late, and is much liked, and is to continue his work. All we gain in these days, is by faithful, hard, and judicious labor. And what we keep is by the organization of churches, governed by gospel rules. This gives order, purity, and health.

MONDAY, Apr. 8. Stopping at Galva, I had several hours visit with dear friends. Sr. Johnson received me, and also Brn. Wexel and Ronvuest, and other excellent Swede friends, all of whom are much interested in the prosperity of the office, and the cause, of which they gave me substantial proof. Father A. King of Milroy also called. He is now about 75 years old, strong in faith and ready for the kingdom. All these dear friends expressed their gladness that the office was removed to Chicago, and showed by voluntary gifts their wish to help in this desirable move.

From John H. Paton.

I suppose you and many of the friends have seen or heard of the account circulated in reference to the proceedings of a certain Baptist Ecclesiastical Council convened with the Baptist church of Almont, to try the case of their late pastor John H. Paton, on the charge of heresy.

If their representation of the matter be correct, I would stand justly reprobated before the great human tribunal at whose bar I have been called in question through the papers. But every question has at least two sides, and I would that the other side were seen by all who have looked on the one; but that cannot be expected until we all appear at the judgment seat of Christ—who judges not according to appearance, but righteously. Though I should present the other side, the multitude would not see it as I do, and the rest know that Adventists are misrepresented anyway, so I just made up my mind to keep cool, abide the issue, and if possible, live down the opposition. But to redeem a promise made to a number of friends before the meeting of the council, to send an account of the proceedings to the TIMES, I am now seated, late as it is from the center of interest.

The Baptist church becoming aware as some intimated to me, of danger to their organization, from the continued preaching of the "Life and Death" question in their house, at last shut their door against me, by vote, even though at a previous meeting by a good majority they gave me permission to use the house in the afternoon of each Sunday. This change was the result of canvassing by the minority.

I then commenced preaching in one of the public halls of the village, where very good congregations have been gathered each Sunday, since, to hear the word.

The church decided to call a council for the investigation of my case, and in order to make an example of it, sent for delegations from most all the Baptist churches within fifty miles—some further, resulting in a large gathering, though not of all who were invited.

I had no part in calling the council, except that I did not vote against it. I did not request it, nor agree to submit to their decision as has been reported by some, but I freely admit that I intended to appear and answer to the charges, unless they refused to let me defend my position before the council. This course was determined on from the first, as I can find witnesses to testify. The acting clerk of the church sent me a copy of the charges in good season, as follows:

Teaching in the church and out of it,

1. That man by nature is not an immortal being.
2. That all the deak have no conscious existence, and will not have until the judgment.
3. That the finally impenitent will not exist in a state of conscious punishment, but are annihilated, or put out of existence.

I called on the clerk and informed him of the inaccuracy of the second and third charges. I objected to the use of the word annihilation, because I had not used it in my preaching, confining myself to the use of Bible words—Perish, Death, Destruction, etc. But I requested especially the change from "judgment" in the second, to resurrection, and in the third charge the insertion of the word eternally after "exist." He brought the matter before the church, and they made the change in the second, but refused to modify the third the third charge. So it was not an expression of my position. I felt that this was unjust, but yet prepared to meet the charges and explain. But as is widely known, I at last refused to answer, for the reason which is not as generally known, that the council would not allow a defense. In the paper reports my reason for refusing the answer (whether good or not,) is carefully left out. I was convicted on the strength of very little testimony from witnesses, and my silence—on the principle that "Silence gives consent."

Eld. A. J. Frost, of Bay city read a long essay in the afternoon, claiming to prove from reason and Scriptures the absurdity of the doctrine of annihilation—a pet word with him. A good deal of his discourse can be found substantially in "Lee's Theology"—a sample of "reason" so-called—which took so much time that [illegible] Scripture part of his argument, [illegible] ny, was left out. He m[illegible] strange statements wh[illegible] d. mention but one, namely: That Christ and his apostles never said anything about abstract immortality, always treating of the well-being of souls—never supposing that anybody would be fool enough to deny the soul's immortality. I wonder if a Baptist minister is allowed to deny the foreknowledge of Christ!

Eld. Morehouse read a part of an essay on the "dual nature of man," in which he reasoned from the fact of a spiritual or religious element in man that he must be immortal. We would admit the premises but cannot see the logic of his conclusions. We believe in the vast difference between man and brutes in capacity, also the difference between the brute and the vegetable, but our position is that all three are equally dependent on God for their very being.

At the close of the afternoon session the council brought in the verdict of "Guilty," and not only withdrew their fellowship from me as a minister, but recommended that the church exclude me from their fellowship, which they very submissively did at once.

But I am not annihilated yet. I am still "holding forth the word of life" every Lord's day in this place, and endeavoring to let the light shine

We have since then [illegible] a church on this basis of [illegible] character, and have chosen [illegible] name of Advent Christian for it. [illegible] we now a membership of fourteen, representing nine different families and we expect an increase.

By the help of the Lord we propose to move on spreading the the truth, endeavoring to strengthen the young root here planted, which we believe the enemy will not be able, though earnest and willing to root up. Many who for a time seemed willing to hear, have turned with the tide against our cause, for whom we are called upon to exercise a charity deeper than felt for us. We remember when we too, were groping in the dark. May the light soon shine upon them and give the joy of a hope in the glory of God is my prayer.

From H. J. Munson, Cherokee Co. Kansas.

Dear brethren and sisters in the Lord, watching and waiting for his appearing:

Knowing that you all ever delight to hear of the prosperity of Our Cause, I give you a brief report of our labors and prosperity in the Lord the past winter. Early in January we engaged near our home, with others, in a protracted meeting. A spirit of love and general harmony became manifest on the part of nearly all professed Christians who attended. Soon the spirit of revival was visibly manifest; jealousy and sectarian emulations seemed to disappear, and the desire and labor for the salvation of souls became the one actuating principle. Night after night found anxious souls seeking the forgiveness of sins. Some twelve or fifteen found peace in believing, and were made to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

The preaching brethren participating were, Br. Hoggatt, Baptist; Br. Loomis, Methodist; Br. Stephens and myself, all residents of adjoining neighborhoods. No spirit of preeminence seemed to prevail, but each went forward as the lot seemed to fall to him, and the Lord blessed.

Thus, we "beheld how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." (Ps. 133: 1.) Doctrine was very little considered during the blessed refreshing from the Lord; but we trust some hearts have been so thoroughly and permanently actuated by love to God that they will ever stand ready to seek the whole truth, and so be found among the ready, waiting ones, when our absent Lord shall return.

At about the time this meeting closed, I received a letter from Br. Warder Dunbar, of Bero, desiring me to come and hold a meeting with them, to which wife and I consented. Upon our arrival we found four baptised believers. All was arranged for meeting that night, and, contrary to our expectations, the school house was filled. A spirit of kindness seemed to prevail

On Sunday night the work of revival commenced. One rose for prayers. Our hearts were encouraged; we betook ourselves yet more earnestly to prayer, and the Lord gave divine aid. The work progressed steadily during the week. Six persons desired baptism. These all bore testimony to the truth in presence of the large waiting audience, when we repaired to Chrery Creek, where I baptised them in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ.

From day to day, and night to night the interest increased. In the day time, meetings were generally held at some private house. Six more presented themselves for baptism. At night I preached again, and before the meeting closed, another who had been seeking, confessed Jesus, and requested baptism. Accordingly, a meeting was appointed for the next day, during which two others came out and desired to be baptised, making fifteen in all.

There were others, who, we knew, felt deeply the importance of declaring themselves with the people of the Lord, and we expect they will yet do so.

During the meeting, Sr. Mary McClellan, of Oswego, widow of Eld. McClellan, who labored in the Advent cause for some years in Canada, heard of the interest, and came over to help us, and once more enjoy blessed communion with those of "like precious faith." She is truly a mother in Israel.

During the meeting we also found some ready to oppose the truth. But as a result the cause of truth was rather promoted than hindered.

Returning in March we rejoiced to find these at work, happy in the Lord, and in the hope of his coming; having held two meetings among themselves, each week, all, from oldest to youngest, taking part by prayer or speaking. They have organized one of the best Sunday schools we ever saw.

We have organized a church with eighteen members; extending all the rights and privileges of the church to one other, making nineteen in all, under the name of the "Advent Christian Church, at Bero, Kansas," with the following officers: Br. Warder Dunbar, Elder; Br. Thos. Wilder, Deacon; Sr. Tenie Bogley, Clerk.

From C. W. Conolly, Jacksonville, Fla.

My hands have been stayed up in my feeble efforts for the truth, reading in THE TIMES the cheering letters of brethren and sisters who, like myself, are placed where the tares are thick and the wheat scarce; and if we should not go to work to try and clear a place around us, we should get choked out. When I think of those blessed meetings we used to enjoy in Rochester, N. Y., (more blessed now that I am deprived of them), where I first found the Lord precious to me, it makes me have a desire to leave here and go back. Then the Spirit seems to say, "Would you go from here to gratify self, when there is but one other in the State to raise the cry, "Behold the Bride-groom cometh'" It teaches me if I would wear the crown I must expect to receive it only by the way of the cross.

I am trying to preach the word to the people for the reason that I cannot stand silent and know that the trump of God is soon to be placed to the angel's lips, to give the last terrible sound that shall proclaim to a doomed world, the "Mystery of God is finished," without trying to get some to prepare their minds to welcome the son of God back to earth. How terrible is the thought! People around and about us on every hand, the avalanche about to break and bury them beneath it forever.

Oh! if we believe it, how can we hold our peace?

I am now holding meetings every Sunday at what is called Cedar Creek S. H., seven miles from Jacksonville. There is quite a good attendance, and for the last three or four Sabbaths nearly the whole congregation at each service has expressed a desire for an interest in our prayers.

We have quite a good church house in Jacksonville that we built last spring. It will hold about two hundred persons. El. P. A. Smith has bensing the word to good congregations all winter.

I expect to start up the river with my yacht, stopping at all places where it may be profitable to hold meetings, as soon as the weather gets a little warmer. I desire the prayers of all.

From G. W. Crosby.

I am again seated to give you a short sketch of the times in our part. The first thing I must tell you is, that the Lord is still abundantly blessing me in my efforts to spread his truth. Many are shaking off the sleep and sloth of former years, and waking up to "walk in the light as children of light;" you may rest assured, dear Brother, that this gives me great consolation. Oh! to see the blessed Truth, of my heavenly Master, sustained, when every enemy has buckled on his armour, and all the confederate powers of darkness have spent their strength in vain, does a thousand times repay me for all my hardships, privations and persecutions, that I must bear in defence of the truth, and I am made to "glory in tribulation," and thank God that I am counted worthy to suffer "for His dear names-sake. Not long since, a very worthy brother said to me, that I and my wife would, he thought, be excluded from the Baptist church, and for what, you ask? Why for the awful crime of doubting whether some of the tenets of said church were of Bible authority. I asked him when the Baptist church became infallible. He said it was not infallible. I claimed the right, then, to try the truth of its assertions. he, of course, admitted that I had the right, but at the same time he seemed to think it rather disgraceful for a man to change his opinion so suddenly. I did not say much more. I only thought of a few very sudden changes that we find recorded in the history of the past, among which stands the account of one Paul, who it seems, had a very sudden change, which was of great moment to himself and to the world. So I thought that possibly I might not lose as much by the change, as he seemed to think. There is yet quite a stir, about our heretical views, as they are called by many. I went last Sabbath to hear the funeral sermon of Adventism. I had been informed that it was to be preached at Philadelphia church, on the fourth Sabbath in March, by one Eld. Goad, who is considered a very able Baptist minister. Now, of course, I wanted to hear this sermon, so I went, fully expecting that if he preached a funeral sermon in accordance with popular theology, he would give it an immortal soul and preach it off to glory; but I was sadly disappointed, which I attributed to the fact, that the preacher was entirely unacquainted with the true character of his subject, an evidence of which may be found in the following: he spoke of the Adventists carrying about with them, a great picture or image, painted and finished up, in the most elegant and attractive style, with its gilt head, silver arms, etc, etc., which they occasionally showed, and explained it to represent the kingdom of God. But he faithfully warned his hearers against receiving it as such, telling them that it was about the same kind of an image that the Babylonian king wanted the Hebrew children to worship. He also intimated, that the greatest motive of the Adventist was, to make money, by getting up an excitement and selling their books and tracts. With these and many other erroneous views of our faith, he made up his principal discourse. In my reply, which was short, I only attempted to set him right, in regard to our faith. The blessed God was with me in the effort and I felt greatly strengthened in the "inner man." After the people came out, I called them around me, and gave away all the books I had with me; the people received them eagerly, and I felt glad, and wished that I had had a great many more to have given away on the occasion, for I felt that I was sowing the seed of truth which would yield a rich and bountiful harvest, by and by, and I prayed the Lord to nurture it, and bless it. I preach monthly, both at Philadelphia and at my own home, and have the great pleasure of seeing the interest increase more and more.

It seems that I can hardly wait till fall to see you, but we will have a good time when you come.

NOTE. We have no field of greater promise than Arkansas: it is white for harvest. I contemplate visiting that State in the fall, and as it is missionary ground, I trust the Lord will stir up the hearts of friends of missions in the South to aid in this field. We have already been remembered by one brother, and trust the Lord will provide for a multitude of tracts, with the living missionary.

Br. Crosby is doing a noble work. Let him have the prayers of the church. We have sent him a fresh lot of tracts. ED.

Seven Hundred Miles On Foot.

NILS SEVENSON NYSTEN, THE HOMESTEADER.—WHERE THERE'S A WILL THERE'S A WAY.

BY PROF. J. D. BUTLER.

LINCOLN, March 25th, 1872

Nils Nysten is a Swede,—and was born where his forefathers, even to the years of many generations, had been content with "only this and nothing more"—

"To draw nutrition, propagate, and rot."

He aspired higher,—but so low was his birth, and so strong the barriers around him, that he was three-score years old before he could work his passage to America. Two years ago he reached Iowa with his wife, and penniless, stopping first in Mount Pleasant.

While working there at his trade of wagon making, he became convinced that his best means of further advancement, was to secure a Nebraska Homestead without delay. His mode of making this boon his own, is worth telling to encourage the others.

HOW HE DID IT!

He walked from his home to Lincoln 307 miles, along the track of the Burlington and Missouri Railroad. This journey he accomplished in about fifteen days. At Lincoln he found shelter in the Immigrant's Rest, a building provided by the B. & M. Railroad Co. where land hunters may lodge and live without charge, while seeking farms.

Looking at the maps of public lands in the United States Land Offices there, he judged York county to afford the most desirable homesteads. He therefore walked on thither—seventy miles farther. Having picked out the farm which suited him best of all those still vacant, he returned to the Land Office and filed his claim to it, September 2d, 1871, paying $14 in fees. His homestead consists of 80 acres, in the 34th section of the 11th township in the 3d range west, of the 6th principal meridian.

WHAT THEN?

Repairing again to the farm of his choice he made sundry improvements for a month. He finished him a dugout and stacked twelve tons of wild hay.

His purse was now empty, save one dollar and a half, but he walked to Lincoln, and thence home, as he had walked hither, daily laying behind him about twenty miles.

Soon after reaching home, at the end of a seven hundred mile walk, he learned that his hay stacks had been burned by a prairie fire—having no plow, he had been unable to make a fire-break around them, But throughout all, he seemed to have lost nothing of heart or hope, but to have remained as jolly as Mark Tapley, in Chuzzlewit.

Through all the winter he worked at his trade, sometimes begining his toils at two o'clock in the morning. Thus he finished three good wagons.

Two he traded off, for a mule and harness. Then putting on board his wife, a barrel of pork, a harrow, all of wood, made by himself, and some other needments, he drove westward, by the same route which he had last fall traveled on foot.

He took with him three other Scandinavian Homestead hunters, each with a wagon and his family in it.

He arrived in Lincoln in due time, rested a little among the old familiar hospitalities for strangers, afforded gratuitously by the B. M. Railroad Co., through the whole-souled keeper John Frost, and on the 21st of March, in spite of an equinoctial wind, set his face towards his homestead. His journey thither can hardly require more than three days,—but as he must needs be there before the first day of April, or be egregiously April fooled, by forfeiting his farm, he resolved to make assurance doubly sure. Hence he has taken time by the forelock.

Nils Nysten is sixty-two years old, though he declares himself only forty —when just shaved. His example shows what others can do. It shames many faint hearts that are weeping like woman, for lack of a farm, which they have the privilege of seizing, like men, had they only manly pluck.

Nils Nysten's homestead was one of 9,822 which had been entered in the Lincoln United States Land Office, before last New Years. The number there entered since New Years is 501.

The B. & M. Railroad Company have sold 351,705 acres to 3,238 buyers, on ten years credit and six per cent. interest.

Paul's Expectation and Desire.

This tract, which has never been excelled upon the subject vindicated, is now ready. Paper covers. Price. Two copies, post paid, 10c, 30 copies for $1. Don't fail to read and lend it.

"Good Tidings."

This is a book prepared by Elds. Couch, Sheldon, Grant, and Himes. It covers a wide range of topics—Prophecy, Future Punishment, the Nature of Man, and the Saint's Inheritance. $1 in cloth, 50c in paper.

Expressing Money.

By a new arrangement SMALL sums of money can be sent by express at a low rate. $25 or any smaller sum can be sent to us from any office of the American Merchants' Union Express Company for 15c.

From an office of any other company, 30c. This is cheap, and absolutely safe. Any who send money in this way should direct to J. V. Himes, Norwood Park, Ill., and prepay the charges, otherwise the package will not be received.

Field's Discussion

For some time this desirable work has been out of print. The main topic is the Intermediate State, or Condition of the Dead. When a new edition was announced, some of the Doctor's old Disciple friends announced that they would buy and circulate it as soon as ready, because they thought it would help their side—that Mr Connolly had the best of the argument. We shall soon know whether they really so felt, or were indulging mere bragadocio. The book has not yet made any converts to Immaterialism that we have heard of, but we have learned of its bringing not a few to adopt the Bible theory.

The book has heretofore been sold at one dollar. The present edition is in paper covers (pp 318), and will be sent post paid for 50c. We hope for liberal orders.

Prophetic Chart.

Shall the projected Map of Symbolic Prophecy be published? Turn to the description of it in late numbers of THE TIMES, and see if it is not just what every church and minister needs. Will you take one? One Hundred Subscribers are are needed to ensure success.

Obituary.

ROCKWELL. In Burns, Wis. March 13, after a brief illness, Mahala, wife of Sperry Rockwell; aged 50 years, 8 months, and 11 days.

Mother Rockwell was one of those every-day Christians, always calm, never ruffled by the cares of this life. For a number of years before she heard any Advent preaching, she contended earnestly that the end of this world was near, from the increase of crime, and other things that were transpiring. She was always ready and willing to do her duty and follow in the footsteps of the Master. Her earnest prayer was for the coming of the Savior, and every day tried to live so as to be ready to meet Jesus in peace. She longed for Jesus to come that she might meet her little grand daughter who died about three months since. She died in the triumphs of faith in Jesus, with his name on her tongue. She fell asleep and only awaits the last trump for a glorious awakening to eternal life. Then she will be able to sing, "O Grave, where is thy victory? O death, where is thy sting?" May God by his Holy Spirit help us all to so live that in the sweet bye and bye we may meet our mother and little Aggie on that bright and beautiful shore. C. C. HAMILTON.

Book Notices, Etc.

WE have received a supply of a pamphlet entitled The Black and Terrible Year. It is an effective and interesting chronological record, justifying the somber title acquired by the year so recently departed. All should possess it as a book of reference, aside from the interest one naturally feels in it as an explicit account of the signs of the times.

THE Great Salvation; or the Purpose of Deity Unfolded. By George Moyer has been laid upon our table. It is a work of nearly 200 pages, and advocates the views held by the Christadelphians.

THE Theory of the Earth. Almost two hundred years ago Thomas Burnet, a celebrated student and divine, published a work entitled the theory of the earth. In it he advanced, essentially the views of the future of this planet entertained at the present time by Adventists. A brother in Pittsburg falling in with a copy of the book, London edition of 1683, has caused it to be reprinted. The original edition is of course very scarce; but this reprint puts a copy within reach of all. We commend it for general perusal. Price $1. post paid. Address, Patrick McGarr, 71, Water St. Pittsburg, Pa.

WHEN and How? By Dr. D. Newcomb. This is the title of a book advertised in our columns, which we can cordially commend to our readers. Its querying title relates to the health and physical culture of children—an all important topic, surely. The questions are ably discussed, and answered after a fashion that must be a spur as well as a help to every parent in the care of the physical interests of their offspring. The tendency of the day is to cultivate the nervous, the mental; and it is done at the expense of the vital and the muscular. The Doctor makes an able and forcible plea for the restoration of the balance of power in the children's world.

WE would call the especial attention of our readers to Prof Barker's essay upon The Correlation of the Vital and Physical Forces, published by C. C. Chatfield & Co. of New Haven. It discourses on a most interesting scientific subject but without veiling his meaning from the common reader by scientific terms. It is more absorbingly interesting than any novel; and especially so from the fact that if his data and deductions are sound, materialism is a scientific as well as a Bible fact. Read and ponder Prof. Barker's magnificent essay. For sale at this office. 25c post paid.

THE Black and Terrible Year. Being a chronological record of the principal events, civil and political during the year 1871, proving the justice of the remark of the Chicago Tribune that 1871 might be styled the "Black Year." By S. Hawes. For sale at this office. Price 30c post paid.

Notices, Etc.

To the Brethren.

I am engaged in preparing a work, designed especially for the ministry, on the importance and necessity of preaching the second coming of Christ, as an event nigh at hand. My object is, in cooperation with the brethren, to have a copy placed in the hands of every minister of the gospel in the United States. All can see the importance of such an enterprise. If one only out of five hundred could be induced to give the trumpet a certain sound, it would pay for the labor and outlay. Of course, it will not be expected that those for whom the work is designed, will purchase it. This will be the work of our brethren all over the country to see that a copy is placed in the hands of every preacher of the gospel.

I propose then to request pledges and subscriptions from the brethren, in order to secure its publication, the amount subscribed to be repaid in books, if required. The nature of the work may be gleaned from the following outline:

The Christian minister—a watchman; the duties of a watchman; Watchman, what of the night? The time of the end; Signs of the times—Fulfillment of Prophecy; Prophecy in relation to the First Advent; Prophecy in relation to the Second Advent; Signs of the Second Advent, Celestial, Terrestial, Moral, National. The Papacy, Spiritism, Time, Tarrying Time, etc., etc.

I would also state that the work will be useful to all for reference, as it will be largely interspersed with Scripture quotations. Any who may feel disposed to aid in this enterprise, may address Miles Grant or G. T. Adams, Crisis office, Boston, Mass.; J. V. Himes, TIMES office, Chicago, Ill.; or myself at Arena, Wis.
[n34t4] GEO. THOMSON

To the churches co-operating with the N. Y. State Conference:

Have you all made your statement, as requested, to our Secretary, in his last report. If not, please give him the name of your minister, the number of members in your church, its service, how, when and where held: and such other information as may be of interest or necessary to crry into practical effect the tabulation of our Conference statistics.

N. B. Will some brother or sister in each church do this without delay. Direct to Wm. E. Brown, South Butler, Wayne Co. N. Y.

Advertising alone does not produce success. The thing which is advertised must have intrinsic merit, or else large advertising will eventually do it more harm than good. If you have anything which you know to be good, advert se it thoroughly, and you will be sure to succeed; if it is poor, don't praise it, for people will soon discover you are lying.

Such is the policy of the Burlington Route, which runs to three great regions in the West: 1st, to Omaha, connecting with the great Pacific Roads. 2d, To Lincoln, the capital of Nebraska, and all that beautiful region south of the Platte, filled with R. R. lands and homesteads. 3d, To St. Joseph, Kansas City and a Kansas points.

The roads are splendidly built, have the best bridges, finest cars, the Miller platform and coupler, and the safety air brake (to prevent the loss of life that is everywhere else happening); Pullman's sleepers. Pullman dining cars, large and powerful engines (to make quick time and good connections), and are in a word the best equipped roads in the West. So that if you desire to go safely, surely, quickly and comfortably to any point in Southern Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, or on the Pacific Roads, be sure that you go "By way of Burlington."

All who wish particular information, and a large map, showing correctly the Great West, and all its railroad connections, can obtain them, or any other knowledge, by addressing General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

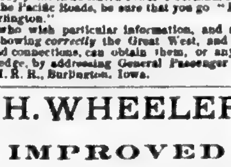
E. H. WHEELER'S
IMPROVED
AXLE & THIMBLE SKEIN



PATENTED JAN. 12, 1872.

THE LIGHTEST, STRONGEST, AND BEST AXLE BEFORE THE PUBLIC.

Less liable to break, and cannot spring under any amount of weight that can be put upon it.

It takes a smaller sized axle and bolster or sand-board than the same sized skeins of common style; is more simple and easier to fit, the skein being of uniform taper, without shoulders upon the inside a better fit is secured. The axle can be turned in a common lathe to fit the thimble, by putting one end out of center.

The arm, or spindle, is so made as to secure the proper set of the wheels, when moderately dished, with the bottom line of the spindle on a parallel line to the bottom of the axle, an important principle never before attained. The set of the wheels is a perpendicular or right angle to the bottom line of the axle upon the face of the spokes, upon their lower half.

This cut shows the thimble and lug for the tension rod across the bottom of the axle, from thimble to thimble, and the socket for the bottom, or the sand-board, as the case may be. I also use a sand guard to keep the dirt out of the shoulder of the hub; but it is not shown in this cut.

RIGHTS FOR SALE.

Sample thimble skeins furnished to purchasers of rights, at actual cost. For further information address

The History of Opinions Concerning the State of the Dead. No. 3.

Of the opinions concerning the state of the dead, from the time of Austin to the Reformation.

In the last period we have seen something like the doctrine of Purgatory, but it is so exceedingly unlike the present doctrine of the church of Rome on that subject, that we can hardly imagine that it could even serve as a foundation for it. The ancient fathers only thought that when this world should be destroyed by fire, that fire would purify the good, and destroy the wicked. Whereas, this purgatory is something that is supposed to take place immediately after death, to affect the soul only, and to terminate sooner or later, according to circumstances, especially the pains that are taken in favor of the dead, by the masses and other good offices of the living, as well as by their own benefactions and bequests for religious uses before their death.

On the whole, therefore, it looks as if the doctrine of purgatory had been built upon some other ground; and nothing is so likely to furnish a groundwork for it, as the notions of the heathen concerning the state of the souls in the regions below, which were always supposed capable of being brought back again. Also the popular opinion of the Northern nations concerning the state of souls after death were, in many cases, similar to those of the Greeks and Romans: and such opinions as these would not easily quit their hold of the common people on their conversion to Christianity; and being held, together with the opinions of the fathers above mentioned, the present doctrine of purgatory might, in time, be the produce of both.

It is generally said that the foundation of the present doctrine was laid by Gregory the Great, who lived in the sixth century, about 160 years after Austin. But his opinions on the subject were very little different from those of Austin himself, and of others before him, of which an account has been given in the former period; Gregory, however, did suppose that there was a purgatory to expiate the slight offences of which very good men might be guilty; but he does not say that this punishment would always be by means of fire, nor did he suppose this expiation to be made in the same place, but sometimes in the air, and sometimes in sinks, etc., or places full of filth and nastiness. He also speaks of some good men whose souls went immediately to heaven. But in one way he certainly did greatly promote the doctrine, viz: by the many idle stories which he propagated about what happened to particular souls after they had left their bodies, as concerning the soul of King Theodoric, which was boiled in the pot of Vulcan.

Narrow, however, as these foundations were, the monks were very industrious in building upon them, finding it the most profitable business they were ever engaged in; and about the tenth century the present system seems to have been pretty well completed. For then, not even the best of men were supposed to be exempted from the fire of purgatory; and it was generally represented as not less severe than that of hell itself. But then souls might always be delivered from it by the prayers and masses of the living, which prayers and masses might always be had upon certain pecuniary considerations; and the fables and fictitious miracles that were propagated to secure the belief in this new kind of future state, were innumerable.

Thomas Aquinas says, that the place of purgatory is near to that in which the damned are punished; that the pains of purgatory exceed all the pains of this life; that souls are not punished by demons but by divine justice only, though angels or demons might conduct them to the place. By the pains of purgatory, he says, venial sins are expiated, even quod culpum, or from the guilt of them and that some are delivered sooner than others.

The present doctrine of the church of Rome on the subject of purgatory is, 'that every man is liable both to temporal and eternal punishment for his sins; that God, upon the account of the death, and intercession of Christ, does, indeed pardon sin as to its eternal punishment; but the sinner is still liable to temporal punishment, which he must expiate by acts of penance and sorrow in this world, together with such other sufferings as God shall think fit to lay upon him. But if he does not expiate these in this life, there is a state of suffering and misery in the next world, where the soul is to bear the temporal punishment of its sins, which may continue longer or shorter till the day of judgment; and in order to the shortening this, the prayers and supererogations of men, here on earth, or the intercessions of the saints in heaven, but above all things, the sacrifice of the mass, are of great efficacy. This is the doctrine of the church of Rome, as is asserted in the councils of Florence and Trent.'

Before this time, the opinions concerning purgatory were exceedingly various with respect to the place of purgatory, the nature of the pains of it, and indeed everything belonging to it. Eckius maintained that it was in the bottom of the sea. Others would have it to be in Mount Etna, Vesuvius, or some other burning mountain. Sir Thomas More says, that the punishment will be only by fire, but Fisher, his fellow-sufferer, by fire and by water. Lorichius says, neither by fire nor water, but by the violent convulsions of hope and fear. Fisher maintained that the executioners would be the holy angels, but Sir Thomas More thought they would be the devils. Some again thought that only venial sins are expiated in purgatory, but others that mortal sins are expiated there likewise. Dennis the Carthusian, thought that the pains of purgatory would continue to the end of the world; but Dominicus, a Soto, limited it to ten years, and others made the time to depend on the number of masses, etc., that should be said in their behalf, or on the will of the Pope. Thomas Aquinas, as has been seen above, makes the pains of purgatory to be as violent as those of hell; whereas, the Rhemists say, that souls are not in a bad condition there; and Durandus, holding a middle opinion, gives them some intermission from their pains on Sundays and holidays. Bede tells the story of a Northumberland man, who, after he died returned to life again, and said that he had passed through the middle of a long and large valley, which had two lakes in it, in one of which souls were tormented with heat, and in the other with cold; and that when a soul had been so long in the hot lake that it could endure it no longer, it would leap into the cold one; and when that became intolerable, it would leap back again.

This uncertainty was so great, that the whole doctrine must have been discredited, if it had not been for the profits which the popes, the priests and the friars made of it.

The living, being, by means of this doctrine of purgatory, deeply interested in the fate of the dead, and having them very much at their mercy, the mistaken compassion and piety of many persons could not fail to be excited in their favor. Before the tenth century, it had been customary, in may places, to put up prayers on certain days for the souls that were confined in purgatory, but these were made by each religious society for its own members and friends; but in this century, 'a yearly festival....in remembrance of all departed souls, was instituted by ....Odilo, abbot of Cluni, and added to the Latin calendar toward the conclusion of the century.'

The Greeks, though in most respects they had superstitions similar to those of the Latins, yet they never adopted their notions concerning purgatory. At the time this opinion was formed in the West, the two churches had very little intercourse with each other; and besides, the Greeks were so alienated from the Latins that the reception of it by the latter would have rendered the former more averse to it.

According to the doctrine of purgatory, the moment that any soul is released from that place, it is admitted into heaven, to the presence of God and of Christ, and made as happy as it can be in an unembodied state, which was contrary to the opinion of the early fathers, viz: that all souls continued in hades until the resurrection, or at most, that an exception was made in favor of the martyrs. However, this doctrine of purgatory and the opinion of the efficacy of prayers, and of masses, to procure complete happiness for those who were exposed to it, at length obliterated the ancient doctrine, as appeared when an attempt was made to revive something like it by Pope John XXII.

Towards the conclusion of his life, this pope incurred the disapprobation of the whole Catholic church, by asserting, 'in some public discourse, that the souls of the faithful, in their intermediate state, were permitted to behold Christ, as man, but not the face of God or the divine nature....This doctrine highly offended Philip VI, king of France,' who caused it to be examined and 'condemned by the divines of Paris in 1333.' The Pope, being alarmed at this opposition, softened his opinion in the year following, by saying, 'that the unembodied souls of the righteous beheld the divine essence as far as their separate state and condition would permit;' and for fear of any ill consequences, from dying under the imputation of heresy, when 'he lay upon his death-bed, he submitted his opinion to the judgment of the church.' His successor, Benedict XII, after much controversy, established the present doctrine, viz: 'that the souls of the blessed, during their intermediate state, do fully and perfectly contemplate the divine nature.

It may just deserve to be mentioned, at the close of this period, that the doctrine of the resurrection of the same body, was questioned by Conon, bishop of Tarsus, in the sixth century, who, in opposition to Philoponus, a philosopher of Alexandria, (who had asserted that both the form and the matter of the body would be restored at the resurrection,) maintained that the form would remain, but that the matter would be changed.

Note concerning Benedict XII.—Dr. Maclaine, the translator of Mosheim, remarks, that 'all this Pope's heretical fancies about the beatific vision, were nothing in comparison with a vile and most enormous practical heresy that was found in his coffers after his death, viz: twenty-five millions of florins, of which there were eighteen in specie, and the rest in plate etc., squeezed out of the people and the inferior clergy during his pontificate.'—To be concluded. — *Extracts from Joseph Priestly. Half-and-Half Churches.

There is a verse in Revelation that presents a nauseated Christ, "Because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth."

After we have been taking a long walk on a summer day, or been on a hunting chase, a draught of cold water exhilarates. On the other hand, after standing or walking in the cold air and being chilled, hot water, mingled with some beverage, brings life and comfort to the whole body; but tepid water, neither hot nor cold, is nauseating.

Now Christ says that a church of that temperature, acts on him as an emetic: I will spew thee out of my mouth.

The church that is red-hot with religious emotion, praying, singing, working, Christ having taken full possession of the membership, must be to God satisfactory. On the other hand, a frozen church may have its uses. The minister reads excellent essays, and improves the session or the vestry in rhetorical composition. The music is artistic and improves the ear of the people, so that they can better appreciate concert and opera. The position of such a church is profitable to the book-binder who furnishes covers to the liturgy, and the dry-goods merchants who supply the silks, and the clothiers who furnish the broadcloth. Such a church is good for the business world, makes trade lively, and increases the demand for fineries of all sort; for a luxurious religion demands furs and coats and gaiters to match. Christ says he gets along with a church, cold or hot.

But an unmitigated nuisance to God and man is a half-and-half church, with piety tepid. The pulpit in such a church makes more of orthodoxy than it does of Christ. It is immense on definitions. It treats of justification and sanctification, as though they were two corpses to be dissected. Its sermons all have a black morocco cover, which some affectionate sister gave the pastor before he was married, to wrap his discourse in, lest it get mussed in the dust of the pulpit. Its gestures are methodical, as though the man were ever conscious that he had been decreed from all eternity, and he were afraid of interfering with the decree by his own free agency. Such a pulpit never startles the people with the horrors of an undone eternity. No strong meat, but only pap, flour, and water; mostly water. The church prayer meeting is attended only by a few gray heads, who have been in the habit of going there for twenty years, not because they expect any rousing time or rapturous experiences, but because they feel only a few will be there, and they ought to go. The minister is sound. The membership sound. The music sound. If standing in a city of a hundred thousand people, there are five or ten conversions in a year, everything is thought to be "encouraging." But Christ says that such a church is an emetic. Because thou art neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth.

My friends? you had better warm up or freeze over. Better set the kettle outside in the atmosphere at zero, or put it on the altar of God, and stir up the coals into a blaze. If we do not God will remove us. Christian men are not always taken to heaven as a reward but sometimes to get them out of the way on earth. They go to join the tenth-rate saints in glory, for if such persons think they will stand with Paul, and Harlan Page, and Charlotte Elizabeth, they are much mistaken. When God takes them up the church here is better off. We mourn slightly to have them go, because we have got used to having them around, and at the funeral the minister says all the good things about the man that can possibly be thought of, because we want to make the funeral as respectable as possible. I never feel so much tempted to lie, as when an inconsistent and useless Christian has died, and I want in my final remarks to make a good case out for the poor fellow. Still it is an advantage to have such a man get out of the way. He is opposed to all new enterprises. He puts back everything he tries to help. His digestion of religious things is impaired, and his circulation is so poor that no amount of friction can arouse him.

Now it is dangerous for any of you to stay in that condition. If you cannot be moved, God will kill you, and he will put in your place those who will do the work you are neglecting.

My friends! Let all arouse! The nearness of our last account, the greatness of the work to be done, and the calls of God's Word and Providence, ought to stir our souls. After being in the harvest field so long it would be a shame in the nightfall of death to go home empty-handed. Gather up a few gleanings from the field, and beat them out, that it may be found that Ruth had at least "one ephah of barley."—Talmage.

Christianity Triumphant.

Yes, the glorious system founded by our Redeemer, and known by his name is destined to be completely triumphant. Its heavenly mission is to destroy all evil and perpetuate all good. We have the strongest possible assurances that this mission will be successful. We have the oath and promise of God, two immutable things in which it is impossible for him to lie, given to us that we may have a strong consolation in knowing that we are destined to triumph in his name. Let us not, therefore, cast away our confidence which has great recompense of reward, for yet a little while and he that shall come, will come and will not tarry.

"'Tis but a little while
  And he shall come again,
Who died that we might live, who lives
  That we with him may reign.
Then, O my Lord, prepare
  My soul for that glad day;
O wash me in thy precious blood,
  And take my sins away." J. H. W.

Poetry.

Signs of the Times.

As has often been remarked, the difference between Adventists and their opposers is not so much as to what era of the world's history we are in, as in the nature of the events impending. A poet who expects an epoch of worldly glory and prosperity for the church, thus reads the signs of this time. We are glad that he is mistaken in the event, and that Jesus, not a temporal millennium is at hand.

OPEN DOORS.

Behold what doors are opening
Throughout this world of sin;
Now let Christ's mighty army
Arise and enter in

Shall we not leave the barracks
When orders come from heaven
To take this world for Jesus,
Which must to him be given?

Lands long in deepest darkness,
From superstition's night,
Are now appealing to us,
"O send us perfect light!"

The prophet, beast and dragon
Must soon lose their great power;
E'en now the clouds of vengeance
Around them darkly lower!

The papal power is tottering,
While nations scorn with spite
Her futile claims to rule them
In this high noon of light!

They've learned that vice and folly
Are nourished by "the church,"
While sweetest hopes of freedom
Must perish in the lurch.

E'en science tells the heathen
Their gods were only men,
While it reveals the blunders *
So often forced on them.

And thus with utter loathing
They turn from error's night,
And hail the rising day-star
Of revelation's light.

O Christ, arise in power,
Gird on thy conquering sword;
Lead on thy host's to victory,
According to thy word.

The Will of God.

I worship thee, sweet will of God!
And all thy ways adore,
And every day I live, I seem
To love thee more and more.

Thou wert the end, the blessed rule
Of Jesus' toils and tears;
Thou wert the passion of his heart
Those three and thirty years.

And he hath breathed into my soul
A special love of thee,
A love to lose my will in his,
And by that loss be free.

When obstacles and trials seem Like prison walls to be,
I do the little I can do,
And leave the rest to thee.

And when it seems no chance or change
From grief can set me free,
Hope finds its strength in helplessness,
And daily waits on thee.

Ride on, ride on triumphantly,
Thou glorious will! ride on;
Faith's pilgrim sons behind thee take
The road that thou hast gone.

He always wins who sides with God,
To him no chance is lost;
God's will is sweetest to him when
It triumphs at his cost.

Ill that he blesses, is our good,
And unblest good is ill,
And all is right that seems most wrong
If it be his sweet will.

Is 'Mortal Man Immortal'?

The following is a brief outline of the closing arguments as presented by W. E. Benham, speaking in the negative of the question, "Resolved, That man is immortal."

The discussion took place not long since in "The Young Men's Lyceum" of West Meriden, Ct. It was participated in by clergy of the different denominations; drew crowded houses, and continued with intense interest for six consecutive Friday evenings.

MR. BENHAM'S ADDRESS.

Mr. President: Ladies and Gentlemen:—In the brief time allotted me, it is not possible for me to reply to all the arguments of the affirmative, although if I had time I should like to, being fully confident that I could show the weakness and futility of every one presented.

THE RATIONAL ARGUMENT.

In the discussion of this question the negative have stormed and taken the following strong-holds of the affirmative: (1) The affirmative claim that because man is made in the image of God he is therefore immortal and cannot die. We reply, that if this proves anything, it proves too much for them; for if he cannot die, he cannot sin, which all deny. Then they have lost this position. But the negative, however, derive and claim an argument for their side from the fact that man is made in the image of God, and is therefore capable himself of judging of moral actions—of right and wrong—consequently we affirm that it is incompatible with our sense of the ends of universal justice, as well as with the moral attributes of God that he should consign the heathen, who die without a knowledge of salvation, and children who die in Christian lands just at the age of accountability, before they know the divine law, or means to escape from its penalty, to a life of endless misery and torture, without any hope or possibility of dying or deliverance. We therefore assert, without danger of contradiction, that it is perfectly abhorrent to all that is holy or Godlike in our nature to presume that our Almighty Father, infinite in goodness, justice and mercy, should permit moral beings to be created in his own image, be forced into existence in this wicked world without any choice, inheriting corrupt tendencies and inclinations, and so beset with ensnaring temptations on all sides, that it is morally certain that they will yield and fall into sin—as all do—and then that because they thus do what, under the force of circumstances, it is morally impossible for them not to do, they instead of being visited with "death," as the Scriptures teach, and the negative believe, they are, according to the affirmative, to be kept alive in represented by roasting the living body in fire, ever consuming, but never consumed, in unutterable anguish with increasing capacities for suffering forever, even forever and ever!

Who or what mind can comprehend or conceive the infinite extent of such an infliction? The negative can see justice and mercy in God in removing all such as in ignorance, "sin without law," by death; but they believe it impeaches the character and attributes of Jehovah, to charge him, as the affirmative do, with inflicting on his helpless, ignorant moral creatures what no fiendish and diabolical tyrant, not to say parent, ever dreamed of doing to his most wicked child or subject. The whole universe of God may well stand aghast at these revolting sentiments of the affirmative on this momentous question.

The force of this argument is also greatly augmented from the fact that by far the largest portion of the human race will be finally lost. So then, we charge the affirmative that this doctrine of eternal life in misery reflects on the divine attributes, and is revolting to our nature that is made in the image of God, and we therefore challenge them to refute the charge.

(2) The claims that the universal aspiration of mankind after immortality is a proof that they possess it. We reply for what ye have?

Again, it is said that the most successful in their search after science and knowledge, have still an unsatisfied longing after more; and that surely God will not disappoint this immortal desire. If this proves anything it proves quite too much, even universal salvation; for all desire eternal life and the natural man possesses as strong aspirations for knowledge and science as the renewed man. But God says, "The expectation of the wicked shall perish."

(3) It is assumed that man is composed of two parts, mortal and immortal, that only the immortal part thinks, and that this immortal part cannot die. Well, if this is so, as beasts think, feel, love, hate, fear, remember, etc., beasts are therefore immortal, and for the same reason cannot die, which fact the affirmative themselves deny, and, therefore, they are compelled to abandon and forfeit this position. Fourthly, the affirmative have assumed another position akin to the last and most popular of all, viz: that man has an immortal soul, which cannot possibly perish or be destroyed. Let us look at it. It is a substance or it is not. If it be no substance it is nothing — absolutely nothing. If it is a substance it is created or uncreated, then this thinking substance must have existed a thinking being coeternal with God, and independent of him, and thus is proved the eternity and transmigration of souls. This will probably be denied by all. It only remains, then, to admit that it is a created substance. Now, if God can make one form of created substance think, as is the case in animals, as all must admit, who dare say he can not, and does not, another, whatever it be, in man? Then if beasts, thinking creatures, can and will be destroyed, as all admit and affirm, who dare deny that God cannot destroy also the created thinking substance in man, whatever it is? He can and we affirm he certainly will, as he has declared, destroy all the wicked, created thinking sinners—except they repent and believe the Gospel. Then here they have to give up their strongest and most favorable plank sustaining men's inherent immortality.

THE SCRIPTURAL ARGUMENT.

The negative have two hundred and ten texts of Scripture, asserting and proving as positively as it is possible for language to do, even plain "Saxon," that man is mortal. They, the affirmative, have not one asserting or proving that man is immortal. God has seen fit to use almost every word in the English language possible to be used, such as 'die,' 'death,' 'perish,' 'perdition,' 'burn-up,' 'consume,' 'blot out,' 'cut off,' 'ground to powder,' 'dash in pieces,' 'consume into smoke,' 'devour,' 'devoured,' 'be as though they had not been,' 'place sought for and not found,' 'ashes under soles of feet,' 'destroy,' 'destruction,' etc., etc., to teach, establish and fortify the doctrine of the mortality of sinful man against the lie of the serpent, who said, "Ye shall not surely die." Now let these two hundred and ten plain, simple, unequivocal and positive texts, asserting the mortality of man, be applied to anything else in the world, and the affirmative will contend, as strenuously as any, for their primary and legitimate signification. But lo! when they are applied to wicked, mortal man, even by the Lord himself, they twist, and turn and flutter in a moment, and, rather than give up their darling theory, are forced to declare that the Scriptures assert: yes, even the very opposite of what they affirm. Now, if men will not accept the common use of language to convey ideas, how are they ever to get any certain knowledge of anything? And how could, or how can God himself teach this or any other doctrine? And if in these two hundred and ten texts he has not denied the natural immortality of man, and taught the eternal and divine truth that sinful man, except he repent, shall die and perish, how could he have done it? It cannot. We assert that no honest, candid man, who shall read the bible through, from Genesis to Revelation, would ever get from it the modern idea of inherent immortality unless he had been previously indoctrinated, for it is nowhere there to be found—no 'immortal soul,' no 'deathless' nor 'disembodied spirit,' no 'death that never dies,' no no, nor anything of the sort, but the direct opposite. Man's mortality and destructibility out of Christ is made clearly apparent in most potent language. His mortality is co-extensive with his sinfulness, and it is taught on almost every page. The affirmative have quoted many passages, which they claim by inference or otherwise for their side of the question. But the negative have shown that most of these when properly understood with their connections, not only do not favor the affirmative side at all, but are among the strongest Scriptures for the negative.

'NEVER DYING SOUL,'

Take, for instance, this, their favorite text (Lk. 23: 43): "To day shalt thou be with me in paradise..' Now, please observe, (1) The thief did not ask to be remembered till Christ came into his kingdom at the end of the world. (2) Christ did not himself go to Paradise that day. God did not raise him from the dead until the third day after (Mat. 12: 40; 16: 21; Lk. 24: 7; Acts 2: 31,) and he did not ascend to his Father until forty days after his resurrection (Acts 1:3; 10: 40). (3) But the thief's request will be granted at the resurrection, at the last day, just exactly as the Savior promised him on the day when they together hung on the cross.. So we see that this text, like the many others quoted by the affirmative, when properly understood refutes their own theory and goes to establish that of the negative.

The remaining few, when taken by themselves alone, and in absence of all other texts, might seem to favor their view. Now, the rule accepted and adopted by the ablest expositors to govern in such cases is, that positive declarations must always modify, explain and determine all doubtful or inferential ones. Then by this rule all the Scriptures quoted by Rev. Mr. Mason and others on the affirmative as inferential, must be decided by two hundred and ten positive texts of the negative, and thus the negative clearly established their side of the case. Again: Both sides certainly cannot be true. If the negative are correct, as has been conclusively shown, then all is clear and plain, no language from Genesis to Revelation has to be tortured or perverted.

But if the affirmative are allowed their claim, then these two hundred and ten plain texts of the negative, in which God has emphatically declared the penalty of his holy law on sinners, must be spiritualized away to nothing or denied absolutely. If ever in the world, or any where in the should be used—given and taken—in its most primary literal and legitimate sense, it is on this very subject, just as the negative claim God has used it. But the construction that the affirmative put on these Scriptures is both ridiculous and absurd. It makes God and his sacred word to mean the direct opposite of what he affirms. Thus when he says 'die' he means live;' and when he says 'death' he means live forever. When the Scriptures say 'perish' they mean 'preserve;' by 'everlasting destruction, they mean everlasting preservation;' by destroy to "build up forever."—In a word when they declared God only hath immortality" they mean every body—even the vilest sinners, have immortality.

Allow this license of interpretation and construction, and what can you prove? And vice versa, what can you not prove? Universalism? Swedenborgianism? Catholicism? Spiritualism? Yes, verily, and every other ism; yea, believe anything or nothing, just as your fancy pleases.—Why put darkness for light, and for the sake of sustaining a Romish dogma, the parent of heresies, so unscrupulously and persistently adhere to the vain traditions of men as to obscure and make void the law of God? We certainly think we can prove Universalism easier than what we may denominate Immortal-soulism, and show that there are more direct Scriptures for it, and that it is more in harmony with the divine attributes. Take just one, Rev. 5: 13. John in his vision of the world to come says, "And every creature which is in heaven and on the earth and under the earth, and such as are in the sea and all that are in them, heard I, saying blessing honor and glory and power be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever." This Scripture teaches either that all men, even the wicked, are to be saved, or that all the wicked, even devils, are to be destroyed. The affirmative have had a great deal to say about a man's soul. Well, what is the biblical idea of A MAN'S SOUL?

It occurs 532 times in the Bible, and is used in a variety of senses, of which the following three are chief: First to express a part element or attribute of man, as spirit, mind, heart and conscience. Here is an example: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy mind, with all thy soul and with all thy strength." Soul here has no pre-eminence over mind, heart or strength. Secondly: As the life of man. Example: "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul," or life, as both the original context warrent. Thirdly: It is used to denote the whole man. Examples: "There was in the ship two hundred and threescore and sixteen souls," men or persons. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." "Save a soul from death." Mark, it never means a separate immortal existense. Man is a unit compounded of different elements. When death overtakes him these elements are dissolved or separated and man ceases to exist. Let us glance at the duality or double being theory held by the affirmative and see if we can determine which or what is the man. "Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat, but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it, for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground, for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." The THOU is the man that is responsible and that shalt die. Nothing is said about soul, body or spirit, or spiritual death. Again, take a text in the New Testament: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy mind, with all thy soul and with all thy strength." Which is the man? What is the man? We answer: Not the mind, nor the soul, nor the heart, nor the body, but the THOU possessing all these. It is the THOU that is addressed, and must obey or die. We might cite numerous texts proving this point. One or two must suffice. "I will raise him up at the last day." Not his soul nor his body, but "him." "It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." What is the "it" but the man. Job says—10: 12—"In whose hand is the soul of every living thing?" Then every living thing has a soul—plants, trees and animals as well as men; and if the soul is immortal, then plants, trees, animals and all, have immortal souls. Since our opponents have attempted a little play upon the Greek word "Psuche," let me cite one or two examples, "I will say to my soul"—"psuche"—"eat and drink." Can an immortal soul eat and drink? There are "eight souls"—"psuchai"—"saved in the ark." Can water drown immortal souls? If our opponents still choose to believe the good old spelling book rather than the Bible, and are determined to insist that "the soul is immortal and cannot die," let me instance one of their strongest cases and show them, and you also, Mr. President, that they are mistaken. Take that of Christ the Lord, our Redeemer.

HE HAD A SOUL,

according to the Scriptures, and that soul died, according to the Scriptures, otherwise we have no attonement made for our sins, and the Scriptures are not to be believed. "Thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin." What was the offering? His soul—Christ's soul. "Christ died for us," according to the Scriptures. What died? Christ's soul. "He poured out his soul unto death." "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell." Now we have the fact that Christ's soul died. And if the soul, as our opponents contend, is the separate thinking part, and, as in this case, nothing is said of his body, according to their logic his body did not die at all!—his soul only.

Now, as we have shown fairly and conclusively that a soul died, let our opponents be considerate and concede the question, and give up their double entry theory, for we have them on all sides. We might just remark that the word soul in the above quotations, as in most others in the bible, means simply life. "He poured out his soul—life—unto death. But once more; We have heard much in this discussion of spiritual death. What is it? They tell us it is as real as natural death. Well if, according to their theory, the body has one life and the soul another— two lives in one—then the death of the one must be analogous to the death of the other, or there is no force or sense in applying the same term to express a like condition of each. And so, if the death of the body is the extinction of life, being or consciousness in it, then the death of the soul must mean a similar state in it. There is no escape from this conclusion. God once destroyed all wicked men from off the face of the earth by a flood, and Peter says, "By the same word the heavens and the earth are now reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." There was nothing left of them then, and when fire consumes them there will be nothing left of them now. Finally though God declares that he will destroy the devil and his works, and them that corrupt the earth.—And why should he not, for of what good or use can they be in eternity? Is evil to be eternal? and will there be no end of sin? Still our opponents say: No; He is going to preserve them all alive. But for what purpose, unless to rail on and curse him and his saints forever—even forever and ever. Yes, and according to their interpretation of the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, they are all to be in plain sight and within speaking distance of each other! Away with such impious nonsense! The sweet harmony of the saints in their own celestial Paradise, where there shall be "no more curse" to be perpetually and forever disturbed by the curses and yells of wicked men and devils! And has God no inclination or power to prevent it? We would not dare to entertain such

SEEMINGLY DIABOLICAL SENTIMENTS.

If there is an intelligent moral creature made in the image of God, and not wholly bereft of reason, who, after any considerate reflection, can believe any such irrational and unscriptural doctrine as the affirmative have advocated, or derive any pleasure or gratification from the contemplation of their horrid picture, he is welcome to all the satisfaction he can get from it. I am unable to see in it either mercy, goodness, or justice. But in the view advocated by the negative I do behold all the attributes of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, sweetly and beautifully blending and constraining me to wonder, love and praise.

Admit the popular theory that "the soul is immortal" and that "death is the gate to endless joys," and you at once render ridiculous, absurd, and destroy the great, grand and cardinal doctrine of the resurrection as taught by Christ to his apostles. The Bible passes over the intermediate state of the dead between death and the resurrection in silence. But the affirmative in attempting to add to the word of God on this subject, have, by their vain imaginations and spiritualistic theories, trespassed on forbidden ground and involved themselves in inextricable difficulties.

CONCLUSION.

The negative, we are confident, have gained their side. We have all the proofs, both rational and scriptural, we could desire—more than we need—more than would be required in any court of equity—to give us our case on any other subject or question in the world. Neither have we bribed any witnesses or warped any testimony. During this prolonged discussion we have been grieved at our opponent's ignorance of Scriptures on this momentous question, and yet rejoiced at the amount of truth that has been revealed. Truth is common stock, and free to all who receive it. Great plainness of speech has been used by earnest men on both sides, and without offence to any. We must "let brotherly love continue" at all hazards, and "never reject whom God accepts;" but, till we all come into the unity of the faith, "with malice toward none and charity for all," we must accept fellowship from every Christian brother who may honestly differ from us in his religious belief. For the kingdom is the Lord's and to him be all the glory. Let us all, therefore, on both sides bow to the Divine will, receive the sacred truth in the love of it, rejoicing to have it. Make us free and sanctify us wholly, so that the great teacher shall guide us by his counsel and afterward receive us to behold his glory.

The Spirit and the Will.

Inquirer.—I have come, sir, in order to renew our conversation on the work of the Holy Spirit.

Pastor.—You are most cordially welcome. Have you still some difficulty on the subject?

I. I see the truth regarding it very differently from what I did; but there are still one or two points which do not seem as clear as I could wish them to be in my mind.

P. Perhaps you would mention one of these, and we shall make it the subject of our present interview.

I. Well, you have shown me that the heart of man is touched and melted or changed by objects of thought presented to the mind, and not, as I imagined, by something like sunshine, or other material influences. That has made a very great change in my views, and I think it has led me to value the great thought presented in the gospel in a manner of which I knew nothing before, but I am still perplexed on the subject of the will. Does not the Holy Spirit in some mysterious way change the rebellious wills of men.

P. Could you tell me what you think the will is?

I. I am not sure that I can, very clearly, but you are aware that our hearts are naturally perverse and corrupt, and need to be changed.

P. Unless we know distinctly what our wills are, it is not easy to see how we can know anything satisfactory about them at all. You are aware that before we inquire as to any change which is to be effected on anything, we ought to know what it is which is to be changed; and consequently, we must know what the will is, ere we can know rightly how it is changed.

I. You are perfectly right; but you must not expect me to give any clear idea of a thing about which I confess my mind is in very great confusion. I know only that men will generally what is wrong, and that God's Spirit alone makes them will what is right, and I have been accustomed to think that he must have some secret power by which he turns the will round.

P. And did it never occur to you to inquire what this is which he turns round?

I. I know well enough, it is just the will—I can tell you nothing more about it.

P. You will have patience with me, if I seem to be a little hard upon you; but I must get you to see that you are thinking of a turning round, the nature of which you can never understand, till you really know what it is which is turned.

I. Oh! I dare say you have far more need to have patience with me; but you know I have never been accustomed to dig into the heart of things that way, and when you make me do so I seem provokingly ignorant. I must tell you candidly that I do not know what the will is. I see I have been thinking as if it were some wheel in a man's breast, that the secret finger of God could turn either way, but when I come to look at it closely I admit I am puzzled.

P. Some light might be cast upon the subject in your mind, if you think of what you have said yourself already. You say, "men will generally what is wrong"—don't you think, then, that it is not the will so much as the men who will, to which we require to turn special attention.'

I. Perhaps it is. That did not strike me.

P. If a man walk in a wrong direction, would you ever think of changing his power of locomotion?

I. No.

P. Then, if a man wills in a wrong direction, should you think of changing his power of will?

I. And is the will nothing more than the man's power to will?

P. What else can it be?

I. I did not think of it in that light. I must, I see, have been thinking of it as if it made the wrong resolutions itself. Indeed, I must have been thinking of the will as an agent, and not as the capacity of one. Let me see. If a man walk in the wrong direction, that shows that he has the capacity of walking. If a man will in the wrong direction, that shows he has the capacity of willing. Then the thing required, is to get the man to will right.

P. No doubt that is the thing required: but that does not yet fully show you what the will really is.

I. It is the man's power of willing, is it not.

P. And what do you think willing really is?

I. It choosing or determining to act in a particular way.

P. You are quite right, so far as you understand the meaning of the words you employ. Let me now ask how it is that the Holy Spirit is required to change the determination of men?

I. I suppose it is because men cannot will that which is good, till the Holy Spirit changes them.

P. I was afraid you did not understand your own words. If a man really cannot will to do otherwise than he does, can you say that he has any choice in the matter?

I. Oh! I see I have not thought sufficiently on that point. It is certain that he can have no choice, if he must do just as he does—must and will can't go together.

P. If the Holy Spirit in some secret way, touched the springs of his nature and made him so that he could not do otherwise than right, would there be any choice in the case then?

I. Clearly not.

P. Then do you not see that you have been thinking of man as totally without will in reality—as neither having it in his converted nor in his unconverted state?

I. So it would appear.

P. The truth is, that many think and speak of the will without ever reflecting on its essential nature, and hence they imagine that man cannot do that which he can, if he choose, and that God could do, if he chose, what in the nature of things, he cannot perform. To turn a man so that he cannot but turn is to destroy all will in the case, and as God will not do this, and so reduce the man to a mere machine, he takes the only course possible, which is to lead man, by means of strong considerations, to choose that which is right. Have you ever thought that a direct putting round of man's will, is, in reality, a destruction of the will of man?

I. I certainly have not thought of it; but I cannot doubt it now that it is put before me. Will, or choice, must be free, or it can have no existence.

P. Yes, and every choice or determination of a man must be his own free choice or determination, in which he is at liberty to choose or determine otherwise, or it can be no matter of will at all. Now, the Holy Spirit has not come into the world to destroy men's wills, or to make them cease from being free agents—he has come for the purpose of increasing freedom, and not putting an end to the possibility of it; and when we consider his work we must keep this in view.

I. I see the force of what you say. It never before struck me that freedom of choice was so essential to the very idea of choice, and yet it is wonderful that it should not have occurred to me. The very word "will" is without all meaning, if we admit necessity in the determinations of the mind. That must be a very important point in understanding the work of the Spirit.

P. It is vitally important, and explains a great deal of what would otherwise be inexplicable. For example, we are told that men resist the Holy Spirit, and some argue that such an idea implies that man is stronger then God.

I. And how do you obviate that objection.

P. It is at once obviated when you remember that what God seeks is the choice of man's heart, and not the service of either a machine or a slave. For example: suppose that I had a child whom I wished to do some errand for me, and I wished him to do it cordially and kindly—suppose he refuses, and in spite of everything I can say or do, he still refuses, and resists me—I might take him up in my arms and carry him to where I wished him to go; I should certainly prove stronger than he, but so far as the choice or will of the child is concerned, I might be as thoroughly resisted as before. I might even, by some mesmeric power, constrain his mind so that he could not help doing as I willed, and in this I might prove stronger than he, and yet as far as the free choice of his own heart was concerned, I might be as effectually baffled as before. If I used any kind of power which made it necessary for him to go as I wished, when he was wishing and choosing the contrary, I should have simply destroyed his freedom in the case, and he could no longer be said to have any will in it whatever.

I. That certainly opens the matter to my mind.

P. How, otherwise, could you account for Jesus weeping over the obstinacy of the Jews?

I. I never could account for it at all. It always appeared to me perfectly inexplicable.

P. He himself explains it when he says, "I would," but adds, "ye would not." In the nature of things, that determination of theirs, so long as they refused to change it, stood like an impassible barrier between the great salvation he had come to bestow, and their refusing souls.

I. It is certainly a wonderful thing that will; it makes us see that God has made man in his own image indeed, when he has made him capable of such freedom.

P. And if he restores that image, defaced as it has been by sin, it cannot be by destroying that very will and freedom.

I. Well, I see that now. We must not prolong this conversation. I must think over this matter of the will. We shall be able, I hope, to get another interview soon, when we can speak of how man's will is changed. I now see clearly that it must be in a way very different from that which I had imagined.

P. The will is changed, as the heart is touched, by the objects of thought which the Holy Spirit presents to the mind. Where these are excluded or neutralized, the Spirit is defied. This may well teach us the tremendous responsibility that is laid upon us when right thought is brought under our notice. The thought of the Cross is the chief of all, and woe to him who pushes it aside when God brings it before him.—Prof. Kirk, Sel. by A. A.

Conference Minutes

Arkansas.

We had a good time at our second Q. M. in Br. Rosebaugh's neighborhood. The church was revived and much interest felt by all. Two rose for prayer. One week after we met at Iron Point. We had a melting time. The Spirit was present, and powerful to bless and convict. Sinners were made to tremble and cry for help. Five rose for prayer. On Sabbath we had Br. Lennox with us. He preached the word with power, and assisted in the administration of the Lord's Supper.

It was resolved to give our thanks to the W. A. C. P. Association for their assistance in sending books and tracts. I have a call in a new field, which I shall soon fill "if the Lord wills." We were glad to hear that you are coming to help us again. May the Lord spare you so to do. J. B. BROWN.

Another "Discussion" has just closed in this city (San Francisco) and in our house of worship, It was between Eld. Grant and Mr. Lohnmeller (German) a spiritualist. Mr. L. came out to hear Eld. Grant on the Political Designs of Spiritualists, as interpreted by his views of the two horned beast of Revelation, which are familiar to us all; he regarding Louis Napoleon to be the embodiment, or head of the power emblemized by that beast! Mr. L. immediately at the close of the service, came forward and challenged Eld. Grant to debate with him.

A time was set and the place to make arrangements for the discussion, which was the next day at the rooms of Mr. L. I went with Br. Grant to consult with Mr. L. when the question was decided upon under the caption of "Christianity against Spiritualism."

Resolved: That the phenomena of Spiritualism proceeds from demons."

This question was to bring up, according to a mutual understanding between the parties, the live issues of the day, on the theological points of difference between Christianity and Spiritualism, for discussion.

There was to be used fairness, proper decorum and decency in the debate, according to the suggestion of Mr. L. He declared what he could do detrimental to Christianity and the Bible if he felt so disposed, but had no desire to condescend to vulgarism and indecency, as he despised such a course. To this Eld. Grant agreed heartily of course. All appeared fair and looked well for a profitable discussion. And the time was fixed, and our house of worship was to be obtained if possible, as the place in which to hold the meetings.

The time came and the discussion began; and the Chronicle reporter being present at the first meeting gets off the following in the next day's issue:

THAT DISCUSSION.

THEOLOGICAL EMETICS ADMINISTERED GRATIS.

Attracted by the clarion notes from the resonant larynx of Elder Miles Grant, of Second Advent notoriety, a pious CHRONICLE reporter entered into the Mission-street Chapel about 8 o'clock last evening, to find that three or four hundred other dupes had preceded him and secured all the seats.

Quietly backing out he groped his way up a dark flight of stairs to the gallery, and perched himself upon a rung of the ladder leading up to a scuttle in the ceiling.

"Perched and sat, and" inwardly swore.

The "Elder" was divesting his earnest soul of some exceedingly apt remarks concerning the impossibility of thought to a

DISEASED OR DECAYED BRAIN.

He asserted, with vehement and pointed earnestness, that the dead cannot think, and therefore, that the disembodied or brainless spirit cannot think or communicate with the living. His position was substantiated by several trite anecdotes, which he read with great unction from a volume on medical jurisprudence, detailing the phenomena observed in cases of fracture of the craninium in which depression of the brain followed. The Eld. denied that the human being is a progressive being, advancing from birth eternally toward perfection; for, he said, if that were the case, he must finally reach a point where he would be coequal with the Deity. Exactly what bearing this had on the point at issue, deponent saith not, for a loud rap on the table called his opponent to time.

Mr. Lohnmeller rose eagerly, and at once plunged into the midst of sacred and solemn things with a

CONCEITED FLIPPANCY

And an offensive discordance of intonation that were simply unendurable, at least to the better portion of the audience, who began to retire. Our reporter descended from his perch on the ladder, passed out into the night and strode disgustedly away. Those who have any curiosity to try the effect of a theological emetic, may have an opportunity at the above place each evening of the present week, commencing at half past 7 o'clock sharp.

It was apparent from the beginning that Mr. L. was ignorant of the views of Adventists. He had discussed with several orthodox ministers and supposed that we agreed with the popular faith of an immaterial God, and immaterial beings called angels, and the soul's immortality. Hence he was confounded the first evening by the philosophical and rational argument of Eld. Grant, and saw that he would have to turn tactics. It was difficult for him to change base as was apparent through the discussion, and he was little prepared to meet Adventists in their impregnable position. Eld. Grant had therefore all the advantage of the ignorance of his opponent, and that which reason, philosophy, and the Scriptures gave him. Placed in this new and unexpected dilemma Mr. L. become exasperated, and endeavored to show contempt for the Scriptures, introducing what he conceived to be discrepancies, contradictions, and inconsistences. Also to bring into ridicule the God of the Bible, by openly and boldly charging him with the criminality of violating every command of the decalogue! His language became abhorrent, and indecent, and uttering the boldest blasphemies he lost power over the audience, save those who were as far gone under the strong delusion of Spiritualism as himself.

The debate has ended, to the gratification of all, as all were glad when it closed after six evening's discussion. Whether more good than evil will result from such a debate in a Christian place of worship, is yet to be seen. My opinion is that it is no place for it. Still some may have become enlightened, and learn our views who otherwise never would have heard had they not been thus called out by the debate. Eld. Grant says, these men he uses as a fulcrum to bring out before the public Christian doctrine. It works in this way no doubt, but it has been very unfortunate for us, that men of better character and standing in community have not been enlisted as opponents.

No one can sit under such a discussion who has any regard for God, Christ, the Bible, or Christianity, but must be covinced that we are fallen on evil times, and an age ripening into the most unblushing and bold atheism and deism! There is a battle for the Christian world to fight in the winding up of the affairs of this world with this class of men, unequalled in the whole history of the church in the past. The times are ominous.

The church at large are little prepared for the conflict, and in consequence infidelity is confident, bold, defiant, and means to be triumphant.

The question now becomes a practical one, How, and in what manner shall we meet the enemy as he comes in like a flood. May the Spirit of the Lord which shall lift up a standard against him give us wisdom and grace to quit ourselves like men.

O. R. FASSETT.

Items and Notes From California.

A correspondent under date of April 16, reports Eld. Grant at Nevada city, where he would close a series of meetings during the week. The church at San Francisco had been much strengthened by the Eld's visit; and the church at Sacramento was well planted. Among the members at Sacramento was Dr. Burns, the proprietor of the Pacific Water Cure, and a man of talent and great energy. The appointed elder, Dr. Truesdell, is one of the few men of the times—a man whose Christian experience has long run deep. He only needed the light to see; and though he was an immortal-soulist, he cleared out of that error brightly as the discussions at the Academy progressed. There is good material in the little flock gathered at that city. May the great Shepherd have all the dear ones there specially in his keeping, for in that city there is much bitterness among the orthodox coppersmiths: so says our correspondent.

Our correspondent mentions a letter from the widely known London publisher, Elliot Stock, (62 Paternoster Row), enclosing a catalogue containing the names of 64 English works contesting the immortal-soul dogma. And Mr. Stock says:

"Very much attention is given here now to this subject. And we find that people are waking up to see the unreasonableness of the orthodox view of the matter. It is also a great point gained that the belief in Life in Christ does not now condemn a believer to the fierce attacks which were made on the earlier expounders of the truth on this subject. To get the sticklers for orthodoxy to even tolerate any other view than their own is a great point gained, also."

Fifteen thousand copies of the subjoined circular have been scattered in San Francisco, the Episcopal and Congregational churches having been well supplied during the first Sundays in April:

NO LEGAL STANDING?

☞ TO EPISCOPALIANS.

The subjoined is from a recently published work by Rev. H. S. Warleigh, Rector of Ashchurch, Tewksbury, England, entitled "A Demonstration of the Extinction of Evil Persons."

Mr. Darby and his followers, and thousands of others, may not suspect it, but they are tied and bound with the chains of traditionalism and rationalism on the points before us; and they are employed in tying and binding hundreds of thousands of others. The teachers, with few exceptions, of all denominations, are thus tied; and the only church which, in her standards, has repudiated the dogma of endless miseries for the wicked is the church of England. It is to her glory that she has expunged the doctrine from her Articles; and, by her supreme court, she has formally declared that she disowns it, and it is high time that some one, regardless of his interests and the esteem of his fellows, should boldly proclaim that those of her ministers who preach it have no legal standing within her pale, nor any right to eat her bread, and, when it is known that their doctrine has no standing in the Bible, we may indulge a hope that they will impartially review their opinions upon the sole ground of inspiration, and reform their teaching accordingly."— pp. 7, 8.

"The attempt, however, to discuss this question, showing as it does a disbelief in the popular doctrine, begets an amazing hostility of feeling Gentlemen forget their courteousness, ladies their gentleness, and Christians their meekness; many of them rail at us, call us by opprobrious names, and cast us out as evil, forgetting at the time how little there is in this of the spirit of Christ, and how much of the old man. Others who shrink from going these lengths, will not inquire into the question pleading as an excuse that it is too awful and mysterious to investigate, and that it is hidden from us; as if, indeed, we ever attempted to do more than inquire, with reverence and prayer, what it has pleased our Heavenly Father to tell us in his revealed word about this subject. Such persons, however, would do well to inquire whether a professed voluntary humility may not veil a sinful apathy in studying the Bible, by reading marking learning and inwardly digesting it, and in their searching after God's truth. It may veil, also, much of that infallibleist self-satisfaction which leads poor human nature to think that it cannot be wrong, but far too correct to need the trouble of further thought."— pp. 9, 10.

ASHCHURCH RECTORY

Dear Sir:

Some reprint of your letter to the With respect to what th ctrin he Church of England is on the Punishment, perhaps you are not a are of two things: 1st, In the Articles of 2, forty-two in number, there was one wh firmed the immortality of the soul and the ssness of the miseries of the wicked. At each of the three revisions of the articles afterwards, this unscriptural one was left out. 2d, Then a lawful and authoritative Court has pronounced that endless pain of the wicked is NOT a doctrine of the Church of England.

God prosper you in upholding this truth. The opposite came from heathenism, and was stereotyped by Popery in the dark ages; for it was found so convenient for purgatory, masses, priestcraft, etc., etc.

The great truth, the extinction of all evil through the cross of Christ, is winning its way. I uphold it in this locality, and, while there are many opposers, there are many friends. I thought you would like to know the above facts.

I am, dear sir, yours faithfully,
H. S. WARLEIGH,
Rector of Ashchurch.

Our correspondent says he thinks the endless misery dogma may be driven out of the Protestant pulpits of San Francisco; something more than an ordinary fear and shame for the awful fable being added in the minds of the preachers.

Our correspondent calls our attention to a letter in the New York Tribune of April 3, dated Rome, March 1, from which he extacts:

The partizans of the Pope are moving heaven and earth to prevent French recognition, and for that purpose issue a daily budget of calumnies against new Italy, which they just now accuse of intriguing with foreign powers for the withdrawal of all the diplomatic agents accredited near the Holy See, with a view of completely isolating the Vatican. Doubtless, although Italy has taken no such action, contrary to the letter of the law of guarantees, the Vatican is doomed to become more and more isolated, owing to the rapid spread of civilizing ideas; and even to-day, the Po an infallible Pope to boot, has becon A MERE CURIOSITY. All the foreigne who arrive here from various quarters, whether they are obscure or eminent, go "to see the Pope;" but those who come merely to bring to Pius IX, gifts, frankincense, and myrrh are few and far between, if there be any. This winter the sight of a live Pope has been very attractive to the distinguished personages who have visited Rome. Pio Nono has not had a very lively or profitable court display; but he has been largely attended. He has held several consistorial sessions in which bishops and archbishops have been appointed, and this, the highest exercise of his functions, has been freely enjoyed without hinderance from the temporal authorities; he has given audiences to numerous deputations, and special interviews without number: he has made the most violent speeches against the king, ministers, and the world in general, and, notwithstanding his age and feeble health, he promises to survive to continue in such a course yet awhile longer. He still takes the Belvedere air and his frugal dinner at two, and walks occasionally in the library and other spacious halls. The city priests send him visitors to keep up the regal semblance; every day one can see issuing from the great doors of his palace the ignorant men and superstitious women in black vails, who have called on him, and not unfrequently they are jeered at on returning home.

While delivering circulars (as above) at the First Methodist church in San Francisco Sunday evening Apr. 14, Eld. J. L. Hopkins was violently assaulted; pushed off the sidewalk, etc.

"Book of Mormon."

I had the pleasure of attending a debate at the Union S. H. Knox co. Ill., Mar. 25-27. Question: "Is the Book of Mormon of human origin." Br. C. W. Smith affirmed, and Mark Forscutt, Mormon Elder, denied.

Br. Smith urged against the inspiration of the book the following reasons:

1. The dissimilarity existing between the phraseology of the writings of the Book of Mormon and the writings of the Old Testament scriptures.

2. The repeated use of modern terms and phrases, not in use in the times these writings claim to have been written.

3. The Mormonisms, running all through the whole book, stamp it as a book of human origin.

4. Testimony of witnesses, many of whom are now living, show that it s based on a work of fiction, written by Solomon Spaulding, and is the only reliable clue we have of its origin.

5. The Book of Mormon contains teachings directly in opposition to the word of God, and subversive of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

6. The incredible statements made in this book, some of which would come under the head of miracles, are so unlike the words of God, as recorded in the Bible, that it is impossible to conceive that the same divine Being is the author of both writings. (See pp. 350-1, Book of Mormon.)

7. The frequent use of Modern theological terms and phrases, never used by those who spoke as they were moved by the Holy Spirit, and whose teachings are in direct opposition to the Bible, is positive evidence that the book of Mormon is a work of human origin.

Br. Smith's arguments from the above objections were valid, and well timed, and I think it was clearly shown that the Book of Mormon is undoubtedly the work of base and designing men. The author of the book seemed to realize that some would see the faults of his work, and so he tells his readers (p. 33), "and now if I do err, even did they err of old;" and, again (p. 93): "I have written according to the best of my knowledge." Again, "I do not write anything upon plates, save it be that I think it sacred." On p. 345 he speaks of its faults as the "faults of men." "If there was no mistake made." (p. 305.) It is quite different from this in God's word which never supposes a mistake possible; but is yea and amen—a s saith the Lord."

re are a few of the modern terms found in the book of Mormon:

P. 108. Will ye give to an humble servant of God something to eat?"

P. 168. "I would cite your minds forward."

P. 196. "May the Redeemer of all men bless their souls."

P. 197. We get "the remorse of conscience" so much talked of now-a-days.

P. 232. We have "a man who was firm in the faith of Christ."

P. 233. "Sorry to be the means of sending so many of their brethren out of the world unprepared to meet their God."

P. 239. We find "a standard of liberty" raised.

P. 262. We find a man "who fought for his country, a true friend of liberty."

P. 264. "Panhoran died, and has gone the way of all the earth."

P. 348. "Be wise in the days of your probation."

P. 295. "Wickedness of the rising generation."

P. 149. We read of "Thousands of souls, sent to the eternal world to reap eternal happiness or eternal misery."

The terms "Lamb of God," and "church of the Lamb of God" are quite frequently used.

Quotations from the New Testament abound all through the Book of Mormon:

P. 77. "He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved." (84) "Cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, which is the second death." (85) "Reconciled unto him through the atonement of Christ his only begotten Son." (93) "Taught me in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." "Remission of sins." "Thy faith hath made thee whole." "Communion with the Holy Spirit." "His name shall be called Jesus Christ, the Son of God." "There is none other name given under heaven, whereby man can be saved." "Black and white, bond and free, male and female." "Father Son and Holy Ghost."

Our correspondent says he thinks the endless misery dogma may be driven out of the Protestant pulpits of San-Francisco; something more than an ordinary fear and shame for the awful fable being added in the minds of the preachers.

Our correspondent calls our attention to a letter in the New York Tribune of April 3, dated Rome, March 1, from which he extacts:

The partizans of the Pope are moving heaven and earth to prevent French recognition, and for that purpose issue a daily budget of calumnies against new Italy, which they just now accuse of intriguing with foreign powers for the withdrawal of all the diplomatic agents accredited near the Holy See, with a view of completely isolating the Vatican. Doubtless, although Italy has taken no such action, contrary to the letter of the law of guarantees, the Vatican is doomed to become more and more isolated, owing to the rapid spread of civilizing ideas; and even to-day, the Fo[illegible] an infallible Pope to boot, has beco[illegible] A MERE CURIOSITY. All the foreigne[illegible] who arrive here from various quarters, whether they are obscure or eminent, go "to see the Pope;" but those who come merely to bring to Pius IX, gifts, frankincense, and myrrh are few and far between, if there be any. This winter the sight of a live Pope has been very attractive to the distinguished personages who have visited Rome. Pio Nono has not had a very lively or profitable court display; but he has been largely attended. He has held several consistorial sessions in which bishops and archbishops have been appointed, and this, the highest exercise of his functions, has been freely enjoyed without hinderance from the temporal authorities; he has given audiences to numerous deputations, and special interviews without number: he has made the most violent speeches against the king, ministers, and the world in general, and, notwithstanding his age and feeble health, he promises to survive to continue in such a course yet awhile longer. He still takes the Belvedere air and his frugal dinner at two, and walks occasionally in the library and other spacious halls. The city priests send him visitors to keep up the regal semblance; every day one can see issuing from the great doors of his palace the ignorant men and superstitious women in black vails, who have called on him, and not unfrequently they are jeered at on returning home.

While delivering circulars (as above) at the First Methodist church in San Francisco Sunday evening Apr. 14, Eld. J. L. Hopkins was violently assaulted; pushed off the sidewalk, etc.

"Book of Mormon."

I had the pleasure of attending a debate at the Union S. H. Knox co. Ill., Mar. 25-27. Question: "Is the Book of Mormon of human origin." Br. C. W. Smith affirmed, and Mark Forscutt, Mormon Elder, denied.

Br. Smith urged against the inspiration of the book the following reasons:

1. The dissimilarity existing between the phraseology of the writings of the Book of Mormon and the writings of the Old Testament scriptures.

2. The repeated use of modern terms and phrases, not in use in the times these writings claim to have been written.

3. The Mormonisms, running all through the whole book, stamp it as a book of human origin.

4. Testimony of witnesses, many of whom are now living, show that it is based on a work of fiction, written by Solomon Spaulding, and is the only reliable clue we have of its origin.

5. The Book of Mormon contains teachings directly in opposition to the word of God, and subversive of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

6. The incredible statements made in this book, some of which would come under the head of miracles, are so unlike the words of God, as recorded in the Bible, that it is impossible to conceive that the same divine Being is the author of both writings. (See pp. 350-1, Book of Mormon.)

7. The frequent use of Modern theological terms and phrases, never used by those who spoke as they were moved by the Holy Spirit, and whose teachings are in direct opposition to the Bible, is positive evidence that the book of Mormon is a work of human origin.

Br. Smith's arguments from the above objections were valid, and well timed, and I think it was clearly shown that the Book of Mormon is undoubtedly the work of base and designing men. The author of the book seemed to realize that some would see the faults of his work, and so he tells his readers (p. 33), "and now if I do err, even did they err of old;" and, again (p. 93): "I have written according to the best of my knowledge." Again, "I do not write anything upon plates, save it be that I think it sacred." On p. 345 he speaks of its faults as the "faults of men." "If there was no mistake made." (p. 305.) It is quite different from this in God's word which never supposes a mistake possible; but is yea and amen—a[illegible]s saith the Lord."

[illegible]re are a few of the modern terms found in the book of Mormon:

P. 108. Will ye give to an humble servant of God something to eat?"

P. 168. "I would cite your minds forward."

P. 196. "May the Redeemer of all men bless their souls."

P. 197. We get "the remorse of conscience" so much talked of now-a-days.

P. 232. We have "a man who was firm in the faith of Christ."

P. 233. "Sorry to be the means of sending so many of their brethren out of the world unprepared to meet their God."

P. 239. We find "a standard of liberty" raised.

P. 262. We find a man "who fought for his country, a true friend of liberty."

P. 264. "Panhoran died, and has gone the way of all the earth."

P. 348. "Be wise in the days of your probation."

P. 295. "Wickedness of the rising generation."

P. 149. We read of "Thousands of souls, sent to the eternal world to reap eternal happiness or eternal misery."

The terms "Lamb of Gsd," and "church of the Lamb of God" are quite frequently used.

Quotations from the New Testament abound all through the Book of Mormon:

P. 77. "He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved." (81) "Cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, which is the second death." (85) "Reconciled unto him through the atonement of Christ his only begotten Son." (93) "Taught, me in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." "Remission of sins." "Thy faith hath made thee whole." "Communion with the Holy Spirit." "His name shall be called Jesus Christ, the Son of God." "There is none other name given under heaven, whereby man can be saved." "Black and white, bond and free, male and female." "Father Son and Holy Ghost."

We will give a few of the "Mormonisms of the book "It whispereth me;" "It supposeth me;" "Bloodshed;" "Unwearyingness;" "or in other words;" "It sufficeth me;" "with our might;" "They wilst depart;" "Being as numerous almost, as it were, as the stars."

It teaches that baptism for remission of sins, was preached on this continent, long before the birth of John the Baptist; makes Jesus "the very eternal God;" declares the natural immortality of the soul "my immortal spirit shall join the choir above." And the endless torture of the wicked in hell. It teaches that the righteous are baptised with the Holy Ghost and fire at conversion; that the righteous and wicked are all raised immortal, and and that the kingdom of the devil is unending!

The Mormon champion was there to defend his book, an excellent orator and debater: but the glaring inconsistencies of the book were shown up so clearly by Br. Smith, that all could see them; and I trust permanent good will result.

How do the Meek Inherit the Earth ?

Scene: Bible class; time: 4 years ago.

Pupil: In what sense do the meek now inherit the earth?

Teacher.—a clergyman:—Oh! by enjoying it as they pass along.

P. I have supposed that the haughty and overbearing obtained the best of this world's goods, and is it not true that the meek yield to the demands made upon them and so are deprived of much that might be enjoyed?

T. Well, yes: the overbearing ones may have more of the world, but the meek enjoy what little they do have, so much more than the wicked, that they may be said to inherit the earth.

Glad we have found out how the thing is done: cheer up poor mourner; though a child hath been borne to the tomb, you inherit the earth, in loving your remaining child more than that ungodly man over the way loves his three children; be glad ye poor in this world's goods, while ye contemplate the rich man, and think your toil has brought him his fine house, carriages, plenty: and if ye think that it hath been wrenched from you by fraud, hold back the thought and remember that you inherit the earth by enjoying the use of your legs while he rides, and the little uncomfortable but you call home, is better to you than his carpeted halls are to him.

And then we wish others begotten to this inheritance but if we are asked what its glory is, let us tell the world frankly we dont know.

The Bible idea is better: Inheritance, future, substantial, and full of God's glory. Let us labor for it.

Jealousy and Suspicion.

Christian love and confidence are prime conditions of co-operation and success. This is measurably true even under organizations clothed with compulsory power, as in civil government and in hierarchical and centralized churches. It must be still more true in voluntary associations of a benevolent character, and in churches which, basing themselves on liberty, are drawn together simply by fellowship, and which co-work only for the sake of the common end. Our Congregational system is but a manifested communion of independent churches. These by occasional councils, stated associations and conferences, and various charitable and religious societies, covering wide fields, are drawn into mutual recognition and hearty co-operation, and are made sensible of their spiritual oneness and power.

The essence of such a system is confidence, which undermined, all wheels cease motion, all progress is at an end. It becomes, then, every friend of the cause to promote fellowship. This, of course, must be done intelligently, by open action, frank words, manly comparison of views, modest admission of personal fallibility, charitable construction of the motives of others, and sufficient faith in the workings of church democracy to submit kindly to unwelcome judgments of the majority. Above all must we eschew jealousy and suspicion, habits of mind which discolor the events and characters seen through them, and make Christian love and fellowship an impossibility. One cannot always agree with his brethren in opinion or measures—in truth must sometimes find himself in such respects quite at issue with them; but he may yield them, even then, what he claims with sensitiveness for himself, sincerity of purpose, the privilege of independent judgment, and the right to generous confidence. A "root of bitterness" bearing more deadly fruit, or sowing more widely seeds of discord, in a single church or in the fraternity of churches, cannot be found, than a mind so constituted as easily to conceive suspicions, and so ill-controlled by conscience as to freely express them. Such a mind becomes an inspiration of evil to a multitude of others, and like "the whisperer" described by Solomon, "separateth chief friends." It always finds an accusatory explanation of events, and suggests selfish and base interpretations of differing judgments. If one man is principally canvassed, the breath of suspicion is made in some way to taint his reputation. If several must be disposed of, it is only necessary to call them "a ring," or "a clique;" the basis for such charge being that they live in the same community, are interested in similar religious enterprises, and sometimes agree in judgment! Such an accuser, if in Massachusetts, will insinuate or directly charge, that Andover Seminary, or the editor of the Congregationalist, or the office of the Tract Society, or the Mission House of the American Board, wishes to dictate to all the ministers and churches of the State. If he live in the Interior, he will have similar suspicions of the Chicago Seminary, or the religious paper, or the benevolent agencies, to control the Northwest; or will impeach in the State Association some college president and faculty. Fortunately, in the Interior obvious facts so broadly contradict such suspicions as to render them ridiculous; since professors are constantly seen arguing and voting on opposite sides, secretaries and agents are caught up in the unringlike act of differing in judgment, while the paper, agreeing in the main with them all, yet at various times in some matter crosses the track of every one of these excellent brethren. Blessed be the manly, independent spirit of this broad region!—Advance.

A Lesson for Scientists.

The Christian Weekly asks:—"Is theology more imaginative than science? The last hypothesis proposed to explain the origin of life on the earth is, that life-germs have been brought hither in meteoric stones from other worlds; or possibly, in infinitesimal forms, unnoticed and unnoticeable. But pray where did these germs come from. If Atlas stands on a tortoise, what does the tortoise stand on? Or is it a satisfaction to this sort of philosophy to banish God from this world, even if he cannot be altogether excluded from the universe?"

We are reminded of the youthful philosopher who sought a solution of the cosmos in the wisdom of his grandmother, whom he questioned thus: "Grandmother, what does the earth rest on?" "On the back of a tortoise," she replied sagely. "Well, what does the tortoise stand on?" "On the back of an elephant," was her prompt response. "But," continued the logical interrogator, "on what does the elephant stand?" "On a pile of rocks," said the unbaffled sage. "Yes, grandmother, but the rocks, what do they rest on?" "The rocks! Why, you little fool, there are rocks all the way down."

It strikes us that some of our scientists have gone about as far towards an explanation of facts in the material universe, as "grandmother" did, and that the questions often put by common sense, open in their theories, a chasm that "goes all the way down."

France and Germany.

The reports transmitted by Cable about the critical state of the relations between France and Germany seem to have but a very slender foundation. They would scarcely have commanded any degree of credence had the policy of France not been of a kind to warrant the belief that as soon as she thinks herself strong enough, she will be perfectly disposed to renew the adjourned quarrel with her late conqueror. The entire energies of France are at this moment being devoted to military reorganization. As an example of this, take the details supplied by the latest mail files in regard to a new financial project having for its main object the supply of fresh war material. For this department of military expenditure some 76 millions of dollars are to be raised by a sinking fund accruing during five years. The chief items of this expenditure are as follows:—For the fortification of Paris and other cities, 30 millions; for the construction of fortified camps, 6 millions; for 450 field batteries, 4 millions; for pontoon carriages, etc., 2 millions; for 600 seige guns and carriages, 2 millions; for the purchase of 896,000 rifles, with cartridges, sabres, etc., 13 1-2 millions; and for powder magazines, 8 millions.

Formidable preparations like these are designed, as the Siecle puts it, "to place the military resources of France in such a position that by the year 1877 she need not fear any contingency whatever." That Germany should consider a policy like this in the light of a menace is perfectly natural. That she should take any active measures to prevent its being carried out, is somewhat improbable. Nothing can hinder France from striking for the recovery of her lost provinces as soon as the opportunity presents itself, and the obvious policy for Germany is to stand quietly on the defensive, and take care, meanwhile, that when the struggle does come again, France should be compelled to go into it without allies. This seems to be pretty much what Prince Bismarck is at present doing. It is, of course, a somewhat melancholy commentary upon the progress of modern civilization that two of the greatest nations of the world should be compelled to stand facing each other in yearly expectations of another life-and-death struggle. It is not merely the ambition of rulers or the strategems of politicions which have given rise to a state of things so deplorable. The German people were all but unanimous in their demand that the annexation of Alsace and part of Lorraine should follow the close of the war. The French people are equally united in the resolve that, come what may, these provinces must be regained, and no government could exist for a day in France which did not recognize the force of this sentiment. It is almost hopeless to trust to time to soothe the animosities left as the legacy of the late conflict. The stronger France becomes, the more likely she will be to pant for a renewal of the struggle, and the heavier the burden of taxation consequent upon the war presses upon the people, the more deeply will they nourish the hope of revenge against the victor who made them pay so dearly for defeat. This to be sure, is as barbarous as men were in the age of flint-head arrows, but it is true nevertheless, and neither the church nor the schoolmaster are likely to do anything more in France that strengthen the hatred which is strong enough already.—Scot. Am. Journal.

We hear Br. S. E. Mabey has some thought of removing to Eastern Michigan. The brethren there would welcome him heartily. ——The Germans near Yorktown, Ill., are becoming much interested in Advent views. Some of them come to hear Br. Mabey. One brother offers $25 to put German tracts in circulation there.——Not only the Norwegians and Germans, but the French are crying for aid. An appeal reaches us from Vermont in behalf of the French of Canada and New England. There must be a waking up somewhere, or our work will only be half done.——The Swede brethren are publishing Whitmore's Immortality in their native tongue. Also Fassett's tract on Paul's "desire to"—depart, as some will have it.——The reaction we predicted at Laingburg, Mich., has come. There is now an intense interest to hear all about Adventism. Some have been baptised, and a church organized. ——The church at West Elk has of late been benefitted by a visit from Br. Crandoll. They hold on to the faith. Br. Mackey preaches there once a month.——Sr. Janes has been ordered to "keep silence in the churches," at least so far as preaching is concerned. As the order is from her physician, and imperative, we suppose she must obey, to the regret of many.——Br. Kellaway is endeavoring to raise means for a tent for England. A most laudable enterprise. Contributions or pledges may be directed to this office; or to Br. Kellaway at the Crisis office. ——We hear that Brn. Grant and Sheldon were in Chicago last Sunday.——Br. E. C. The Times.

AT HOME.

– – – The late great earthquake in California has been heard from as far South as the city of Mexico, and North to the Oregon, and seems to have extended over an area of 1,400 by 1,000 miles.

– – – Brigham Young has been released from custody, and the proceedings of the District Court, before which he was indicted, pronounced unconstitutional. So Brigham triumphs, at least for the present.

– – – The Chicago Tribune says: The Brooklyn Presbytery has adopted, with but few dissenting votes, a memorial to the General Assembly of the Church, asking the adoption of a rule forbidding the preaching or praying by women "in the public and promiscuous meetings of the Church of Christ." The main reason assigned for such action, is that there are no instances recorded in the Bible of women serving as "Apostles, Presbyters, Evangelists, pastors, or teachers." This has a strong family resemblance to the argument against croquet elaborated last year by a Vermont religious, who proclaimed that there was no record of the Apostles having believed in any such game; that we ought to be as much like the Apostles as possible; and that we therefore ought to abhor croquet. Nineteen centuries ago it would have been an impossibility for a woman to travel to foreign lands to preach the gospel; if this obstacle could have been surmounted, the woman of that time would still have been prevented by her ignorance from preaching; and, in addition, female Evangelists would have so outraged all the ideas of propriety of that age that they could have done no good. All the causes which prevented woman's praying and preaching in public, nineteen hundred years ago, have but little weight to-day. As we have once before pointed out, the real power in every Christian church is vested in its feminine members. Ill-judged attempts to keep them forever from a work to portions of which they are especially adapted, can only result in their quickly asserting this power.

ABROAD.

– – – Australia is suffering from one of the plagues of Egypt, which is afflicting the southern part of that island. Adelaide has been visited by a swarm of locusts, which, if we may trust the accounts of eye-witnesses, darkened the sun, filled the air, and stripped the earth of every green thing.

– – – The move for an advance of agricultural wages, says the London Times, appears to be spreading into districts very far from Warwickshire, and very unlike it. There is agitation, thus far of a temperate character, in the purely agricultural county, Worcester. The farmers of Cambridgeshire have met in anticipation of danger. The laborers of East Dorset have demanded better wages, with a threat of a strike. Laborers between Norwich and Great Harmouth are on the move, and there is a "lockout" for shorter hours, as well as better wages in Lincolnshire.

– – – The plans of the reorganization of the French army are nearly completed. The country is to be divided into twelve military regions. In each of which there will be a corps d'armée. Each of these will consist, nominally, of six brigades, really of five, because each will send one brigade to garrison Paris and Lyons, the two insurrectionary centers. The whole force is to consist of 1,200,000 men. Every Frenchman has to serve. The system of substitutes, and the exemption hitherto granted to the eldest sons of widows, etc., are both done away with. More important still, the army is denied the right to vote. The regulations about the reserves, etc., are substantially the same as those of Prussia.

– – – A letter from Vienna, dated April 19, says the World's Exposition, to be held there in 1873, begins already to occupy the minds of people there. Two thousand men are employed on the building, which is to consist of one long gallery, twenty-five metres in width, by about 900 in length, with twenty cross-galleries, each sixteen metres wide, and 200 long. The space between the cross-galleries can also be used, and there are to be several supplementary buildings for works of art, machinery, etc., but the main feature is a rotunda. This dome is to have a span of 101 metres, double that of St. Peter's at Rome, and to weigh about 2,000 tons, the material being iron. Scott Russel has the architecture in charge. There is plenty of room, more than five times as much space being available as in the building at Paris.

– – – The London Standard, received by late mail, remarks: We must presume Prince Bismarck intended to make a durable peace, but it is quite clear he has imposed upon France a peace which it is practically impossible she should keep. The sacrifices exacted from her are too great. They are so "ingeniously" contrived as to make submission to the new settlement almost impossible. There is not only this question of the indemnity which remains to provoke irritation and to challenge conflict, but there is that large annexation of thoroughly French provinces. The lasting peace which was promised remains as far off as ever. No one believes in peace, and the fear of another war weighs like an incubus upon the industry and commerce of Europe.

– – – The London Telegraph, of April 13, says of the German attitude toward France: "Prince Bismarck has been from the first alive to the certainty that, at some time or other, the conquered nation would attempt to seize its revenge, and in the light of that foreknowledge he planned and exacted his guarantees; but we do not imagine he expected the revival of France would be so rapid, and the problem for him now is whether France has been sufficiently crushed and weakened for the security of Germany. Our present information leads us to anticipate that the Imperial Chancellor will without scruple, interfere to prevent France from stealing a march upon Germany. He is determined to have absolute security on the western frontier of the new Empire which his genius has built up, whether M. Thiers may see it or not. The Prince believes that he holds the immediate destinies of France in the hollow of his hand, and he will not be slow to close that iron grip for securing the tranquillity and safety of Germany.

– – – The strike of the agricultural laborers in Warwickshire attracts much attention in England. Several of the metropolitan journals have special correspondents on the ground, whose letters reveal an unsuspected depth of wretchedness. The London Telegraph publishes verbatim the account given by one of the strikers, of his life. He says: "I am 29 years of age, married, with three children. I have worked for the same master for fifteen years. I have earned 18d per day, and been at work ten hours a day. The earnings of myself and my family are 11s 2d per week. * * My food is, generally, a bread and water mess for breakfast, and, if we have it, a cold potato. My dinner is a boiled dumpling, with potatoes and onions in it. My supper is a bit of bread, cup of tea, and a tiny bit of cheese (if we have it); and, for a treat, an onion. We can never get a beef or mutton, but sometimes a pig's liver—say six times a year. * * I pay £4 per annum for my house and garden, 36 yards by 15." The kind of tea Warwickshire laborers drink may be conjectured from the fact stated by a correspondent of the London News, that the allowance is one spoonful of "tea dust" to seven people.

– – – The eruption of Mount Vesuvius is proving to be very disastrous, insomuch that all the villages for miles around the base of the volcano are being evacuated by their terrified inhabitants. For these the Government has to provide, and the Ministers have been summoned from Rome for the purpose. From the meager account furnished by the cable, the eruption appears to be a repetition of 1779, the matter emitted being lava, flames, and red-hot stones. By the eruption referred to (which was three or four months in reaching its climax), the village of Torre del Greco, situated amid luxuriant vineyards, only seven miles from Naples, was totally destroyed. Built up again of the lava which had buried it, and increased to a town of 13,000 people, the same village is now again threatened with destruction. Of the stones then thrown up, some were more than a hundred feet in circumference. It will be recollected that, at the first eruption of Vesuvius, in A. D. 79, only ashes and sulphurous vapor escaped. Lava did not begin to flow until a thousand years later; since which time there have been very many serious eruptions. The worst of these during the present century were those of 1822 and 1855, by the latter of which the village of Cercolo was destroyed, and the shape of the mountain greatly altered, so vast was the quantity of lava emitted.

The telegram reads as follows:

Naples, April 26.—Evening.—A fresh crater opened in Vesuvius to-day. Ashes and lava threaten the village on the mountain side, and the inhabitants are removing their household goods. Thousands are encamped in the fields. The Ministers have been summoned from Rome, and are coming to make provisions for the houseless people. The bay is covered with boats filled with spectators. The scene is grand and terrible beyond description. The flames at times shoot up to a great hight, and masses of rock are ejected, with earthquake shocks, which are distinctly felt in this city.

– – – Late telegrams from Spain represent that the situation has become serious. The government is resolved to adopt the most rigorous measures to suppress the insurrection. There is a vast increase in the number of Carlist bands throughout the Kingdom. Fifteen thousand persons are now in insurrection. A Royal proclamation has been issued, declaring many places in a state of siege. The Government refuses to furnish the press information relative to its or the Carlist's movements. There is a great demand from the provinces where the Carlists are now active for troops to assist in driving out the disturbers. Marshal Serrano, with 6,000 men, has gone to Navarre. His presence at the head of this force has checked the operations of the Carlists in that department. Serrano will be appointed Generalissimo of the forces operating against the insurrectionists. Marshal Concha will also be given high command. It is believed that the future of Spain now depends upon the course of the radicals, and that if they co-operate with the partisans of Don Carlos, the revolution will be successful.

Senor Rosas, nominee of the Ministerialists, has been elected President of the Cortes by a large majority. The other officers chosen by the Cortes are also supporters of the Government.

Zorilla, Moret, and other leading Radicals were yesterday presented to the King. This circumstance is regarded as of much importance in view of reports that the Republicans were in league with the Carlists in insurrection.

A company of twenty-two gens d'armes attacked and dispersed a band of Carlists, 200 in number, in the Province of Valladolid. It is officially stated that the number of insurgents actually in the field, is 8,000.

Strength for the Day.

Strength for the day! At early dawn I stand,
Helpless and weak, and with unrested eyes,
Watching for day. Before its portal lies
A low black cloud—a heavy iron band.
Slowly the mist is lifted from the land,
And pearl and amber gleam across the skies,
Gladdening my upward gaze with sweet surprise!
I own the sign. I know that he whose hand
Hath fringed those sombre clouds with ruby ray,
And changed that iron bar to molten gold,
Will to my wandering steps be guide and stay—
Breathe o'er my wavering heart to rest for aye,
And give my waiting, folded palms to hold
His blessed morning boon—strength for the day!

Do you Pray with your Family?

A few weeks ago the above question was asked each member of a quarterly conference, and, to our astonishment, some of them had to answer in the negative. For their benefit, and others who are thus fearfully neglecting their duties, I write this article.

Brethren, you are holding a responsible office in the church. Your example before your brethren is such as will lead them astray, instead of leading them to Christ. Would you dare stand up before your brethren and exhort them to let the family altar go down? You dare not. You would be ashamed to do it. Then why teach by your example that which you would be ashamed to teach by precept? Then remember that every day you neglect the family altar you are virtually saying to your brethren, "Go thou and do likewise." "Train up a child in the way he should go," is the language of holy writ. And there is no part of this spiritual nurture more profitable or important than family religion.

It is readily acknowledged that the discharge of this duty is incumbent first upon the husband, as the God of nature originally ordained him the head of the family. Dear brethren, you who have neglected this important exercise, commence it at once. It is your most reasonable service. It is a small tribute of gratitude to the beneficent Being who placed you in a family relation, and is crowning you with marks of his goodness. The "loving-kindness" of God to you and your children is "better than life;" and this loving kindness must be sought if it is expected. But his frown is more dreadful than death. Let me remind you of the example of David, who "returned from offering burnt-offerings and peace-offerings in the tabernacle and blessed his household; and of Abraham, who "commanded his children, and his household after him, to keep the ways of the Lord;" of the patriarch Job, who "rose up early in the morning and offered burnt-offerings for his children;" of Joshua, who piously resolved, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

Will not the examples of these good men, my brethren, and the blessings they and their households received, prompt you to action? Will you not erect the family altar at once, and pray for yourselves and your children? May God help you.

Mother, if your husband is neglectful, and will not, by your persuasion, erect the family altar, a weightier responsibility devolves on you. Neglect not to pray with and for your children. Suppose that your husband was neglectful of the temporal wants of your children, that he made no exertions to procure for them food and clothing, would you therefore feel excused from doing anything for their support? No. His inattention to the interests of your children would fill you with increased anxiety for them, and cause you to double your diligence in their behalf. And surely if the negligence of your husband should increase your anxiety for the welfare of their bodies, should not the same consideration render you still more anxious to promote the interests of their souls? We think so; and, therefore, exhort you to begin the work without delay.

Before I close this article, let me ask every parent to consider the following portions of Scripture: "The curse of the Lord is in the house of the wicked, but he blesseth the habitation of the just." "The light of the wicked shall be dark in his tabernacle, and his candle shall be put out; terror shall make him afraid on every side; his confidence shall be rooted out, and it shall bring him to the king of terrors; his children are far from safety, and they are crushed in the gate, neither is there any to deliver them." And how dreadful are the words of the prophet Jeremiah when he says: "Pour out thy fury upon the heathen who know thee not, and upon the families that call not upon thy name!"

O, dreadful thought! The families that call upon the name of God, and the heathen that know him not, must have his fury poured out upon them.

Fathers and mothers, how can you sleep with God's fury hanging over your heads, and your children far from safety. And as they journey from year to year, recollect that they are performing a journey to the eternal world, and aim by your prayers and instructions to reclaim them from that broad road which leads to death to that narrow way which leads to life everlasting.—Telescope.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

Saturday, April 13. Br. L. F. Cole called upon us to-day, just from New England, to make his home in the West. He will find an open door, and a hearty welcome, as would more such men.

Sunday, April 14. To-day we hold our first Advent meeting at Norwood Park. There is only one chapel in the place, held by the Reformed Presbyterians. They occupy it only a small portion of the time; but the pastor told us that it was not consistent to open it to us, or even to any other denomination. We have secured the School House for a service at 3 p. m. on each Sabbath, while the Baptist brethren occupy it morning and evening.

We are treated very kindly by all classes, and there has been much inquiry for the past two weeks when we were to commence our meetings. We are a few in number; but composed of those who long ago learned not to despise the day of small things.

This a. m. I attended the Baptist meeting. Br. Jackson, of the Theological School at Chicago, addressed us from Mat. 7: 13, 14, on the narrow way to life, and the broad way to death. It was a well prepared sermon, and well delivered. It was mostly practical, but he wove in the doctrine of going to heaven and hell at death. Happiness was life, and destruction was eternal life in the prison-house of hell, whose flames were increasing more and more, and would continue to do so forever. But the Savior evidently meant, by life, continued existence, and by death, the cessation of our vital, conscious existence.

In the p. m. I gave a discourse on the prophecies, on the first and second coming of Christ. We had a goodly number of the citizens out to hear, who appeared to be interested.

Monday, April 15. To-day our office was formally opened in at 11 So. Canal St. Chicago. We have been in a country village the last eight years, or since we removed from Boston in 1863. There we had all the mail and other privileges a large city affords. But when I commenced in the West with a few subscribers, and small means, it was necessary that we should live cheap, in order to sustain ourselves; and this could be done only in a small town, where rents and living were low. We were content to do this, but always in the hope that when the interests of the cause should demand it, a door would open for us in the great emporium of the Interior. And we are here. It now remains for all the servants and patrons of the Association to be faithful, in the hope of greater usefulness. With our unity, let us blend zeal, liberality, and a determination to extend our power and usefulness to the utmost extent.

I have spent most of the week at the office in the city, and received the congratulations of friends and brethren. To-morrow I leave for Cincinnati.

In connection with our removal, it is due to our good brother and friend, H. V. Reed, that it was through his agency that our attention was called to Norwood Park. And he has showed us no little kindness in the cares of our removal. He is a much respected citizen of Norwood Park, and has done much, and is still using his influence to build up the town. The Lord reward and prosper him.

Friday, April 19. I took the cars for Cincinnati. And being too much jaded to ride all night without sleep, I took the new sleeping car invented by Woodruff, and just coming into use. It gives the weary traveler a spring bed, and, to my notion, better accommodation than even the Pullman car. There seems to be no limit to man's ingenuity and skill. We see his inventions and wonder and admire, and often say nothing can be invented to exceed it; but the next thing we hear or see is an improvement that outdoes all that has come before it. We have learned not to limit inventive genius. I enjoyed the newly invented car-bed, and was greatly refreshed. I retired in Chicago, and waked up the next morning in Indianapolis. Having to wait for the next train, I spent the time at the National Surgical Institute, for the treatment of all cases of surgery, deformities, chronic diseases, &c. I enjoyed a pleasant interview with Dr. Johnson, the leading surgeon, who assured me that I could be helped in a bad case of hemorrhoids. They make all their instruments and appliances, and have multitudes applying for help. It is sad to see so much suffering and misery. They have upwards of three thousand patients annually, most of whom are helped, and many cured. It is one of the largest and best institutions of the kind in the United States. Taking leave of Dr. Johnson, I came to Cincinnati at 4 p. m., and came directly to Pendleton, and was welcomed by Dr. Tibbets and family, where I have plenty of work, and hope for fruit.

In the evening I enjoyed the society of Presbyterians, Baptists, and Episcopalians, all of whom sympathize more or less in the truth. We took sweet counsel together in the truth and the blessed hope of the gospel. They had sent for me to visit them, and speak on the gospel of the kingdom. They had heard and read enough to make them feel that they must hear more. I felt some like Peter, when called to Joppa. Br. Tibbett's house is by the river side; and though there was no vision to call me, there were equally anxious hearts to hear the truth and receive it.

Sabbath, April 21. I went with Dr. Tibbetts to the Baptist church. Mr. Sawyer, the pastor, spoke from Is. 40: 31—"They that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength." It was a plain, experimental and practical talk, and will do good.

I am to speak in this chapel at 3 p. m. The pastor is opposed to this, as he judged from his standpoint it would do no good to preach on the coming of Christ. It had done injury, and broken up churches, and he did not think it best to give his sanction, or even consent.

I had a large audience, mostly of men, because of the storm. The pastors and most of the professional men were out, with many who do not usually attend church. I spoke on the evidences of Christ's Messiahship. At the close I was kindly greeted by those who opposed me before they heard. Mr. Jones, of the Congregational church, invited me to speak in his chapel at night. We had a large attendance, and I had freedom in showing that the meek would inherit the earth. At the close they invited me to continue my lectures in their church, instead of going to the hall. Doors are open to me on every side, and I fear the truth is getting too popular. I shall keep back nothing that is profitable, and I hope my visit here will result in the salvation of souls.

From C. C. Marston.

Our late meetings at Foreston were attended with a special interest. Monday eve., April 8, the town hall was well filled with attentive and interested people. Since our meeting here last winter there has been much agitation of the nature of man, &c. Tuesday night I met Mr. Hurless, presiding elder among the United Brethren, in debate. Our subject was the state of the dead. I found Mr. H. quite a pleasant and companionable opponent. He presented no new arguments, but put with considerable ingenuity the old threadbare quibbles, foibles, and inferences of so-called orthodox interpretation; heading each important argument with a statement similar to this: "Dr. Clark says so and so." I was amused with his mode of answering my arguments. He did it mostly by denunciation. Said he was ashamed of me; felt like weeping, &c. God's truth still stands, and shines brighter than ever.

My discussion at Farmer City, with Br. S. K. Hallam, commenced March 18, and continued three days of three sessions each, and was to me the most satisfactory effort of my ministerial life. I found Br. H. quite a fair and pleasant disputant, except that once or twice he became somewhat discourteous. He however soon saw the folly of meeting an unanswerable argument by calling his opponent hard names. I never had more liberty of thought and speech in my life in presenting the truth, than I have had in this discussion. This affords me additional proof that public debate is a legitimate work of the gospel ministry. The Lord helped me. Blessed be his name forever.

The attendance was very large. An effectual door has been opened for the proclamation of the "present truth." I was urged to visit in several places and preach adjacent to Farmer City. Several prominent citizens were very anxious that I should remain longer, as they freely testified in a substantial manner.

From P. S. W. Deyo.

Ever since the fore part of February I have been most constantly in the field, trying to do something for the cause of Christ. I spent some time about ten miles N. E. from this city, with the Little Cedar church. The Lord greatly blessed his truth, so that there have been thirty-three baptised, and more have promised to be. All but about ten are heads of families. I am engaged to do part of their preaching for the year to come. This society has been for four years battling for the truth, Br. A. A. Wilber, mostly preaching to them, is also engaged to preach part of the time. They keep up a good and interesting prayer-meeting.

I had a call to Tama county. It was a short notice, and I had to leave without delay, but got there March 23. The Methodist preacher was sick, and I had an invitation to preach in his place the first night. The house I was to occupy was in the next district west, where Br. P. S. Converse lives. I commenced the next day, and stayed till April 5. During this time the Lord prospered us greatly. The work began with the heads of families. I baptised six April 3, and on the next day I organized a church of fourteen members, without sectarian name or creed. In the evening six more united, and twenty more were taken under the watchcare of the church till they are baptised. Out of this forty there were about six that enjoyed religion before I went there. We left them with one good talent to conduct the prayer-meetings till they get better help. For want of means, I did but little all the forepart of the winter; but since I swung out in February, there has been baptised and pledged for baptism to average one a day, besides those who have been reclaimed. Praise the Lord.

From T. B. V. Porter.

Brn. Field, Green, and Cass were here a few weeks since, but did not remain long enough. That is the great fault in our protracted meetings: ministers stay three or four days and get up a lively interest, and then leave the harvest nearly matured for others to gather. Since our meeting the Baptists have been holding forth what they call the gospel, and many of the young have united with them—simply the seed Dr. Field sowed in February. If it will do them any good, I can say God speed them. We have considerable opposition and persecution from our sectarian friends, and even some of our own flock have become false and gone back—"They went out from us because they were not of us." But we are not in the least discouraged or disheartened. God has said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." "My grace is sufficient for you." But those that will live godly must suffer persecution. How sweet for the good to suffer for their faith in Christ. We simply suffer scoffing, slander and misrepresentation; but the Christian fathers and apostles suffered the same, and many of them martyrdom besides How encouraging to read the last words of Polycarp on his approaching the place of execution. The pro-consul, ashamed of putting to death so aged and venerable a man, urged him to blaspheme Christ. It was then that he answered, "Eighty and six years I have served him; during all that time he never did me harm. How then can I blaspheme my King and my Savior?" When further urged, his answer was, "I am a Christian." When threatened with wild beasts, he said, "Bring them forth." When with fire, he reminded them of the fire that waits the ungodly. We have the words of our Savior, when expiring upon the cross, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." And the last words of Stephen are not less touching, "Lord Jesus, lay not this sin to their charge." So Paul's words, "I have fought a good fight; I have kept the faith; I have finished my course: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown, which the Lord the righteous Judge will give to me in that day; and not to me only, but to all them that love his appearing."

Are not these words from dying Christians encouraging to us? But our prospect ought to be brighter; for we live nearer the end, the blessed appearing of Christ. We ought to live more faithful than others, for we have greater incentives and inducements.

We meet regularly for worship on each Lord's day. Sunday-school, or Bible class in the morning, with some twenty or thirty in attendance, after which we have preaching, generally, and always take the memorials. On Wednesday night we meet for prayer and social meeting. In so doing we are continually strengthened. If any preaching brethren should stop while passing near us, we would receive them gratefully.

From Jeremiah Carr.

It is not less theology that we need but more of the burning love of God in our hearts to set our preaching and writing all on fire. Lord grant us a closer union with Christ. I am doing what I can in proclaiming the blessed truth of the grace of God, striving to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace with all those that love our Lord Jesus Christ. While some have "gone off on their own-hook" theory, and are striving to make a division in the flock of God in Maine, I pray God that they may see that such a course tends to scatter abroad, and not to gather with Christ. I pray God we may learn wisdom by the things we have suffered, and do "nothing through strife or vain glory," but to do all we do to the glory of God, and to be clothed with humility as with a garment.

Truly the battle is waxing hotter. Truth and error are coming and close conflict. But the war will be short. I believe Jesus will soon come and close up the controversy. May we all strive to live as brethren, and if we cannot all see just alike about our work in the vineyard, Lord help us to work and let work, and still possess a kind spirit to all.

From Thos. W. Raymond.

The Times and tracts you have sent me are doing a good work. There are a great many who see their Bible in a different light from what they ever have before. I talk with a great many. At first they want to argue the question; but as soon as they commence, they merely assert what they think and not what the Word of God teaches. Sometimes I am almost made to believe that I ought to go out and preach the gospel of the everlasting kingdom of Christ. Then I think again that my abilities to teach are too limited, with my want of a good education to withstand the outside pressure of learning. But I am willing to work on in my humble way, until Christ comes or he gives me greater light. Then I will follow wherever he leads.

—Our brother is on the right. We shall expect to hear of him in the field soon.—Ed.

From S. C. Wellcome.

On Friday, March 15, I went to Havanna where I had an appointment in the evening, at the house of Br. Enny. They have never had our views presented in the neighborhood but once before, and that was by Br. E. T. Himes. A sleigh-load of friends came in from the west, some twelve miles, taking Br. E. K. Smith of Owatonna, with them. They were strangers to me, but not strangers to our blessed hope. We had a precious season together, talking of present enjoyments and future prospects. I was persuaded to leave an appointment to meet them again in four weeks seven miles west of Owatonna, where they have not yet had preaching. Br. Smith is an able man, sound in the faith. It seems to me and others that are acquainted with him, that he ought to be in the field. God give him light in regard to duty.

Saturday, I went to Janesville, where I was met by Br. Bates of Medo who carried me to the S. H. in that place, some 15 miles. Here I preached Saturday eve., and three times Sunday, to a good congregation and good interest. God's people were blessed and strengthened in discharge of duty, and backsliders returned and confessed their wanderings. The brethren practice showing their faith by their works, and kindly testified the same to us.

Monday, I left for Br. Cumming's neighborhood, where I was to visit a few days with my widowed mother and other friends. Tuesday eve. I spoke to the friends in Br. Cumming's house, on practical religion. It is an excellent neighborhood, but they need an outpouring of God's spirit, to stir them up to work for God in these days of peril. Wednesday eve. I spoke to the friends in the Andrews neighborhood. Many present were backsliders. Tears were shed, but I could get no pledges that they would turn to God. But it seemed good to meet with old familiar faces and talk to them of the blessed hope. May God awaken them, is my prayer.

Thursday, Br. Cummings took me to Garden City, with my mother and sister, to my brother's. He preaches now every Sunday in his neighborhood. Friday, came to Kasota and preached in the evening. Here is a faithful little band—Brn. Chadwick and Butter's families and others who have long been in the way and looking for the coming king. Before I left, the brethren and sisters organized themselves into a church, called the Kasota Advent Christian Church. Here, also, my wants were liberally supplied. God bless them and all those little scattered bands West, and give them Shepherds to labor with them, is my prayer. There never was a time when there was greater interest to hear of our blessed hope. God bless the people, is my prayer, and send forth faithful laborers filled with the Holy Spirit.

Disorganizers.

Every great religious reformation has been more or less cursed by a disorganizing element. The Lutheran reformation was the occasion for the disgraceful conduct of a sect of Anabaptists, led on by Munzer, Stubner, Storick. Such were their ideas of liberty that they waged war against all order and government in both church and state. They regarded civil government, as an encroachment on their spiritual liberty. They advocated the abolition of all distinctions in society and the practice of polygamy.

In order to propagate their agrarian doctrines with greater success, they pretended to be favored with visions and revelations—instructing them to raise an army for the overthrow of the law, and governments. The seditious crowd was dispersed by the Elector of Saxony and other princes of Germany, and their leader Munzer was put to death.

The Second Advent movement has suffered no little embarrassment and disgrace from disorganizers, but little better than the religious anarchy of the sixteenth century. Since 1843 we have had to contend against every possible disadvantage growing out of the abuse of Christian liberty. For years all was confusion and disorder. Shameful and scandalous scenes were enacted under the name of Adventism. Shut-door doctrine, spiritual wives, apostasies into Shakerism, visions and revelations, seventh-day Sabbath, extreme views of John Thomas, which, when once imbibed, produced intolerance, bigotry, and unchristianizing of everybody but such as concurred in his views; all kinds of speculations in regard to the age to come, the restoration of fleshly Israel with its consequent absurdities, and many more equally disturbing and distracting views, insisted on as essential to salvation.

Notwithstanding the disastrous results of years of anarchy, we still have men opposed to order and government in the church of God. They still persist in their disorganizing policy, and proclaim to the world, and to their shame be it said, that all church organizations are combinations for the purpose of depriving Christians of their right! Adventists are advised to be on their guard against organized churches and keep out of them. The apostolic order is openly opposed as obsolete and dangerous to liberty; hence, we must live isolated from one another, without churces, officers, order, or government, every man for himself, independent of every body—a church to himself!

Strange as it is, we have men of these anarchichal ideas, either wandering about, or stationary, operating "on their own hook," and refusing to connect themselves with any organized Advent Church, but still claiming the right to come into our Conferences, and meeting houses and preach and sell their books and papers!

Now I say emphatically, that if it is wrong for Adventists to have organized churches and houses for public worship, it is wrong for these anarchists—these independent gentlemen—to preach in them. And I am in favor of excluding them from our houses. Let them enjoy their independence to their heart's content and find independent places in which to "beat the air"—for that is about all they will ever accomplish on their independent principles. They remind me of Jude's wandering stars, meteors in the theological heavens, emitting but an evanescent light. While I am an uncompromising advocate for Christian liberty, and would oppose everything but faith in Christ and obedience to his commandments as a standard of Christian character and a test of fellowship, still, I am equally opposed to allowing such men to preach in our houses of worship.

Let the Advent brethren everywhere take a firm stand against lawlessness, anarchy, and disorder. Maintain your organizations, and the apostolic order of things, and you will grow in grace, in knowledge and in numbers. God will bless you and build you up in faith, hope, and charity: for he is a God of order.

The Bishop's Office.

Among the multitude of errors and corruptions introduced into the world by the grand apostasy is the abuse of the Bishop's office. The Bishops of the Church of Rome, of England, and of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States, are not legitimate offices of the Church of God. The New Testament knows nothing of such men. They are not such bishops as Paul directed Timothy to ordain over the churches. Their jurisdiction is unauthorized; and their powers and prerogatives anything but apostolic. They are pet instruments in the hands of the Mother of Harlots and her daughters, to enforce the doctrines and commandments of men, and keep mankind in ignorance.

Bishops in the primitive churches were overseers of one congregation and no more. They had no authority whatever to rule two, ten, or one hundred churches, as they do at the present day. It was necessary for them to be personally and intimately acquainted with every member of the church they were appointed to teach and rule. They were to take care of the respective churches as they would their household.

The Greek word episkopos, signifies an overseer, to which the Saxon word biscop corresponds in meaning; and hence, its introduction into our English versions of the New Testament.

But the question which concerns us is, what was the extent of the oversight of this episkopos or bishop? Did he have the oversight of a whole province or one single congregation? This question is easily decided if we admit the Acts of the Apostles, and Paul's epistles as authority.

The word elder is not a synonym of the word bishop; but properly signifies one of his qualifications. As the bishops were selected from the old men of the church in time they were sometimes called elders or seniors. Paul forbade the appointment of young men to the bishop's office. Among the qualifications, then, of a bishop, he was to be a man of age and experience and have believing children, ruling his house well. Without these qualifications he was not eligible to the bishop's office.

The word elder is not an appropriate official title; and it ought to be dispensed with; and the word bishop uniformly used to designate one ordained to the oversight of a congregation of Christians. It is not right that the illegitimate rulers of the apostate churches of the present day, should exclusively wear the title of bishop to which they are really not entitled. I propose then in view of these facts and considerations, that we introduce the Scriptural titles of bishops and deacons into all of our churches, and use them in our intercourse and correspondence. It is a right, and indeed our duty, to use the style of the sacred writers in addressing these officers of our own choice. Let us take these titles from those who have no right to them. Because they have been ursurped and abused is no reason why we should not use them.

I would like to hear from the brethren on this subject as it is obviously one of some importance to those who are laboring to restore the ancient order of things.

Evening Talks with my Neighbors.
No 5.

Good evening, Mr. L. Please continue the conversation on the evidences of Christianity.

L. Well, we were on miracles last.

D. Why not have miracles now as well as in Christ's time?

L. For the reason that God treats us as rational beings. He assists us to walk. He does not treat us as infants in the age and knowledge of the gospel. He makes us rational beings, and endows us with reason: then he reveals himself.

D. How does he reveal himself?

L. By miracles, signs, and wonders, by his laws that are above human production.

D. True; but—

L. Let me tell you—now he says draw forth those powers and put them to use and develop them.

D. Illustrate it, if you please.

L. Will a Bible illustration do?

D. Certainly.

L. Well, God gives us one in Deut. 32:11, 12. "As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings: so the Lord alone did lead him, and there was no strange God with him."

D. Please explain more fully.

L. The Lord illustrates by this that he has done everything to have men develop themselves, and he helps, as the eagle does her young. The eagle stirreth up her nest, spreads her wings, then one of the young eagles gets on the wing, and away flies the old eagle. Suddenly it darts away from the young eagle and leaves it in mid air, to fly for itself. But when it sees its offspring tired, and likely to fall to the ground and dash to pieces, the old bird immediately flies under the young eagle and catches it, and saves as well as rests it. So God does not try us above what we can bear; and if we have "thorns in the flesh," he vouchsafes us sufficient grace to bear them.

D. Oh! I see—I see. God wants us to be above a machine, and develop up into a higher and nobler life. But why not give us a few signs now?

L. As it was then, so it is now—"Show us a sign!" The world is full of Thomases. Yet Thomas was superior to many now. He believed upon seeing and feeling, but the majority of men do not do as well as Thomas at this day.

D. Why?

L. Because you see signs in the heavens and on the earth, and distress of nations, and men's hearts failing them for fear of something.

D. Something what?

L. The soon conversion of all mankind, if the preaching of orthodoxy is true.

D. Don't you believe that all mankind will soon all be converted?

L. Oh! yes; but to what?—may be the stick.

D. Well, give me the "what."

L. They will soon be converted to the fact that they (the majority of professors) have followed cunningly devised fables, instead of God's word.

D. Oh! yes, yes; but let us get back on the evidences again.

L. The people (as a majority) have seen the wonderful fulfillment of prophecy to the letter, and yet do not move. We are now grown to manhood (in religious knowledge) by having seen the fulfillment of prophecy for 1800 years. We believe the record. Now we want man's wages, and food fit for man.

D. Why then are nearly all infidels of the most intelligent part of community—is there not something wrong in the theology of the nineteenth century?

L. No sir—not "something," but it is all wrong.

D. How is that?

L. I will illustrate by one of the theological interpretations of Paul's language. "I have a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Theology says that is the body the soul enters at death, and yet claims a resurrection of the present mortal body at the judgment. Now does this not leave two bodies for one soul after the judgment?

D. Well, that does look a little mixed.

L. Well, all their interpretations are like unto this.

D. Then please do not get into the theological swamp again, or I shall need a lantern to get out of it.

L. Yes, out into him who is the Light of the world.

D. Does not the Mohammedan Bible claim miracles?

L. No sir. Mohammed claimed to have done miracles while he was inaugurating his church in the cave; but when his church was established—hear what he says: "They say unless a sign be sent down, we will not believe. Mahommed answers and says, 'Signs are in the power of God alone, and I am no more than a public preacher. Is it not sufficient for them that we have sent down unto them the book of the Koran, to be read unto them.'" Now, Mr. D. in our next talk I will show about this Mohammed's miracles, and where he did them.

Our Young Folks.

The Little Loaf.

In the time of famine a rich man sent for the poorest children in the town, and said to them:

"There is a basket of bread; you may each come every day and take a loaf until it pleases God to send better times."

The children attacked the basket, and disputed as to which should have the largest loaf, and went away without once thanking their benefactor.

Only Frances, a very poor but cleanly girl, modestly remained behind, and had the smallest loaf which was left in the basket. She gratefully returned thanks, and went home quietly. One day the children behaved very badly indeed, and poor Frances received a loaf very much smaller than the rest, but when she took it home and her mother cut it open, a number of pieces of silver fell on the floor.

The poor woman was astonished and said:

"Go and return this money immediately; it must have been put in the bread by mistake."

Frances went directly with it to the gentleman, who said:

"My dear child it was no mistake. I had the money put into that loaf to reward you. Remain always as peaceable and contented. Those who are satisfied with a little always bring blessings upon themselves and family, and will pass happily through the world. Do not thank me, but thank God, who put into your heart the treasure of a contented and grateful spirit, and who has given me the will and oppportunity to be useful to those who are in need of assistance."

A Sabbath-School Boy.

Our Thomas dropped a fine red apple out of the front window, which rolled very near the iron railing, between the grass-plot and the street. Shortly after, two boys came along.

"O, my!" cried one. "See that bouncing apple! Let's hook it out!"

The other boy nudged him with a whisper, "O, don't! there's, somebody looking." And on they went.

A little girl next passed. She spied the apple, and stopped, looked very hard at it; then put her hands through the rails, and tried to reach it. Her fingers just touched it. She looked around; a man was coming down the street. The girl withdrew her hand and went away.

A ragged little fellow came by soon after. "That boy will grab the apple," I said to myself, peeping through the blinds. His bright eye at once caught sight of it, and he stopped. After looking at it a moment, he ran across the street and picked up a stick. He poked it through the rails, and drew the apple near enough to pick it up. Turning it over in his grim hands, I could not help seeing how he longed to eat it. Did he pocket it and run? No. He came up to the steps and rang the door bell. I went to the door.

"I found this big apple in your front garden," said the boy; "and I thought may be you had dropped it out, and didn't know it was there; so I picked it up and have brought it to you."

"Why did you not eat it?"

"Oh!" said he, "it was not mine."

"It was almost in the street," said I, "where it would have been hard to find its owner."

"Almost is not quite," replied the boy; "which Mr. Curtis says, makes all the difference in the world."

"Who is Mr. Curtis?"

"My Sabbath-school teacher. He has explained the eighth commandment to me, and I know it; what is the use of knowing, unless you act upon it?" Here he handed me the apple.

"Will you accept the apple?" said I. "I am glad you brought it in; for I like to know honest boys. What is your name?"

He told me. I need not tell you, however, only I think you will agree with me, that he is the right sort of a Sabbath-school scholar. He squares his conduct by the faithful Christian instruction which he gets there.

Run For the Lily-Pads.

"How many of you boys ever went fishing?" asked the minister.

"Instantly fifty boy's eyes sparkled, and fifty boys' hands were raised.

"How many of you ever fished for pickerel?" continued the minister.

Up came most of the hands again—little hands that as the minister knew, had been nearly every one of them guilty of taking what was not theirs; for they belonged to the boys who were in a Reform School, and most of them for stealing, some little, and some much.

"Did ever you have any trouble in getting the pickerel to bite?" asked the minister.

"Yes, sir!" cried the boys.

"So have I," he replied. "I have fished for pickerel a great many times; often in a certain pond behind my father's house, which was very clear and smooth, and covered with water-lilies. These lilies were very beutiful, lying with their pure white petals and golden centres on their floating leaves; but I did not like to see them, for this reason: when I trailed my line with a fat little frog or a nice minnow on it, if I saw a pickerel swim round and round, looking at it, and working his mouth and gills, I knew that pretty soon he would jump up and snap at the the tempting bait, and then I had him. If he once began to look, I was sure of him; put if, instead, he turned and swam off under a lily-pad, as many a fish did, I knew I had lost him, and there was no use skimming and and dancing my line to that fish any longer.

"Now boys I want to tell you, when you see something you wish for which is not yours, or when you feel like saying a bad word, or going where you know you ought not to go, do not stop to look at it or think about it, but just run for the lily—pads"—Apples of Gold.

Paul's Expectation and Desire.

This tract, which has never been excelled upon the subject indicated, is now ready. Paper covers. Price: Two copies, post-paid, 10c; 30 copies for $1. Don't fail to read and lend it.

"Good Tidings."

This is a book prepared by Elds. Couch, Sheldon, Grant, and Himes. It covers a wide range of topics—Prophecy, Future Punishment, the Nature of Man, and the Saints' Inheritance. $1 in cloth; 50c. in paper.

Expressing Money.

By a new arrangement SMALL SUMS of money can be sent by express at a low rate. $25 or any smaller sum can be sent home from any office of the American Merchants' Union Express Company for 15c.

From any office of any other company, 20c. This is cheap and absolutely safe. Any who send money in this way should direct to J. V. Himes, Norwood Park, Ill., and prepay the charges; otherwise the package will not be received.

Field's Discussion.

For some time this desirable work has been out of print. The main topic is the Intermediate State, or Condition of the Dead. When a new edition was announced, some of the Doctor's old Disciple friends announced that they would buy and circulate it as soon as ready, because they thought it would help their side that Mr Connolly had the best of the argument. We shall soon know whether they really so felt, or were indulging mere bragadocio. The book has not yet made any converts to immaterialism that we have heard of, but we have learned of its bringing not a few to adopt the Bible theory.

The book has heretofore been sold at one dollar. The present edition is in paper covers (pp 318), and will be sent post-paid for 50c. We hope for liberal orders.

Prophetic Chart.

Shall this projected Map of Symbolic Prophecy be published? Turn to the description of it in late numbers of THE TIMES, and see if it is not just what every church and minister needs. Will you take one? One Hundred Subscribers are are needed to ensure success.

Notices, Etc.

Indiana Tent

Brethren in Northern Indiana who have subscribed towards this enterprise are notified that the money is needed as the canvass is already out. Those who have not subscribed are notified that their assistance is needed. Shall we not manifest a zeal worthy of the cause in which we have engaged? E. C. ANDRUS.

To the Brethren.

I am engaged in preparing a work, designed especially for the ministry, on the importance and necessity of preaching the second coming of Christ, as an event nigh at hand. My object is, in cooperation with the brethren, to have a copy placed in the hands of every minister of the gospel in the United States. All can see the importance of such an enterprise. If one only out of five hundred could be induced to give the trumpet a certain sound, it would pay for the labor and outlay. Of course, it will not be expected that those for whom the work is designed, will purchase it. This will be the work of our brethren all over the country to see that a copy is placed in the hands of every preacher of the gospel.

I propose then to request pledges and subscriptions from the brethren, in order to secure its publication, the amount subscribed to be repaid in books, if required. The nature of the work may be gleaned from the following outline:

The Christian minister a watchman, the duties of a watchman, Watchman, what of the night? The time of the end: Signs of the times—Fulfillment of Prophecy; Prophecy in relation to the First Advent; Prophecy in relation to the Second Advent; Signs of the Second Advent, Celestial, Terrestial, Moral, National. The Papacy, Spiritism, Time, Tarrying Time, etc., etc.

I would also state that the work will be useful to all for reference, as it will be largely interspersed with Scripture quotations. Any who may feel disposed to aid in this enterprise, may address Miles Grant or G. T. Adams, Crisis office, Boston, Mass.; J. V. Himes, TIMES office, Chicago, Ill.; or myself at Arena, Wis.

[t.3414] GEO. THOMPSON.

To the Advent Christians of Iowa:

Dear Brethren: We have bought a tent for our Conference use, and have paid for it except about FORTY DOLLARS. We had enough subscribed to pay for it entirely; but some of the subscribers proved delinquents, and do not even respond to my letters. What shall be done? Shall our tent lie unused all Summer? Who will take the trouble to look up those who promised to pay and have not done so? Who will collect the balance due, and then take the tent and go forth in the name of the Lord, to proclaim the gospel of the kingdom. It is time we began to wake up to this matter. D. A. DICKINSON.

To the churches co-operating with the N. Y. State Conference:

Have you all made your statement, as requested, to our Secretary, in his last report. If not, please give him the name of your minister, the number of members in your church, its service, how, when and where held: and such other information as may be of interest or necessary to crrry into practical effect the tabulation of our Conference statistics.

N. B. Will some brother or sister in each church do this without delay. Direct to Wm. E. Brown, South Butler, Wayne Co. N. Y.

The Latest Improvements

IN SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY.

With the May number, which begins a new volume, Scribner's Monthly takes a new departure.

The special features of this number are the Department of Practical and Popular Science, just addded; the enlargement of the department of Home and Society, to which half a dozen of the most brilliant and talented of writers among the women of America will contribute monthly matters of special interest to all thoughtful women in our American homes. The leading illustrated article commences a series of descriptive of American life and scenery, under the title "Travelling by telegraph." The illustrations are by a group of artists,—Moran, King, Sol. Eytynge, W. L. Sheppard, Hunge, Fresh, and others.

Warner gives us another of the "Back Log Studies," Wilkinson writes trenchantly of Lowell's Prose; Holland discourses of "The Conservative Resources of American life," "Rum and Railroads," and "Esthetics at a premium."

The number is crowded with good things,—stories and poems and essays and editorials; descriptive articles; graceful and practical discussions of home life and society; a review of culture and progress throughout the world; the latest developments of science, etc., etc.,—the whole adorned and embellished with beautiful pictures, the work of eminent artists, presenting in a concise and convenient form, the most attractive, stimulating, instructive, and delightful reading for the family, the school, the counting room, and the office.

The three bound volumes of Scribner's Monthly, which are offered with a year's subscription and covers for binding of vols. 4 and 5 at the low price of $10, contain more than a thousand illustrations and nearly four thousand pages of choice literature,—a whole cyclopedia of useful knowledge.

Single numbers are 35c: subscription price $4. Scribner's Monthly is sold and commended and subscriptions are received by nearly all the first class booksellers and newsdealers of the United States and Canada.

Advertising alone does not produce success. The thing which is advertised must have intrinsic merit, or else large advertising will eventually do it more harm than good. If you have anything which you know to be good, advertise it thoroughly, and you will be sure to succeed; if it is poor, don't praise it, for people will soon discover you are lying.

Such is the policy of the Burlington Route, which runs to three great regions in the West: 1st, to Omaha, connecting with the great Pacific Roads. 2d, To Lincoln, the capital of Nebraska, and all that beautiful region south of the Platte, filled with R. R. lands and homesteads. 3d, To St. Joseph, Kansas City and a Kansas points.

The roads are splendidly built, have the best bridges, finest cars, the Miller platform and coupler, and the safety air brake (to prevent the loss of life that is everywhere else happening); Pullman's sleepers, Pullman dining cars, large and powerful engines (to make quick time and good connections), and are in a word the best equipped roads in the West. So that if you desire to go safely, surely, quickly and comfortably to any point in Southern Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, or on the Pacific Roads, be sure that you go "By way of Burlington."

All who wish particular information, and a large map, showing correctly the Great West, and all its railroad connections, can obtain them, or any other knowledge, by addressing General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

E. H. WHEELER'S
IMPROVED
AXLE & THIMBLE SKEIN
PATENTED JAN. 12, 1872.

THE LIGHTEST, STRONGEST, AND BEST AXLE BEFORE THE PUBLIC.

Less liable to break, and cannot spring under any amount of weight that can be put upon it.

It takes a smaller sized axle and bolster or sandboard than the same sized skeins of common style; is more simple and easier to fit, the skein being of uniform taper, without shoulders upon the inside a better fit is secured. The axle can be turned in a common lathe to fit the thimble, by putting one end out of center.

The arm, or spindle, is so made as to secure the proper set of the wheels, when moderately dished, with the bottom line of the spindle on a parallel line to the bottom of the axle, an important principle never before attained. The set of the wheels is a perpendicular or right angle to the bottom line of the axle upon the face of the spokes, upon their lower half.

This cut shows the thimble and lug for the tension rod across the bottom of the axle, from thimble to thimble, and the socket for the bottom, or the sandboard, as the case may be. I also use a sand guard to keep the dirt out of the shoulder of the hub; but it is not shown in this cut.

RIGHTS FOR SALE.

Sample thimble skeins furnished to purchasers of rights, at actual cost. For further information address

THE BIBLE BANNER FREE!

We desire to call the attention of the readers of the ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES to our offer in the Bible Banner, to send it to every minister of the gospel of any denomination who will send us his address, or otherwise signify his desire to receive it.

ONE YEAR FREE

We request the readers of the TIMES to aid us in presenting this offer to such ministers as are devoted men of God, and who would probably accept, and be benefitted thereby.

Do not urge any one to accept, for we have not the means, at present, to send very many papers free, but trust the Lord will provide enough to send it where it should go to prepare the way for our weekly papers, and stir up the watchman to sound the alarm to a guilty world. A copy of the Banner from one with whom the minister is acquainted is worth a dozen sent by mail from the office of publication.

THE BANNER AND TIMES.

We will send the Banner six months free to all new subscribers to the TIMES, and to all old subscribers who mention this offer when they remit (to TIMES office) for 1872. We make one condition to this offer, viz, before the close of the six months they must either notify us to discontinue, or remit for the future, as soon as convenient.

We expect to present a large fine engraving in every number of the Banner, hereafter, which will illustrate and add new interest to Bible truth. We have already commenced the series of illustrations. Send ten cents for three sample copies. Address:

Man A Unity: or his Being and Powers the Result of Material Organism.

Superstition based upon false religious ideas is not confined to the heathen world. No greater superstition exists than the belief that man is a duality, and survives death as a conscious being. The idea is purely a superstition—it has no foundation in facts. And it cannot be shielded from this charge on the universality of the belief, and more of the various forms of idolatry. Had the Christian world been trained up in the Scriptural doctrine of a future life only by a resurrection from the dead, this purely heathen idea that dead men are alive, would be deemed worthy only of ridicule. That a man may be dissected, and all the visible and vital parts laid in the grave, and yet he himself still live on—an immaterial being, a ghost-man, is an idea worthy only of heathen superstition and philosophy.

The Scriptures never speak of man as a being independently of the body. While they speak of the "soul, body and spirit," it is only their organic union that makes the one living conscious man. Any one of them, alone, is not the man. The soul or spirit is not the man. Separate from the body they are no more a conscious entity. than is the body without them. In perfect harmony with this view the Scriptures promise no future reward or life to men, until raised from the dead. They plainly declare that man in death —in sheol or hades—is dead and unconscious. (Eccl. 9: 10; Rev. 20: 13.) And the very fact that they teach a resurrection, that men are to be raised from the dead to be rewarded, sweeps the whole field of opposing argument. Either the doctrine of the resurrection is false, or the belief is false that the dead are now alive. The two are inharmonious ideas; they do not go together. And the fact that the Bible nowhere teaches any reward whatever until the dead are raised to life, should settle this whole question in the minds of Bible students. It is of itself a declaration that the body is essential to the existence of the real, conscious man.

All we know of life is in connection with organic bodies. Plants and trees, beasts and men, are but the result of organic arrangement. And we may well suppose that no created being exists, that does not exist by virtue of this law of organic structure. Destroy this, and you destroy the living being; the life departs and the living being ceases as such to exist, as absolutely so as before its creation.

What the life element is, either in the vegetable or animal, none can tell. It begins with its organism, and ends as to the individual with the destruction of that organism. The life element itself that departs, exists no more as the individual plant, animal, or man. To believe an immaterial man still exists when the individual man is dead, is as purely a superstition as to believe an immaterial plant or horse exists when the individual animal or vegetable is dead. The organic life of the one is no less a mystery than that of the other. And in each case alike, the individual life depends upon the individual organism.

To say the thinking powers in man are proof that as a conscious entity he survives death, is as unphilosophical as to say that the thinking powers of the dog or horse are proof that as conscious animals they survive death. That they actually think is as patent to every observer, as that men think. And the only rational conclusion is, that in both cases the thinking is but the result of their particular organic structure. The perfection of their thinking is in perfect harmony with the perfection of the organic structure of the brain; which holds the same relation to the thinking in the brute that it does in the man.

And who shall say that the being who created the worlds which fill the universe, who gives life both vegetable and animal to matter, cannot go one step farther and give intelligence to matter, both mental and moral? Where is there any absurdity in this? The being who has so organized the brute as to think and remember, to exhibit anger and affection, can by a more perfect organism indefinitely increase these capabilities in man. Neither does the fact that these powers are the result of material organic structure—as immaterialists are so fond of asserting—make man nothing but a brute. The status of the two remains absolutely unchanged. The man remains a man and the brute a brute still. There still remains this wide difference between them, the organic perfection of the one is infinitely superior to that of the other.

Neither does the fact that all of man's powers are the result of material organism argue aught against his future immortality and greatness. The being who has thus formed him here, and endowed him with his present exalted powers, can in a future state, both infinitely increase these powers, and eternally perpetuate his existence. "In the resurrection" when "this mortal shall put on immortality," man we are assured, "shall be equal unto the angels," neither shall he "die any more." Thus by a reorganism of the material man, Christ promises a future glory to the redeemed, unecliped by the Platonic immaterialism either of ancient or modern times. This view has every fact both in reason and Scriptures to substantiate it. A man sees with his eyes, and hears with his ears, and thinks with his brain. As without eyes and ears he could neither see nor hear, so without a brain he could not think. This fact harmonizes with the declarations of Scripture, "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." (Ps. 146: 4.) But says the immaterialist, "It is no more the eye that sees, than it is the telescope that sees; there is back of these an independent immaterial personality which sees through them; and it is this personality back of the brain that thinks." But will these men tell us what it is back of the horse's eyes and brain, that sees and thinks? Nay; they much prefer to cry out "This is making man nothing but a brute!" Not at all. It is simply a demonstration that God in the creation of material beings, does actually give intelligence to matter. And if so much intelligence as is possessed by certain of the brute creation be the result of material organism, it is but reasonable that the higher intellectual powers of the man, are the result of a superior organic structure. The eyes and ears and brain, with other functions of the body, are but parts of the real man himself; they go to make up the one intelligent personality, that sees, hears and thinks by virtue of them, and without them would have no conscious existence whatever.

The argument for man's immateriality and consequent immortality founded upon the distinctions between mind and matter, must either be abandoned or the whole animal creation should be permitted to share its benefits; for it holds as good for the one as for the other. If the vast powers of the human mind are proof that it is immaterial and immortal; if as some claim the intellects of such men as Daniel Webster are a demonstration of this doctrine, what, let me inquire, becomes of the low Australian, little elevated above the brutes, or of the idiot who sinks below them in intelligence? Have they, and those of us less favored, no such immortality? Or are the immaterial and immortal entities themselves which are caged up in our bodies of an inferior grade? Rather, is not the conclusión a more rational one, that all such natural differences result from the material organism of the man, and the varied conformities of the brain?

I well remember theologians were horrified when the subject of phrenology was first being agitated in New England. They saw that its teachings led directly to materialism; if the one was proved, that the other must follow. The principles of phrenology have now obtained very general respect. And they form an unanswerable argument that mentality is the result of the organic structure of the brain, and not of a supposed immaterial entity located in it or back of it.

That severe injuries of the brain suspend all consciousness and mental action argues the same fact. A heavy blow upon the head and the person injured remains perfectly unconscious for hours and sometimes months. Any disease, as congestion or softening of the brain involves the mind to the same extent. Drowning persons soon become unconscious and remain so until resuscitated as somtimes it has been done hours after. In the mean time there was a suspension of life differing nothing from actual death. It was only by the means employed to get up the life action, that it was not death.

Now in all these cases—"the body is nothing but the clothing," only "the house the real man lives in"—why is it that all knowledge ceases soon as the "clothing" or "house" gets thus injured? If during all this the mind still retained its consciousness though unable to communicate, we then might infer that it is independent of the body as to its conscious existence and action But these facts demonstrate that the mind exists only in connection with the body as an integral part of the one inseparable man.

But further proof of this position is seen in the existing harmony between the mind and the bodily organism. Not only do the mental peculiarities of the sexes indisputably manifest this, but the physiognomy, the temperaments, the general conformation and very texture of the physical constitution of each individual invariably indicate the peculiar qualities of the mind —qualities that result from the material organism—and however modified by other influences, remain just as unchangable as the body itself.

It has been objected, if the mind or thinking powers result from material organism, that taking away any part of the body, would be taking away thus much of the mind; and as various parts or members of the body are taken away without impairing the mind, therefore the mind is not tne result of material organism. This objection though made by some in high positions has no weight whatever. The brain is the organ of thought, and what does not affect the brain will not affect the mind; amputation of the limbs would no more impair the powers of thought, than of sight. But it is stated that every portiion of the brain has been removed without impairing the powers of thought; thus demonstrating that thought is not a function of the brain, but independent of it. So have each of the eyes been put out without impairing the power of sight. Bvt this in both cases was done in different individuals. When immaterialists have succeeded in removing both lobes of the brain in the same individval, and he still continues to think, then they should have credit of fully demonstrating their doctrine of immaterialism.

The "Times and Seasons"—A New Thought.

The peculiar advantage found in studying isolated passages of scripture, without regard to context, is seldom more prominently set forth than in the following truthful example. We mention it because the manner is so orthodox, and because it develops such original conclusions on a verse whose meaning we thought had been fully fathomed by all commentators and Bible Students. We were studying the first chapter of Acts in our union Bible class, the Author of the book had been decided upon. The relation of the book to the preceding one was unfolded, how that "the former treatise" delivered to us not all that Jesus did and taught, but "all that Jesus began both to do and teach, until the day when he was taken up"—and we had listened again, through the word, to the disciples question "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? There was a pause in our progress as this question received the attention it deserved. The next verse was then assigned and an explanation asked for —"And he said unto them, it is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power." A little deliberation follows, and the answer was given— "The apostles had received their commission to preach the gospel to every creature and it was not thought best to make them acquainted with the changes in the seasons and weather lest they become too careful of personal comfort Besides, the means possessed in their day for knowing the kind of weather that was to prevail, and how soon a change in the seasons would occur, were not so great as we have. Our weather department keeps us posted from day to day through the papers of the changes that are to take place in the seasons and we are warned of approaching storms or sunshine —which knowledge was to be withheld from the disciples."

The next verse was immediately taken up, although there were some present who doubted the correctness of the foregoing explanation.

Shooting Preachers.

While reading the article on "Shot-Gun Preachers," I thought, where does the Bible speak of preachers shooting at all? and yet it is a common expression in these days. People talk about firing their "six pounders," and the like expressions.

Jesus said, "Follow me and I will make you FISHERS of men," instead of making them experts in shooting the gospel at folks. The object of the gospel ministry is to catch men, and not shoot them. But alas! how many that claim to be called of God to preach the gospel of the kingdom, have left their legitimate work, and are firing and cross-firing at each other. Can the Lord say, "Well done!" to such? So long as there are multitudes in the broad road to death, just so long is there work for the gospel ministry that have not forgotten their legitimate work of saving men. This firing and cross-firing is no part of the Christian warfare as described by Paul. It is a new invention of men in these last days, and often when men get their "big guns" in range and fire, they are apt to hurt worst at the breach.

We small fry had better let such weapons alone, and keep on "fishing" for men, and I think when the blessed Master comes, he will say, "Well done!"

NOTE: If the above remarks are intended as a rejoinder to Br. Cogswell's remarks, we think Br. Moore has entirely misapprehended him. If they are only suggested by an association of ideas, they are very just. We cordially endorse both articles. ED.

Victory.

Victory, yes victory. Time is rapidly carrying us forward to the conflict. Already the tocsin sounds, "To arms!" Already the distant notes of the trump of Armaggedon sounds upon our ears. Already the world stands awed by the notes, and men's hearts are failing them for fear of what is coming, yet in their blind infatuation, little dreaming that the day of Almighty is at hand. But thanks be to God, we are not in the dark. We hear the alarm, and know from whence the sound cometh. We are marching under the leadership of one who was never defeated; one who never knew retreat. He still beckons us onward. He has told us of these times beforehand; therefore we need not fear. Upon his banner is written Victory! Victory over sin; victory over Satan; victory over the world; victory over the grave; victory over death; victory forever. Amen. 'Tis under his banner, under the guidance of his eye, that we enter the field of Armaggedon. Although Gog and Magog enter the conflict, we need fear no evil. Jesus has met them before.

Then while some cry "Peace and safety!" let us gird on the helmet of war—war for Jesus, war for the right. We shall fear no evil, but soon shout victory over the fiery deluge, victory over death, hell, and the grave.

Popular Theology.

Or a few thoughts on Superstition, Sectarianism, Tradition, Bigotry, and Popular Theology

Come, let us talk about Tradition,
And its twin sisters, Superstition,
Sectarianism and Bigotry,
And Popular Theology:
How they enslave and chain mankind
And thus corrupt the human mind.
My mind was once long led astray
By teachers that knew not the way,
Who said that all mankind possessed
Immortal souls within their breasts,
And taught that old Satanic lie,
That is, "Thou shalt NOT surely die!"
Since then I've searched the Bible through,
And find such theories untrue.
Immortality is gained by seeking—
'Tis so I find the Bible speaking.
And God alone, and only he,
Possesses immortality. (1 Tim. 6:16.)
All men are mortal in this life,
Subject to pain, and death, and strife,
To sickness, sorrow, grief and woe,
Which follow mortals here below.
Men are corruptible, and must Return back to their mother dust,
Unconscious sleep beneath the ground
Until the last loud trumpet's sound.
Then all the dead will rise again,
Some filled with glory, some with pain.
The righteous will salvation share,
And meet their Savior in the air,
The wicked filled with sad distress
Will share the [illegible] Second Death,
And then unconscious will remain
And lose that life the righteous gain.
Such is the reward from the Lord
Who'll give to all their due reward.
  King Solomon, the wisest man,
Has given us to understand
That mortal men, to say the least,
Came from the dust as did the beasts.
And have, said he, only one breath,
[illegible] also in death.
This fact he further does discover—
That, "as one dieth so dies the other."
No more preeminence he gives
To man than to the beast that lives,
All share alike the earth's common curse,
Die, and return to that same dust.
God breathed the breath of life in all
His creatures on this earthly ball,
And when they've run their race they die
And in the ground unconscious lie.
But mortal man shall rise again,
While beasts shall never more be seen.
Christians, corruptible will be 'Till clothed in immortality. (1 Cor. 15.)
When they are raised this boon is given
To fit them for new earth and heaven,
And in the resurrection morn
They'll immortality put on.
In serving God they'll be employed
While wicked men will be destroyed.
Christ's kingdom none can enter in
Except they have been "born again,"
Such is the Scripture as it reads,
Though not according to some creeds!
  Tradition says (though strange to tell)
That God has made an endless hell,
Where sinners enter when they die
In sulphurous liquid flames to fry!
And there remain forever burning—
From whose hot flames there's no returning!
But this is all a heathen libel
Not to be found within the Bible,
For God was never yet so cruel
To make a hell and men for fuel.
If this was so, the God above
Could not be called a God of love.
Now all such errors I'll avoid,
For sin and sinners shall be destroyed;
And, says the Bible, on its pages,
Of death, this is the sinner's wages.
When in that second death they launch
They'll be "burned up, both root and branch,"
And consequently then must be
Unconscious, dead, eternally!
  Tradition says when Christians die
They go to heaven above the sky!
And there to dwell in pure perfection—
If so, what needs a resurrection?
If saints up there do nothing lack 'Twould seem unwise to bring them back
To put on that old corpse of earth,
And change them for no better birth.
The Bible says in every section
That saints do sleep till th' resurrection,
Then rise to meet their loving Lord,
And then receive their due reward.
New earth and heaven then enter in
Free from all sickness, death and sin.
Some teach that sinners too must come
From hell to hear their dreadful doom,
And put on flesh and bones once more,
And then go back where they were before;
Though they were once judged when they died,
Must rise again, again to be tried!
Guilty or not, 'tis just the same,
They must go back from whence they came,
Now what is gained by such a plan?
No benefit to God or man!
But what says Paul of wicked men
Who died in wickedness and sin?
To the day of judgment they're reserved
To meet the punishment deserved,
Sent from the presence of the Lord,
Destruction is their sure reward.
Go search the Bible through with care
You'll find no endless torment there,
Nor chastisement that's not designed
To benefit the human kind.
If wilful sinners will not obey
While in their own probation day,
The second death they can't avoid,
But must forever be destroyed.
This proves the Bible true, you see:
It says, "The wicked shall not be!"
Search heaven, earth, hell, throughout, all round,
Man's being and place cannot be found,
For why should God, so just and good,
Burn mortal men as we burn wood?
Yet not consumed as chaff in fire,
But always burning and not expire!
  Tradition in a wild surmise,
Tells of a death that never dies!
No common sense such jargon gives—
As well talk of life that never lives,
Life is life, and death is death;
No living when God stops our breath.
When in the grave our brains do rot,
We know no more—all things forgot.
Some people say that Christ won't come
Till full a thousand years have run
Their annual rounds; so "eat and drink,"
And no more on the subject think.
But don't we hear the Bible say
That men must always watch and pray;
Be ever looking for him steady,
That when he comes they may be ready?
But let them scoff, their time is short;
Soon Christ will come and end their sport;
And from his presence they'll be hurled,
And left to burn up with the world.
  Some talk of never-dying souls;
But God who everything beholds,
On oath declares (who cannot lie)
"The soul that sins shall surely die."
Some say dead folks are 'round us still,
And often influence our will,
And while their forms are lifeless, dead,
Their spirits hover 'round our bed,
And see and know our thoughts, and even
Report our private deeds in heaven.
Lord save us from such ghosts as those:
I want no ghosts round me unclothed—
Without a body or pleasant features,
And dressed like other human creatures.
Such doctrines are from Satan's den,
Although believed by some good men.
  Now who can estimate the ills
Caused by sectarian stubborn wills?
The base effects of selfish sects—
What one believes, 'tother rejects,
So go to war one with another,
Father against son, and son against brother,
One says you're wrong; one says I'm right;
A sharp contest, and then a fight,
Like bull dogs when their ears are rubbed,
Go at each other with pious clubs;
And all to gain their selfish cause,
Regardless of God's sovereign laws.
Christians should always love each other,
And use that mild term, sister, brother.
Not say, as did that Pharisee—
"Stand by thyself—come not near me!"
Why should the name of sect divide
Men claiming to be on Christ's side;
And spurn all those that don't subscribe
To their own creed and selfish tribe.
Such feelings then ought not to be.
Christians should live in harmony.
Why then blame infidels for saying
"There is no use in preaching, praying,
While Christians against each other fight,
And say none but themselves are right."
If infidels we would convince,
Set not the Bible, against common sense.
This to their minds would bring conviction
And stop their cry about contradiction.
"God is love," the Bible says,
And just, yet merciful always;
And sent his Son to die for all
Who lost his image by the fall,
Though God, the just and good will sever,
His "anger will not last forever."
Neither will he always wrathful be,
Nor torment men eternally;
But make an end of sin and woe,
And thus to all his mercy show.
While saints his presence will enjoy,
Death and hell he will destroy,
Restore old Paradise again,
In which there'll be no death or sin.

Now, Christian friends, let's all agree
To seek for immortality.
Cast superstition all aside
And take the Bible for our guide.
Had we done this in years gone by,
And heeded not the serpent's lie;
Have lived in love, had but one name,
Which leads my mind now to exclaim—
O human creeds! what have you done?
Made tears and blood like rivers run;
And still art raging through the earth
To every evil giving birth
Making disturbances in church;
Forbidding thinking men to "search
The Scriptures," as God requires,
And kindling hate, and hellish fires.

And now I'll close my lengthy scroll,
Thus having given a hint to all
To take the Bible as it reads,
And throw away their human creeds.

Looking Unto Jesus.

Jesus and the salvation in him should ever constitute the theme of the preacher, and the contemplation of the Christian.

No discourse should ever be preached without Jesus being in it, and its Alpha and Omega. As all great high-ways and railroads lead to some great commercial center, so should all religious discourses converge in Christ Jesus our Lord. The more we look unto him and think upon his name, the more shall we love him, the better shall we serve him, and the more sanctified and the nearer we shall be like him, morally and spiritually. The less we look unto him, and contemplate him, the less we shall regard and esteem him; and the more we shall look unto and love the creature, rather than the Creator, who is blessed forevermore.

1. There is implied in "looking unto Jesus," faith in him; for to our natural vision he is unseen. Moses endured, as seeing him who is invisible. (Heb. 11: 27.) He saw him by faith. We are to believe on Jesus as he says: "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." (John 14: 1.) And says Peter: "Whom having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." (1 Pet. 1: 8.) Job saw him as a present and coming Redeemer; "I know that my Redeemer liveth and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth." (Job. 19: 25.) So did Paul: "For I know whom I have believed and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which have committed unto him against that day." (2 Tim. 1: 12.) And said the proto-martyr Stephen, "being full of the Holy Ghost," as he "looked steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God and Jesus standing on the right hand of God"—"Behold I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God." (Acts 7: 55, 56.) This was the rapturous vision of faith given the faithful martyr in his dying hour.

2. It implies a recognition of Jesus as the only begotten Son of God Jesus himself says: "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." (John 3: 16.) We are to apprehend him as the "Son of God" in a far higher, nobler and diviner sense than any mere man or creature in the universe. Jesus is the "Son of God" in his divine nature, as he is "Son of man" in his human nature. He has a two-fold nature, and is the God—man—Emmanuel. In his divine nature he is of the essential essence of his Father, "and came out from him," and "came forth from God." In his human nature "he was made of a woman;" and hence, in his double nature, he is the Son of God,—the Son of man. "Great is the mystery of godliness; God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory." We are to honor him therefore, even as we honor the Father; not as Mr. Jesus Christ, but as Lord and Master. We do not apprehend him at all as the Scriptures testify of him, unless we contemplate him as thus revealed—"the only begotten Son of God."

3. "Looking unto Jesus," implies a recognition of Jesus of Nazareth as this Divine personage. Ever since the fall of man a Divine Redeemer was promised, and has been looked for through the ages. The original promise gave this hope to the world, and "The Coming One" became "The Desire of all nations." Abel saw and testified through his sacrificial offerings, "The Lamb of God," and coming Avenger and Redeemer. He was Abraham's joy—Moses' prophet—Job's Redeemer—Isaiah's King of Glory—David's Lord, and Daniel's Prince. The angel Gabriel reveals the time of his first advent (Dan. 9 ch.) and appears to the Virgin Mary with the announcement: "Hail, thou that art highly favored, the Lord is with thee.... Behold, thou shalt bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus....He shall be called "The Son of the Highest." (Luke 1: 28–32.) "The angel of the Lord afterwards announces his birth, and angelic hosts praise God saying: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." (Luke 2 ch.) Simeon, who had it revealed unto him by the Holy Spirit, that he should not see death before he had seen the Lord's Christ, saw him and "took the babe up in his arms, and blessed God," ready then to depart in peace. John the Baptist, the Lord's messenger, affirmed and bore record that this personage, whom he afterwards baptised, was the Son of God. The Father, by the gift of the Holy Spirit without measure upon him, and by audible voice declared, "This is my beloved Son;" and the works and ministry of Jesus of Nazareth attest and bear witness to the truth. We are therefore shut up to the fact that Jesus of Nazareth is the Son of God. The Messiah, Savior and Lord. And we are to look to none other name "whereby we must be saved," since he is declared to be "the Son of God, with power according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." (Rom. 1: 4.)

4. It is to behold him as revealed in the Scriptures. He is there (2 Cor. 3: 18), mirrored to our view, 1. As "The Babe of Bethlehem," adored by angels and worshiped by the shepherds and Eastern Magi. 2. As a wonderful child of twelve years reasoning with the learned scribes in the temple, to their astonishment. 3. As a distinguished personage, baptised by John, to whom this greatest of prophets said: "I have need to be baptised of thee;" and at whose baptism the Holy Spirit descended upon him in visible manifestation. 4. The Victor of the Tempter in a terrible encounter. 5. The Master of all teachers, and the greatest of all preachers, "who spake as never man spake," and with words of wisdom which have reformed men and nations, and will determine the human destiny of the race at the Judgment Bar. 6. The Emmanuel; God with men, performing the wonders of Deity, and exhibiting the compassion and benevolence of God. 7. The "Suffering Lamb of God" who beareth away the sin of the world, and typified by all the bloody sacrifices from the beginning of the world. The bleeding victim of the cross, lifted up as was the serpent in the wilderness. (John 3: 14, 15) and dying "a curse" for us. 8. The Conqueror of death and the grave, bearing away the keys, and the spoils of the last enemy, in the last day, when he comes the "Resurrection and the Life." 9. The ascended Lord. 10. The accepted Mediator, as the Father said: "Sit thou at my right hand;" and who is "able to save to the uttermost all who will come unto him. 11. The coming righteous Judge of the world, who will reward every man according to his deeds. And 12, The everlasting King of the New World, who is to reign in bliss and righteousness with his people in immortal glories unfading. Thus are we to look unto him as the Author and the Finisher of our faith; and as our Wisdom, Righteousness, Sanctification and Redemption.

5. Finally, it implies patterning after him as our great example. He came to reveal the Father unto us, and how we should live to please him. As missionaries go into heathen lands, and by precept and example endeavor to elevate the people from their low state of ignorance, and degradation, and vices—so did Jesus come, the great Missionary into this world of sin, to teach by precept and example, and to lift men up to habits of purity, holiness, wisdom and understandiag, that we may dwell forevermore in his presence and glory.

He set us an example of purity, virtue and holiness we are to imitate and follow. "In him was no sin." He was pure and spotless. And "the pure in heart shall see God." "Without holiness shall no man see the Lord."

He set us an example of meekness and humility. Oh how meek—with unruffled passions! Oh how humble—without pride or ostentation! He says: "Come, learn of me, for I am meek and lowly."

He set us an example of patience. All the powers of darkness were arrayed against him. The malice and hate of the world, and he was finally numbered with the transgressors, and hung crucified on the cross; though innocent and undeserving. O, what patient endurance under all insult, malice, and furious passions of men. "When reviled, he reviled not; when persecuted, he threatened not:" but prayed for his enemies, even for his murderers, in the extreme agony of his sufferings. Rollin mentions in ancient history one "Bomilcar, a Carthaginian general, first its benefactor, afterward a tyrant in its distress, who after cutting the throats of several of its citizens—under a proclamation of general pardon for him and his accomplices, surrendered and gave up their arms. But the Carthaginians, without regarding their oath, condemned him to death and fastened him to a cross, where he suffered the most excruciating torments. From the cross, as from a rostrum, he harangued the people, and thought himself justly entitled to reproach them for their injustice, their ingratitude and perfidy. And he expired on the cross while uttering these reproaches.' But how different was the death of our dear Redeemer, though most unjustly condemned and executed.

In 1797, La Reveillere Lapeaux, one of the five members of the French Directory, had just read before the Institute a paper on Theophilanthropy as they called it, and on the forms that would best suit the new worship which was to be set up. He asked Talleyrand what he thought of the plan. "All I can say is that Jesus Christ died and rose again to set up his religion, and I should advise you to try and do the same, if you mean your Theophilanthropy to succeed." This incident is given us by M. Guizot.

A missionary to Central India, stated that when he talked to those natives about Jesus and his wonderful miracles in proof of his Messiahship, and of his being the only Savior of men, they remarked that their Brahmah could do all these wonders; and when among the miracles of Christ they alluded to the feeding of the five thousand with the five loaves etc., they replied, "Brahmah has made great mountains of bread." So that there was nothing in the miracles of Christ but what had been matched by Brahmah. But when he told them that Jesus died and rose again from the dead, this was a matchless wonder, that was beyond the power of any God they had heard of. And it is this fact which makes the religion of Jesus and Christianity to tower above all the religions of the world. That Jesus who died for man, rose again from the dead and is alive and carries forward the work of redemption to its finishing. When all religions and superstitions are buried in the oblivion of the passing ages, the effects and results of the gospel of Christ will live on through the revolving cycles of eternity—"world without end!" Therefore:

> "Should all the schemes that men devise
>   Assault my faith with treacherous art,
> I'd count them vanity and lies,
>   And bind the gospel to my heart."

THE VIRTUE OF LOOKING UNTO JESUS.

1. We shall the better apprehend him as he is revealed in the Scriptures, and this is most essential to a true and living and saving faith in him.

2. He will become more and more precious unto us, endeared by the matchless beauty and perfection of his character, and the transcendant works of his grace. Familiarity breeds disgust when there is moral delinquency, and gross and unmannerly habits. But in Jesus, where there is every virtue in its highest perfection, familiarity endears him to the believer, and he becomes the one altogether lovely. Unto you who believe, he is precious.

3. By looking unto Jesus we shall become transformed into his glorious image. Mankind is assimilated to the society with which they associate Evil communications corrupt good manners. To be much in the society of evil doers will make one to become degenerate and corrupt as they. To make choice of the society of the good and virtuous, the intelligent and those of cultivated tastes and habits, will be productive of good to all who will improve the advantage. So communion with Jesus will make us to partake of his spirit and of his character. We all, with open face, behold as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, even as by the spirit of the Lord. (2 Cor. 3: 18.) And the perfecting glories to be attained at his appearing and kingdom are both the moral and the physical likeness to Jesus. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." And this is the sanctifying and purifying hope. "Every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." (1 John 3: 2, 3.) And says Paul: "Our conversation is in heaven; from whence we also look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself. (Phil. 3: 20, 21.)

Let us look unto Jesus by faith, and endure as seeing him who is invisible, until he shall come in his glory, to the admiration and everlasting glory of his people, and their eternal redemption from sin, sorrow, death and the grave. Amen. O. R. FASSETT.

That "Machine."

The story has gone the rounds of the papers and has been warmly applauded by some as expressing their sentiments. A certain church purchased an organ. After its purchase a deacon who had opposed buying it was requested by the minister to lead in prayer who said, "Call on the machine. If it can sing God's praises, it can do the praying."

I approve of this reply and I hope all who are waiting for Jesus do the same. For approving it I offer the following reasons: Prayer and praises are so similar in words and sentiment that you cannot separate them. Let me specify.

"Help me to watch and pray,
And on thyself rely."

Again:

"Oh! Come, come away,
My Savior in thy glory;
Thy kingdom come, thy will be done,
Oh! come, come away."

I think that all can see by these examples that there is a blending of sentiment and language inseparably connected in praising and in prayer "Hallowed be thy name," is an expression of praise. Thy kingdom come, thy will be done," is prayer. I am aware that the scriptures are appealed to as supporting the use of instrumental music in the service of the sanctuary by those who are in favor of such use. I propose to examine this specious claim by the light of God's word." To the law and to the testimony. If they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them. (Is. 8: 20.) "If any speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." (1 Pet. 4: 11.) Here I shall take my stand and abide the issue.

The first mention of sacred song is "when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." (Job 38: 7). This was on a very special occasion, when the earth wheeled into the line of order: but no musical instrument. Mention is made of making instruments of music in Gen. 4: 21. But they exclusively belonged to the Cain family. It strikes me, in reading the history, that the Seth family (called the sons of God) did not favor the music arrangement. However, in process of time they became more conservative. Perhaps they heard some of the ladies of the Cain family play on the organ: at least they "saw they were fair and took them wives of all which they chose." (Gen. 6: 2.) It is supposable that the sons of Seth concluded they had bettered themselves and improved the race, by throwing off their exclusiveness; for there were born unto them children "that were mighty men, which were of old men of renown." (v. 4) But God saw a bad tendency, a downward grade. Their choice proved their ruin, the earth became corrupt. Violence filled it. But in this state of society God called Noah and instructed him how to build the ark, and what to stow away in it: But he never mentions fiddle, timbrel, harp or organ; from which we infer two things: (1) God did not approve of them. (2) Noah had not been inducted into that faith. His family constituted the visible church of God, and if ever the church needed an organ it was then. Look at them for the space of five months confined to a small apartment, surrounded by an ocean of water that had no shore, sailing about without compass or chart. Now if, as some say, the organ forms a nucleus around which all the voices can be collected and forms a body to the singing, Noah and his family needed it. Why not? There were plenty to be had that soon would be sunk in the deep? But no. God destroyed that race with all their fiddles, timbrels, harps and organs. Therefore I affirm that for 1656 years of man's history God did not approve of music in his worship.

Next we find it in the families of the rich: "They send forth their little ones like a flock, and their children dance. They take the timbrel and harp, and rejoice at the sound of the organ. They spend their days in wealth, (margin mirth.)....Therefore they say unto God: depart from us, we desire not the knowledge of thy ways. What is the Almighty, that we should serve him, and what profit should we have if we pray unto him." (Job 21: 11-15.) Here is incontestable proof that Job discarded music by instrumental sounds, and did not have it in his house.

We read of timbrels being used by Miriam, Moses' sister. (Ex. 15: 20, 21.) Moses and the men of Israel commenced to sing God's praises, who had delivered them. (Ex. 15: 1-14.) But not a word about timbrels or harps or organs. It begins by saying—"Then sang Moses and the children of Israel this song." It was as easy to mention the timbrel in this narrative as in that of his sister and her companions in the dance. There are three things to be considered and understood before we attempt to bring it as an argument in favor of the use of music in the house of God.

(1) The law by which the worship of God was regulated had not been delivered to them. (2) Moses and the children of Israel used none. (3) They had just escaped from bondage and saw the destruction of their enemies, which gave them good evidence they would soon reach the promised land: so, filled with joy, it is not surprising that on hearing of Moses and the men of Israel lift their voice in praise to God for deliverance, that the women of Israel should grasp the timbrel and go forth in the dance. All who bring this circumstance as proof for music are bound (if consistent) to take the dancing part, too, and turn Shakers at once—minus "Mother Ann."

Next in order is David, who is said to command its use in his Psalm.

(1) Are you sure that David composed the psalms alluded to. Look again. (2) Had not God given them a law (by Moses) long before David's day, which gave them a perfect knowledge of each part of his service. But where do you find timbrel or harp or organ mentioned in the five books he wrote in the service of the sanctuary? Echo answers where? This fact ought to convince us that up to the giving of the law God never sanctioned it. I will here insert what Amos says touching this point: "That chant to the sound of the viol, and invent to themselves instruments of music like David." (ch. 6: 5.) But it will be said David and Solomon used them. Very true. So they practised polygamy. Solomon had 1,000 wives. Shall we argue from that case that we have the same liberty? God forbid. Yet if we plead for music by their examples, to be consistent we ought to move to Salt Lake.

The fact is, the whole nation of Jews had departed from God some time before David's day, by asking a king. (1 Sam. 8: 1-9.) God gave them a king, but under a protest. Saul failed. David prospered. God gave him great promises. Solomon took the throne at its zenith of glory. But in his day it began to wane, and at its close the people demanded retrenchment. This was refused, a division took place, and bitter strife was almost continuous until Christ came.

P. W. HOUGH.

The Work of the Spirit.

Knowing the difference of opinion relative to the work of the Holy Spirit, I deem it not amiss to raise the question—"What is truth" in relation to the spirit's offices and work? God is a Person and Christ is the express image of that Person. God the Father, Christ the Son. The holy Spirit is called "the spirit of God" also "the spirit of Christ." In the giving of God's will to men it served as the dispenser of truth. After the advent of Jesus, and the fulfillment of his ministry and the work of the apostles, it served no longer in that capacity, but rather as a guide into the truth already made known. It was to fill a place it never had filled before. Said Jesus: "When he, the Spirit of truth is come he shall guide you into all truth." But shall its influence be felt by any besides the apostles? The Bible answers this question. Paul says in the Ephesians to the church: Grieve not the holy Spirit of God whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."

This was said to them as a church, hence while that church lasted the promise of the Spirit to them and its seal upon them held good.

In the first chapter (v. 13, 14) of his Epistle to that church he says: "In whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession." Here the Apostle includes himself in the statement made to that church.

The Epistles are received as canonical, hence applicable and binding in their relation to us. Then the holy Spirit is the seal of the servants of God today, as much as it was eighteen hundred years ago, and will remain so until the day of redemption. The work of the Spirit in its relation to the church is that of a comporter It is also sent out to convince the world [worldly men] of sin, (Jno.16:8,9.) Now since the Sbirit of God is here doing this work, it is not rebuired that we should make men know that they are sinners, only as we are workers together with God.

It is the applying power of the spirit that makes the truth sharper than any two edged sword, piercing all the avenues of life.

But in what condition do believers receive the Spirit, before or after baptism? All do not receive the comforting influence of the Spirit in the same state. I apprehend the influence of the Spirit affects us in proportion to the light we have. One person may be well versed in Scripture and understand all that is required of him, and feel that obedience is the test to which he is put. Such an one will find the comforter only in obedience. Others, like Cornelius of Cesarea, not knowing all, but willing to obey, have the Spirit poured out upon them before they are immersed. But when light shines on our pathway, as on that of Cornelius, we immediately desire to obey. Nor can we retain the Spirit if we persist in the opposition to the truth we sometimes see manifested. God makes his own tests, and gives his Spirit to whom he will. Let us all see that the Spirit of God witnesses with our spirit that we are his children.

The Penalties of Omniscience.

Unquestionably, human life becomes more exciting every year. Each man is affected by a wider range of events than was formerly possible or even conceivable. In the good old times the farmer was content to know the price of grain in the nearest market. town. Now he will not load his wagon till he has heard the quotations at Chicago and New York. The trade of our fathers was affected by peace or war in Europe as much as ours is now, but the news of peace or war came to them after intervals of weeks, and in the meantime they jogged along comfortably. For us the intelligence follows instantly upon the event, and may in a few hours change every business expectation. The possibilities of each day keep our faculties strained to the utmost tension, and repose is impossible. We are approximating omniscience, and are paying its costly penalties.

What is to be the outcome of the stretching of telegraph wires over the globe, no one can foretell. All the sorrow and joy, suffering and triumph of the world are spread before us every morning. A shriek of pain as far off as the antipodes is heard directly, and appeals to us for sympathy. As long as these impressions were made upon us in slow succession, they were endurable; but now they come pell mell and we are astonished to find what a world we live in. Dionysius in his cave contrived an ear that reported to him all the babble of his capital; but we have contrived one that carries to the brain all the sounds of all the voices on earth. Modern life becomes a perpetual distraction, and we school ourselves to callousness as some relief for our jaded sensibility. That the modern man is nervous is not wonderful; if he does not become all nerve, it will be a miracle.

Busy men more and more seek relief by getting out of reach of the telegraph and its eternal click. They weary of so much brain stimulation. But like a universal detective it is forever at their heels, calling on them to meet the emergencies of a world that changes its face every five minutes. What we shall come to there is no telling; one thing is certain, we shall find omniscience a heavy burden. Many will look back with sadness to the primitive ages, when limited knowledge made some sense of quietude possible for mankind.—Methodist.

From South America.

Br. Himes: Having $3 in greenbacks, I sent them inclosed in a letter, last November, by the E. K. Brown, Capt. Cook, to pay my subscription for the TIMES, and to purchase some books. The vessel was lost, and the captain died of fatigue on his way to Key West. I have by this (shall I call it accident?) been one of the behindhand subscribers to the TIMES.

By way of introduction, I would inform you and the brethren that I had the evidence of the Holy Spirit almost as soon as I can remember. I grieved him away many times, till in the years 1843 and 1844 I became a very anxious seeker of salvation. Whilst in this state of anxiety and sometimes bordering on despair, I heard Br. Cook lecture on the types, at Oberlin, Ohio, in October 1844. In consequence of that lecture a flood of light illuminated me on the doctrine of justification by faith. I believed and was justified, and was baptised by Br. Cook. The next year I was recommended by the brethren of the Laight St. Church in New York to enter the ministry and come here to preach the gospel, which I did. Many are now sleeping in Jesus, as the result of my ministry, and a hundred and fifty are now watching for the return of Christ our Life. The return of Christ and the resurrection, with justification faith in Christ's attonement, and sanctification through loving because we were first beloved, and inspiration of the given Holy Spirit, are the doctrines, I have preached. I have experienced strength and consolation amid severe conflict, trials, weaknesses, temptations, persecutions, thorns in the flesh buffeting me, and at one time some relaxations of my hold on Christ, and cooling of my first love, from the doctrines I have successfully preached, and relied on myself.

On the 16th, on entering my 50th year, after 27 years in the ministry, I look back on my past life. What folly! what mistakes! what disappointments! what need of repentance! how much better I could have acted with the light, the experience, and the sanctification I have attained to now! But I thank God, first, whereas I was blind, now I see. Second: whereas once I was a babe in Christ, now I am nearer the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: and oh! I have been used as the mouthpiece of my Lord to bring the news of the resurrection to eternal life—that the saints shall possess the kingdom, through our only priest, and the gifts he has offered to God for us.

It may perhaps be of interest to relate two narrow escapes, attributed to the providence of God, in my early life. First, during my apprenticeship on a London ship. Not having seen my mother for a long time, and arriving at Kingston, Jamaica, where she was at the time, I asked the mate leave to go and see her. He refused. I thought it cruel, and desertd that night in consequence. The four apprentices, of which I was one, were the crew of a very black boat called the Snow Ball, which brought sugars from a dangerous point called Jack's Bay. The mate went when the sea was rough. On the arrival of the ship on the north side, the boat went to Jack's Bay, with the mate in her, and a man to take my place. The boat swamped and all were drowned. My substitute in the boat was drowned instead of me. My Lord and Master, my substitute, was spit on, made sport of, and killed for me, and that I might have eternal life.

The second: When a chief officer of a large full rigged brig out of New York, I arrived at San Juan del Norte, Nicaragua. While the men were employed putting in the stanchions for the awnings, a school of very large sharks came along side. It was proverbial at San Juan that no person or animal got into the water but was instantly cut or swallowed by sharks or alligators. I held one of the stanchions in order to lean over to have a good view of the sharks. The upper staple of the same stanchion I held was out, consequently I fell overboard in the midst of the sharks. The splash frightened them away, a rope was given me and I was hauled some two feet from the surface, when the sharks returned. Whilst I was being hauled up, as my feet and legs remained in the water, I experienced most dreadful sensations, expecting evey moment to feel a shark's terrible bite.

Love to all the brethren, requesting an interest in their prayers.

That "Fellow-Servant."

"I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus." (Rev. 19: 10.)

The ambiguity of the English word "of" in this sentence has often led readers to imagine that the speaking angel announces himself to be "one of" the human brethren of John, that is, a glorified saint from earth; and this passage (with the parallel words in 22: 9) is actually quoted, sometimes, to prove that the angels are but deceased men, and that deceased saints are employed earthly missions. But a reference to the original text (a method fatal to many fancies) shows that in the phrase "thy fellow servant," the word "thy" is literally "of thee" and is but the first of two genitives to which 'fellow-servant" stands related; so that the angel said: "I am a fellow-servant of thee and thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus." That is, he merely affirms that he, though an angel, was but a servant of God, like John and the spiritual brethren of John. He was but the fellow-servant of all who loved and served God. And so, in the twenty-second chapter, he similarly says: "I am a fellow-servant of thee and thy brethren, the prophets, and those who keep the sayings of this book." Those who understand the expression, "and of thy brethren" to mean "and am one of thy brethren," forget that the word "fellow" in English always takes the preposition "of," and that our translators meant, "I am thy fellow-servant, and the fellow-servant of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus." Proof texts, especially of new doctrines, require careful examination.—Advance.

Abram's 'Deep Sleep.'

"And when the sun was going down, a deep sleep fell upon Abram; and, lo, a horror of great darkness fell upon him."

Unless this deep sleep and horror of darknes, with the prophecy following, was intended to answer Abram's question, we know not its significancy. Abram certainly understood by it that not during his natural life was he to inherit the land, but that he must go down into the grave, and inherit it with the promised Seed, with whom he had been made joint heir, and this was to him the promise of a resurrection from the dead by the power of God, to an immortal glorious life and reign with Christ and his spiritual seed upon the promised land. All this was foreshadowed by Abram's being laid powerless in a deep sleep—as it were, the sleep of death—and the horror of great darkness as of the grave, from which he was recalled again to the light of day.—J. R. Graves.

WE sometimes receive reports of the same meeting, especially of discussions, from two, three, or even four different pens. Obviously one report is enough; and hereafter we shall make it a rule to give that which comes first to hand, and dispense with the rest, unless the occasion is one of extraordinary interest.

"TATTLING and embroidery are poor diet for an immortal soul." So says C. H. Fowler. We believe him. A mortal soul would starve on such food as that. More than that no soul can feed on tattling and be immortal. It is a rank poison, and the death of all who indulge in it.

A WRITER in the Rock says the "Sunday idols" of Protestantism are, "the favorite minister, the wealthy congregation, and the hot dinner." This is a new way of putting Paul's remarks concerning "itching ears," substitution of gain for godliness, and setting up an idol in the belly. And there is no disputing the charge—Christendom is full of idolaters, with all sorts of idols.

WE have cheering letters from the burned district in Eastern Michigan. Not financially cheering—many lost their all, and write to say that they are unable to pay for the TIMES now, and yet feel unwilling to give it up. We have nearly one hundred of this class on our free list for this year. And none are more welcome to the paper than they. And we don't call it free list, either—we expect some one will be stirred up to pay the Association the expense of furnishing a free gospel to these dear ones tried as by fire.

THE following did not appear at Antioch during the time of the Apostles, nor at Jerusalem while James was elder of the church there; but was published in a Chicago daily paper a short time since:

"Slip-renting and coffee at the Union Park Congregational church this Monday evening, at 7:30 o'clock. A lively time is expected."

—"Pew-rents, coffee," and "a lively time" are a curious performance in a Christian church.

THE New York Tribune says the Advent faith, "which, if it were well founded, would be of unspeakable consequence to the whole population of the globe, is only harbored by a small and numerically insignificant sect," which, being interpreted, means—"Only a few of them, consequently they are wrong, their position absurd." At best this is a doubtful conclusion from still more doubtful premises. There was a sect in Judea some thing less than two thousand years since whose principles were "of unspeakable consequence," to the whole nation of the Jews, to say the least: but the sect was "small and numerically insignificant." Were they therefore wrong, and is Christianity, as a consequence, a false system? If Adventists are wrong, the error is not proved by the fact that they are fewer in numbers than some other peoples.

IN a late missionary appeal the soul is thus described:

"This toiling, untiring, unresting something within, this quenchless spark of the eternal flame, this fluttering pulse of the great eternal flame, this fluttering pulse of the great heart of all life and power, this invisible, inapproachable, infinite something within, can be satisfied with nothing less than God."

—This is clear: the soul is "infinite," hence a part of God. Multitudes of souls will be lost: hence just so man[illegible] of Deity are doomed to perdition. [illegible] the other hand the passage is very obscure: "something within" is anything but definite. And we would like to know in what sense it is "inapproachable." And if it is "untiring," why did Jesus talk of "rest for the soul." Never was such incongruity of ideas and terms as those immaterialism indulges in talking of the soul.

IN St. Paul's Cathedral, on Easter Sunday, Rev. Daniel Moore preached upon the resurrection. He defended the resurrection of the body, and among other sound ideas advanced the following:

We have instincts within us that tell us that death is a retributive thing, a diversion from the first intendment of our creation; that man has done something to make it necessary, but that originally he was not made to die. What we call death natural it has been well said should rather be called death unnatural—death being the reversal of the true law of our being. Hence in explaining why men are afraid of death we say it is not nature trembling at what she may have to suffer so much as conscience affrighted at the penalties it feels to deserve. We have the sentence of death in ourselves—that is of death both as an effect and a punishment of voluntary transgression. It is as if the law were written in our hearts, "By one man sin entered into the world and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men for that all have sinned."

—This is good: but never was the marrow and juice more completely expressed from a passage of Scripture than in the following exegesis:

"O grave, where is thy victory!" (2) And then to present our subject under one other aspect. If the grave can claim no victory at our entrance upon its confines, can exercise no lordship over us while we sojourn in its dominions, how is it made to lose its last semblance of triumph when it is obliged to become the passage gate by means of which we pass out into realms of glory and blessedness, and light and love?

—As much as to say—The passage is a mere rhetorical flourish. All the victory the grave ever has is a mere "semblance." One would think the self-contradictions into which immaterialists always fall when they attempt to preach the Bible doctrine of the resurrection must tell them that something in their system was out of gear—a correct theory should work more smoothly.

ENCOURAGEMENT.

We have made no appeal for aid to meet the expenses of our removal to Chicago, because we had no wish to burden the cause, and we also had confidence that those brethren and sisters who had pledged from five to one hundred dollars each in event of the office going to Chicago, would promptly redeem those pledges, and thus the ordinary revenues of the Association would not be diverted from their channel. Some of those who gave such pledges have redeemed them promptly. Others we have not yet heard from. Still others who made no pledges have sent in donations, so that our inconvenience from the extra expenditures incident to this most desirable change of location has not been serious. As we remarked, our friends have been thoughtful. Some have acted individually, and others are acting in their church relations. Such spontaneous and effective sympathy is the best encouragement we could ask. We are encouraged. God has a great work for his people in this great Interior of the United States, as well as elsewhere. Let us one and all rise to a level with our responsibilities.

Among other cheering letters, we have been especially encouraged by the following, from the pastor of the Genoa (Ill.) church:

OUR ASSOCIATION.

It is often remarked that no one knows how to value anything until they are once deprived of it. We have been led of late to think that this proverb is more than half true. For the delay in the weekly issues of our paper, the TIMES, as indicated in the words of brethren, and the feelings of my own heart, was no small matter. For when its weekly visits were discontinued for a time, we found a vacancy that nothing else could fill. The first issue from Chicago was received with joy, and read with a relish, which is only common among those that have feasted on the good word of God, as set forth in its columns.

But we would forego the pleasure of reading it for weeks to come, were it necessary in order to place the office in Chicago. It is now where it should be. We now hope to see a constant stream of light and truth pouring out from the office, from which thousands shall drink and live forever.

God bless all that have lent a helping hand in placing our office in its new position.

We sympathize with you in your untiring energies and constant sacrifices to sustain a paper that speaks loudly and plainly in favor of the cause it represents. Enclosed you will find $7.10. Please accept it from the church at Genoa, and use it as you think best.

A word to ministering brethren. Do not fail to present before your congregations, the claims of the Association; and make it a point to take up a collection for it, and that speedily, that the extra expenses of moving may be paid. Attend to this matter, remembering that it is more pleasant to give than to receive. God will bless you in the act. E. H. BURINGTON.

A DISCUSSION

BETWEEN

Eld. Clark Braden, of the Christian Church, and Eld. Himes, of the Advent Christian Times.

Upon Four Propositions, Involving the Nature of Man, the State of the Dead, and Future Rewards and Punishments.

ELD. HIMES' EIGHTH RESPONSE.

From the persistency with which my brother urges his non sequitur from the "innocence, ignorance and simplicity," of primitive man, one would think he supposes his audience to have relapsed en masse into the Adamic condition. Is he seriously in earnest? or is he only "chaffing" us? What does this talk about angels keeping infant schools mean? Immaterial, unorganized spirits, teaching man to use his organs of speech, to clothe himself, to dig and delve, and telling him the names and uses of animals! Was it in "accommodation to the ignorance" of those ages that Moses wrote that the Lord brought the animate creation to Adam "to see what he would call them; and whatever the man should call every living being that should be its name?" Moses sets Adam in the light of an inteligent dignified manhood. Elder Brgden represents him as a simpleton going through the farce of giving names he had just learned by heart in the primitive primary school. I know not where my brother obtained this lore, but I have no doubt he can find immortal soul in the same book. But the Bible is our standard—our test for premises as well as conclusions.

And now will my brother tell us one thing: Is the Bible yea and nay on the question we are debating? Does the Old Testament teach one thing about it, and the New another? He says that reading Genesis in the light of the New Testament he gets certain ideas. Does he mean that if he had to read Genesis without the New Testament he should gather a different conclusion? I know as well as he, that the gospel throws a flood of light on all revelation that preceded it. But it does not contradict a single fundamental idea, of the Old Testament; it never says "nay" to the "yea" of older revelation. In short, all this talk about primitive innocence, accommodations to ignorance, and the pitiful appeals to turn away our eyes from the Old and fix them wholly upon the New Testament, I consider to be a confession that the natural sense of the older Scriptures is against my brother's theory. Otherwise what do all the persistent attempts to undervalue their testimony mean? No man attempts to impeach a witness whose testimony does not tell against him.

My brother's "cumulative arguments" are, unfortunately for him, cumulated after the style of a pyramid placed upon its apex—he risks the whole structure upon a single point. His seventh letter all turned upon the point whether Christ endorsed the heathen traditions by using them in a parable. I showed this position was untenable, because fiction is as lawful as fact in parable; and absurd, because it proved too much. I showed that his theory located hades in the bowels of the earth; and that if he is right the lost are wailing there to-day, beneath our feet. Suspecting that my brother was fully joined to tradition, I suggested that he would probably tell us that "Paradise" was now "To let," and I am not astonished. He swallowed the patristic legends bodily. Jesus' death was a missionary tour to hades to preach the gospel to the dead, and bring away from "Abraham's Bosom," the saints there "imprisoned in a dreamy, phantom state." Here we have pure tradition put in the scale against inspired utterances, which affirm that in hades there is no work, device, knowledge or wisdom. Tradition disputes this, and says they all exist in hades; and my brother sides with tradition against the Scriptures!

Eph. 4:8, has been forced into the service of this fable; but the application is doubted by considerate immaterialists themselves, and every candid thinker is compelled to admit that if the expression refers to human beings at all, those who came out of their graves after Jesus' resurrection, as is recorded by Matthew, are undoubtedly the class referred to, and not a train of disembodied spirits. But there are insuperable objections even to this view. All admit that the present work and position of Christ was typified by the High Priest in his annual visit to the Most Holy Place. The epistle to the Hebrews treats at large upon this subject. In the type, the High Priest, strictly unattended—for it was death for anyone else to go to the place—entered the Holiest of all, to present his offering as a mediator for the people, who, one and all, awaited his return outside. No man ever dared break through that curtain typifying the canopy of blue that now hides our High Priest from. Could a type be more grossly perverted than this has been? Its imagery has been reversed and subverted. Instead of going away unattended, as in the type, our High Priest is accompanied by myriads of human spirits. Instead of coming to his people, the vast mass of them go to him, and then return with him! It not only makes death mean a miserable life; and life happiness; and perdition preservation; and destruction eternal misery; it not only explains the litteral by the symbollic, the plain by the obscure, and expounds Scripture to harmonize with heathen and heratical traditions, but seizes the types and symbols of Scripture, inverts them, and bids us behold in the entrance of a priest into the Holy Place, unattended under pain of death, a figure of the entrance of Christ into heaven with untold millions of souls—some of them converted in hell, after death, at that. Is not this wresting the Scriptures?

If the saints' side of hades were emptied at the resurrection of Christ, will our brother please tell us how Peter could assert some weeks after that event—"David is not ascended into the heavens." Peter's argument is, that as David had not ascended into the heavens, he could not fill the conditions of the prophecy. But Eld. Braden says he has ascended—in fact, went at the same time Christ did. Peter and my brother here come in collision. I shall not dictate which of the two my readers are to believe. I may remark, however, that I believe Peter.

We are conjured to read the narrative of the dying thief with one eye upon the Pharisaic traditions. Now I think we had best keep our eyes on the doctrine of Christ. My brother has several times placed Christ where he must endure the Pharisaic errors or become a deceiver. I would remind him and the reader that Jesus was an independent teacher and had a doctrine of his own; and our business is to harmonize any casual or apparently contradictory remarks by him with his own doctrine, and not with that of his opposers. The assumption that the malefactor said "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom," with reference to a tradition of the Talmud, and not Christ's own doctrine of his coming into his kingdom, is assertion of the most arbitrary character. The presumption is that he knew and believed the doctrine of Christ. And if in his reply, Christ ignored his own doctrine, and sanctioned that of his opposers, who were even then in delight over his death agonies, I would be glad to learn how we are to know anything about the sense of the Scriptures. If my brother is right, the common people can never read the Bible intelligently until they have waded through and digested that mass of traditional trash and fustian known as the Talmud.

The thief prayed to be remembered when Christ should come into his kingdom. Paul says that Christ's coming and kingdom are at the judgment of the quick and the dead. (2 Tim. 4:1.) That settles the question. He wished to be remembered at Christ's second advent, at the time when he should "reward every man." (Mat. 16:27.) To this prayer Jesus said "Amen." Now, "Amen," in response to a petition, always means, "So be it." So Christ endorsed the thief's request, and when Paradise lost is restored, the promise made that day under, outwardly, the most discouraging prospects one could conceive, will be duly verified at Jesus' coming and kingdom.

Of late, my brother has taken several of his positions under cover of this remark—"I know I shall be met with sneering and infidelity when I present this argument." But why is he so fearful that I may "steal his thunder?" I have not denied the inspiration of any part of the Scriptures in order to sustain my position. I have not sanctioned rationalism, by use of the accommodation theory. I have not replied to any of my brother's logic with sneers, and charges of dishonesty and rhetorical thimble-rigging. Whence, then, this fear that I may assail him with his own weapons? Has he not an argument that he dare leave to his readers upon its own merits, and without the defences of special pleading and attempts to prejudice my reply?

I am no infidel, though I deny the authority of Patristic traditions in matters of faith, including the fable that Jesus preached in hades. If such unbelief makes infidels, some of the brightest names on the record of the Church must receive that brand. The passage in Peter, concerning the spirits in prison, is confessedly difficult, and one gains nothing by treating it dogmatically. It is very easy for my opponent to say its grammatical sense is so and so; but not so easy for him to prove the assertion. Scholars of erudition fully equal to his own think very differerently, and tell us the sense of the passage is simply that Christ, by his Spirit, preached to the Antediluvians, while mercy lingered in the days of Noah. This view harmonizes with the general tenor of Scripture, which represents this life as man's term of probation, and, I think, nowhere recognizes the notion of probation after death. Preaching in hades implies probation there. And probation in hades overturns the immaterialist view of the the parable in Lk. 17, for if Christ went into the abode of the wicked souls with the gospel, then that "great gulf" is bridged: and Dives' prayer for a drop of water is answered by the opening of the fountain of living waters in hell itself.

But my brother overlooks another and fatal objection to his theory, and that is this: Peter does not say that Christ personally either in body or disembodied, preached to the spirits spoken of. He says the preaching was by the same Spirit that quickened Christ, or raised him from the dead. This was the Holy Spirit recognized by my brother as a person distinct from Logos. So all my brother's reasoning upon this passage falls to the ground; for it is based upon the supposition that the preaching was the personal work of the Logos, whereas Peter distinctly affirms that it was "by" the Holy Spirit. Christ "being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit, by which also he went and preached." (1 Pet. 3:18, 19.) Not the disembodied Logos, but the Holy Spirit "went and preached." My brother has so evidently thoroughly studied this passage, that I cannot but wonder how he overlooked this fact—a fact fatal to his argument.

To one portion of my brother's letter I yield a ready assent. I mean his quotations of Scripture. I believe Jesus when he says, "Before Abraham was, I am;" and also when he says, "A body hast thou prepared me." And I do not, like my brother, here inject a preposition, and read "prepared for me," but believe the simple statement that he himself was the prepared body, or victim for the sacrifice. And when I read that "the word was made flesh," I feel no disposition to trifle with the mystery of the incarnation by saying this means "he became flesh by entering the body of flesh!" Does a man become a house by entering a house? Did the swallowing of Jonah by the great Fish make a fish of him? He "entered" the fish.

My brother pretends a great horror of "a human sacrifice." But his theory hardly gives us that. All the sacrifice he has is a human body. The Logos was not made a body, but became tenant of a body. Christ did not die—but only that body. Christ was not "raised for our justification," but we are justified by the quickening of that body in which the Logos abode!

And right here let me remark that no doubt baptism, as my brother says, "imitates" the death, burial and resurrection of Christ. But it is the body that dies; the body that is buried; the body that rises. The spirit can not die, can not be buried, can not be resurrected. Will my brother please tell us just how immersion "imitates" the emergence of a spirit from its body, its descent to a spirit world, and its return and reunion with the body. I confess I see even fewer points of similarity here than there were in my brother's exceedingly inapt college illustration, on another point. The symbolism is exceedingly obscure, unless it relates to the material being—the man.

Again, my brother is so anxious to prove Christ a spirit, that he takes away his humanity. I believe the pre-existent Logos became incarnate. This incarnation is a mystery. It has never been explained, and doubtless will not be in our present state of being. The absurdities of Trinitarian and other expositions of the Incarnation have driven some to deny the pre-existence of Christ; but this view is not peculiar to materialists. Comparatively few of them hold it. Nor do I think any will find light in my brother's theory. To me, in view of the positions he has himself taken, it is little less than grotesque. With him the spirit is the conscious intelligent part of man. In Christ the divine Logos took the place of this human spirit. So we are compelled to read that the divine Logos "increased in wisdom!" So Paul strives to strengthen our confidence in our Savior, by observing that he has suffered, being tempted in all points like as we are. But can Divinity suffer? And will my brother say that the Divine Logos could be tempted in the same sense that men are tempted? In short, the being my brother presents to us as the Messiah is not "the man Christ Jesus" at all. He had nothing in common with man except "a body of flesh," in which he dwelt as one dwells in a tent! The Immanuel of Scripture is one with us—the Son of man as well as the Son of God.

My brother says "Christ died as all men died," an admission fatal to my brother's theory. My readers will observe that the point of my brother's argument for the survival of the spirit in death rests upon the theory of the incarnation, and not upon the Scriptures. The spirit Jesus commended to the Father, was not the Logos commending itself to God, but the spirit all men possess. If it was a pre-existent entity taking its flight from a body which it has tenanted for a while, there is no resemblance between it and the spirit of man, which is not a pre-existent entity, nor an entity at all, but something received by inheritance. If the Logos was in Christ, retaining its personality as a pre-existent spirit, then it was extra human; and no argument for the condition of man in death can be fairly deduced from the death of such a being. If man is endowed with a rational pre-existent entity, then there is an analogy in the case. Is my brother ready to adopt the theory of the Conflict of Ages?

Again, my brother hastily says: "It is nowhere taught that Christ saves men from natural or physical death," which, he adds, "is no part of the consequences of the transgression." We used to be taught that the transgression entailed three deaths—the physical, spiritual, and eternal. We can now see why my brother has been so anxious about having proper light on Genesis: the only death that record mentions as a consequence of the transgression is physical death; there it is clearly represented to be the culmination of all the woes wrought by disobedience. It is God, not the chronicler, who says: "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." But my brother has appealed to the N. T., and to it we will cite him. Paul says: "As the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him who had the power of death, that is the devil; and deliver them who, through fear of death were all their life-time subject to bondage." Now, whatever death was in Satan's power, whatever death men feared, that death Christ died in behalf of men. And to affirm that he suffered it in their behalf, and yet that salvation from natural death is no part of the scheme of redemption, is to trifle with language. The death referred to is physical death; it can be no other. He never was numbered with the morally or spiritually dead; else all our hope in him is vain.

Moreover, according to our brother's showing, it was the Spirit that died this death. He says man "was made IN HIS SPIRIT a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death." So from Eld. Braden's premises these two conclusions inevitably follow: the Logos was reduced to a lower level in the order of spirits than angels; and this was effected in order that he might die, for the death spoken of involves the thing "made lower," and my brother says that is the spirit. Now, says the writer of Hebrews, this being was made lower than the angels that he "by the grace of God should taste death for every man." My brother says the spirit is the being referred to: he must admit that the death is "natural death," and yet he not only denies that the spirit can die (and I am happy to agree with him there), but that Jesus did taste natural death for every man. In what a tangled web has my brother involved himself. See his position: The spirit is referred to when it is said: "Thou madest him a little lower than the angels." But this language refers to Christ. Hence the Logos was made of a lower order than the angels! And Paul says this was done in order that he might suffer death, natural death. I wonder that my brother should have failed to see this inevitable, and, to him, fatal conclusion from Psalms 8:5.

Paul does not contradict himself in relation to "the spirits of just men made perfect," as my brother would make him. According to Eld. Braden these spirits were made perfect at Jesus' resurrection, and are now where there "is fullness of joys, even pleasures for evermore." But Paul said long years after that event—"God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." (Heb. 11.) Were Paul and the church perfected then? They were evidently without the light my brother has obtained from tradition. Evidently Paul anticipated being made perfect in the "better resurrection" (ver. 39), as did David: "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." Or as he himself said, "Not that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life."

But I fear these long articles are killing the interest in this discussion. I will therefore pass over other points that I might touch with interest, and close by again calling attention to the poverty of argument displayed by my brother. After occupying space that would have made about thirteen articles of the length originally proposed, at the end he gives us the nearest thing to a direct argument he can find, which is this: The punishment of the lost is eternal conscious punishment; therefore they will exist forever. He has all the way along been discussing my first affirmative, and now passes on to my second affirmative; and rests his dogma of the immortality of the human spirit upon—the eternal conscious misery of the lost! In all the Word of God he could not find one direct statement of his proposition in any equivalent or similar terms. Do his readers require any better evidence that neither the language nor the idea of natural immortality are to be found in the Word of God?

Strange Sayings.

In this day of sudden changes, and wonderful experiences we need not be surprised to hear some strange things said by eccentric-minded persons, but when in the midst of grave and solemn scenes men speak strange thoughts it often shows the shallowness of the mental perceptions of the speaker.

For instance, not long since, at a funeral service I heard a preacher say that God and the angels had great longings for the conversion of sinners and after they were converted they were anxious to have them die. This was said with much gravity, but I could not help being stirred within at such a speech. Only think of it. God anxious for the death of his people, yet visiting judgments upon those who bring about the very thing he wants done.

Again, this same preacher in conversation with a sister upon the second advent, said very earnestly in argument against the probability of Christ's personal coming that if he should come again and appear in Chicago, in three days the boys would snowball him through the streets. Only think of that! A preacher posted in theology and quite a popular man in his church so deficient of knowledge in regard to the second advent of Christ as to gravely argue against it on the ground of persecution. When the Bible declares the result of his advent shall be to make his foes his footstool, a theological preacher says that if he should come the boys would pelt him through the streets. Who can expect true Christianity to flourish under such teachers?

A short time since a minister of Chicago, and a very notable man among his sect, and well known by reputation outside, is reported to have said in the pulpit that it was supposed the reason why Jesus wept at the tomb of Lazarus was because he knew that he was about to call him out of bliss to this dark dreary earth again. And he also spoke very favorably of a tradition that he said existed among the Jews to the effect that when Lazarus came from the tomb the first words he uttered were, "Must I die again?" and when he was told that he must, he felt so bad that he never smiled in all his after life.

Only hear that! First, Jesus sad because Lazarus must come back from heaven, and in the next paragraph Lazarus overwhelmed with sorrow because he must return to heaven. But a divinity teacher says it, and consistent or not, it is all right with the people.

Well, these are strange things, and pulpit orators may say what they please about things theoretical, providing they will let alone the conscience of the hearers. Inconsistencies as glaring as that two and two make five, are all right in theology if the speaker is only a collegian and popular.

Truly, certain strange things are brought to our ears, but they are not of Paul or of Christ, but of modern theology contrary to the Bible.

God wants righteous men to die, but if any one kills them they are murderers, and wo to those who seek to carry out God's will, and have it done on earth as they in heaven wish it to be. And if Jesus comes again as king he cannot rule, but will be so weak that he will suffer an ignominious pelting through the streets. And Jesus wept because Lazarus must leave heaven, and Lazarus wept because he must soon return to heaven again. How Christianity must thrive under such teaching! No wonder Christ asked "when the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?"

"Here is the patience of the saints." Things morally and church-wise cannot be much more devoid of faith than now.

FRANK BURR.

The correspondent of an infidel paper cites a recent case in the courts, involving some controversy or other about a copy of the Scriptures; and quotes a remark of the defendant that "he had more Bibles in his house than he could make use of, and the plaintiff had forced his Bible upon him." Upon this the correspondent goes on to say: "This is more frequently the case than we are aware of. Christians generally do not know what to do with their Bibles. They show them, praise them, talk about them, quarrel and fight about them, in fact do anything but read them." The old maxim says it is wise to learn from an enemy; and we must confess that, in our judgment, the infidel is in this a good deal more than half right. There are a great many men who sing lustily, "We won't give up the Bible," but who neither study its letter nor act in its spirit. Such people are horrified at the thought of omitting the perfunctionary reading of the chapter in school; while at home, where it may be profitably taught, the sacred volume is little better than a sealed book.—*Chris. Vesuvius.

Physicists have held a theory that the hidden forces of nature which shake the earth with great convulsions have long been gradually losing strength and there is constantly less and less danger of the recurrence of such catastrophes as the earthquake that destroyed Lisbon, or the volcanic outburst which buried Herculaneum and Pompeii. Recent events must have imperilled their faith in their comfortable belief. Antioch has just been laid in ruins by one of the severest earthquakes of the century. A whole island in the Pacific was depopulated a few months ago by a similar catastrophe. And now Vesuvius bursts forth with extraordinary violence, and the people are flying with dismay from the villages along its foot. It is eighteen hundred years since the first recorded eruption of scoriæ and ashes from the mountain overwhelmed Herculaneum and Pompeii, and eight hundred years since the flow of lava began which has continued at intervals ever since. Long before there was any written or traditional account of the phenomena, however, Vesuvius must have been vomiting forth the product of the central fires, for its own substance is of a volcanic character. The quantity of ashes thrown out by it in A. D. 79 exceeded its own bulk. In 1538 a volcanic cone called Monte Nuovo, a mile and a half in circumference, and 440 feet high, was raised by it in two days in the Bay of Baiæ. In 1631 it threw out torrents of lava and boiling water over the villages at its base. In 1770 it poured forth huge masses of thick, white, sulphurous smoke, three miles in hight, and shot into them showers of stones, scoriæ, and ashes, at least 2,000 feet high, and sheets of flame which ascended nearly two and a half miles. When the town of Sorre del Greco was destroyed, in 1774, it was calculated that a single stream of lava contained more than forty-six million cubic feet. When the unfortunate place was ruined again, in 1861, fissures opened at various points in the side of the mountain, and the lava issuing from numerous craters united in a stream no less than twenty-five feet deep, reaching to the very roofs of the houses.

One can hardly understand the indifference to danger which draws the wretched inhabitants back, time after time, to villages which have repeatedly been swept by the burning torrent, and where the mutterings of the earth, the fissures emitting smoke and gas, and the scars of former catastrophes are such eloquent reminders of ever present danger. Yet in the accounts of the present eruption we find the names of the same towns and villages which figure in the story of former devastations. The activity of the volcano began to attract crowds of tourists as early as the beginning of April, but it seems to have been only a few days ago that the phenomena became especially alarming. The most terrible features of such eruptions are all present. The violent explosions, the columns of flame shooting upward to an immense hight, the showers of stones and ashes, new craters opening suddenly at unexpected places, burning gasses breaking out of the earth in the very midst of the villages, and worst of all, the dreadful flow of lava pouring down all sides of the mountains—such are the details of the scene depicted in our dispatches this morning. The people are camping in the fields and the Government is feeding them. Torre del Greco is deserted and once more in imminent danger. San Sebastiano and Massa di Somma have been ruined, and the deadly stream is advancing toward Portici, Cercola, San Giorgio, and Ponticelli. The opening of new craters continues, but, fortunately, with each of these outbreaks comes a perceptible diminution in the force of the whole eruption. Though the strong winds now threaten many towns hitherto considered sufficiently remote from danger, the general expression is that the worst is over. The extent of the destruction is, so far, much below that of some former years, and, unless the eruption shall largely increase, it will not compare with some of the greater catastrophes of history.—*N. " " " Last year New York rose en masse against corruption, and "reformers" were placed in office everywhere. High hopes were entertained that a new era had dawned, and the Empire State, at least, would have a pure government. But the puplic have been doomed to disappointment. The so-called "reform Legislature" has failed to justify its name. Still some good has been accomplished, and matters could hardly have become any worse than they were.

" " " The statistics of religion just issued from the Census Office give the total number of church edifices in the United States as 63-074. This is an average of one church to 600 persons in a population of 38,500,000, counting States and Territories. The number of sittings in all the churches of the country is nearly 22,000,000 The aggregate value of the church property is estimated at $354,000,000. The Methodists lead all other sects in provisions for accommodating their people, the total number of their sittings being 6,500 000. Next come the Baptists with over 6,000,000; the Presbyterians with 2,500,000; the Catholics with 2,000,000; the Congregationalists with over 1,000,000; and the Episcopilans and Lutherans with less than 1,000,000 each. The Methodists hold nearly $70,000,000 in church property; the Roman Catholics $61,000,000; and the Episcopalians $36,500,000.

" " " The political sea is raging with increasing fury. The convention of so called Liberal-Republicans, at Cincinnati last week, nominated Horace Greeley of New York, for President, and B. Gratz Brown of Missouri, for Vice President. We take no special interest in the contest now going on. If both parties tell the truth, none of either party leaders are any better than they should be. The way epithets are bandied and the extent to which slurs and slang and impeachment of personal character and motives are indulged seems to indicate that neither party dare leave their cause with the public, relying upon candid statements of fact and logic. Rhetoric of the Billingsgate stripe, rancorous personal abuse seems to furnish a large proportion of the capital of political writers. While the politicans are fighting out their differences, let us patiently await the developments of heaven's politics and hope that the decree may speedily go forth that shall put an end to all the "national confusions" of "this ruined earth."

ABROAD.

" " " The French government has decided to court-martial Marshal Bazaine and General Wimpffen. It is explained that the object in proceeding against the latter is to expose Napoleon's conduct at Sedan.

" " " Spain is in a bad way. Reports are conflicting especially in regard to military movements. The nominal exciting cause of the insurrection is the interference of the government in the late elections. The Romish priests are aiding the Carlists, and there are indications of a protracted season of that cruel and exterminating civil war which is peculiar to that country, and is a disgrace to civilization.

" " " The last eruption of Vesuvius, introduced by earthquake in California, the Mississippi Valley and elsewhere, has now ceased: but was followed by a hurricane which damaged property and crops spared by the volcano. About the same time Madras has been visited by a terrific cyclone, with great loss of lives and property. In April a hurricane at Zanzibar wrecked or injured 120 vessels, and the town is greatly injured. $10,000,000 is the estimated loss.

" " " The semi-official Hungarian paper Peter Lloyd observes that the announcement of the proposed fortification of Sebastopol, and other points in the Crimea, has nothing alarming about it, for the simple reason that there is no chance for a new war like that in the Crimea. Since 1854, the fact that Russia's way to Constantinople lies through Vienna and Pesth has grown into a dogma. Any future war arising out of the Eastern question would be settled either in Poland proper or in the Western provinces of Russia.

" " " The Cronstadt Messenger states that the Russian fleet in the Black Sea will be composed, this year, of 18 men-of-war and three floating beacons, with 146 officers and 1,478 sailors. The flotilla of the Caspian Sea will comprise 24 vessels, with 85 officers and 1,036 sailors. The fleet of the Pacific will have 29 vessels, with 131 officers and 1,396 sailors. The total number of vessels taking part in the evolutions in the home waters and cruising abroad will be 16 iron-clads and 164 steamers, with 1,315 officers and 17,784 sailors.

" " " The wife of a tradesman, at Plymouth, England, recently met with an accident, which caused two of the fingers of her hand to be bent over her palm. She had frequently declared she would rather lose her hand altogether than be thus crippled, and a surgeon having refused to amputate it, she went to the railway and laid her arm on the rails. An advancing train, more complaisant than the surgeon, cut off the hand very cleanly at the wrist. The woman then took a cab to the infirmary and had her wound bound up.

" " " Outrages on the Jews, in Roumania, are as frequent as revolutions in Mexico. A well informed writer says they spring from the prejudices of a hopeless bigotry, and usually arise after this fashion: "Some wretch starts a report without the least proof, and in a few minutes a crowd of idlers gathers, which soon turns into a mob to maltreat passing Jews, and when the outrage is once commenced it feeds on its own violence, without the least question as to the occasion." If ever the great powers of Europe had a just excuse for interference in the business of their weaker neighbors, it is certainly found in the inhumanity of the Roumanians toward the Hebrews. But Roumania is "debatible ground"—every power is jealous of any interference in the affairs of the Principalities. So we see no hope for the Jew.

Purity and Impurity of Speech.

It is a burning shame that the young men of America make use of impure language to the extent that they do. No one certainly, will attempt any sort of defence of it; for every one knows [illegible] neither promotes purity of [illegible] brilliancy of intellect, nor in [illegible] way proves of any advantage to any[illegible]

It is because I have myself felt the degrading influence of being compelled to listen to impure language that I wish to utter my protest against any young man who, making any sort of pretense to respectability, defiles his own mind and the minds of others by vile speech. One cannot turn in any direction without seeing the blighting influence of this evil.

This corruption of morals has gradually crept up from the lowest ranks of life till now it unblushingly shows itself in what are called respectable circles; and people begin to be alarmed at its rapid increase.

Newspapers cry out against the evil; men from the pulpit and speaker's stand prophecy of the dark future before us, if we, young men, allow this state of things to go on. And why should we not try to bring about a reform?

I believe that very many become habituated to the use of impure language without being at heart impure or at all conscious of the degrading influence connected with it. If one who has become thus accustomed to its use would consider for a moment he would realize the importance of reform. In the first place, if he uses such language, those who are really high minded and of delicate perception, and in whose society one derives the highest advantages naturally shun him, fearing that his character corresponds to his words. Those who are vile more readily make friends with him, thinking him for one of their own sort. Thus unintentionally, on his part, he is brought into associations that will soon corrupt his heart. But aside from his own interests, if he can be influenced by any noble impulses, he surely ought to be guarded in his use of language for the sake of those about him. There are younger and purer hearts that will be corrupted, his companions will not be restrained by his influences from indulging in viler habits, and he will cause shame to his friends and all who understand the sad tendency of this evil.

If young men throughout the nation would reform in this one particular, and would frown upon all who make use of vile expressions, I believe that most of the other vices prevalent would of themselves shrink back into darkness and die from lack of supply.

But alas! how can we hope for such a reform, when Christians, and, what is more, young men who are to be leaders and teachers of Christians, even ministers of the gospel, indulge in this filthy habit? How convincing to us will be their logic, and how thrilling their bursts of eloquence when pleading for dying sinners to shun the broad road! When, in our sympathy for the poor, the ignorant, and the vile, we wish to induce them to become noble and rich in high thought, can we point to you, young men, and say, "Do like that one; see, he is educated, he is a Christian?"—Sabbath Recorder.

Discipline.—Now, there are two courses, either of which you can take One is to say: "I am not living nor dressing so well as my companions, and I must have fine clothes and better fare." The other is to say with stern manliness: "I have come down here to make my way; and honesty and simplicity require that I should not live any higher than I myself can earn the means of living. I will be no man's pauper or beneficiary. I will make what I take; and what I make and take shall support me." The discipline which you get from this latter course of self-denial is better than going to college. Many a man cradled in learning gets no discipline; but a young man who, having been reared and trained in self-indulgence, leaves his father's house, and comes to the city and says, "I will be beholden to no man; I can afford to live as plain as any man, both in regard to diet and clothes, if it is necessary to my manhood, and I will not have anything which I cannot fairly earn: I will be independent and establish myself"—such a young man gets a discipline which is worth a university education. By forming that purpose and adhering to it, he is educating himself in the very elements of manhood. He is making a man of himself.—Plymouth Pulpit.

Correspondence.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

CINCINNATI.

Monday, April 22. I met with many persons who attended the great tent-meeting I held with Father Miller in this city in 1842. I find the seed then sown still bearing fruit. And although the cause in Cincinnati fell into unskillful and bad hands, which ruined the public interest, I find many people here and there as the result of that meeting. With wise management we should have now had one or two large churches in the city. Alas for the folly of misguided teachers. Every good cause has to suffer more or less from bad or misguided men, who do no good themselves, and destroy or pervert the good that others do. But this is no new thing; it has been so from the beginning, and the "tares and wheat will grow together till the harvest."

A friendly subscriber writes that he still advocates the doctrine. "The coming wonder, on Napoleon III., the destined monarch of the universal republic." And further says: "As sure as there is a God in heaven, I maintain that the eighth head is Napoleon III., who received the 'deadly wound' with the sword at Sedan, which will be healed again, and then all the world will wonder after the wild beast whose deadly wound is healed, and say who is able to make war with the beast, when he gets at the head of the new Federation of the ten kings," &c. &c.

These remarks are in reply to something in my "Journal." I love to see men have faith, and strong faith, but I would rather they would have it in something scriptural and reliable. The ex-Emperor of the French may be restored for aught we know, but that he is even hinted at as a person, in prophecy, is absurd. France as one of the ten kingdoms, is distinctly referred to; but not her individual rulers are referred to. Thus while some ignore prophecy, others make too much of it, and bring the whole thing into disesteem.

I called upon Eld. Errett to-day, the editor of the Christian Standard. He is in the prime of life, and one of the ablest advocates of the Disciple, or as they choose to be called, the Christian Church. He has raised the Standard to a list of over fifteen thousand subscribers, and wields a great influence in the churches. The discussion with Eld. Clark Braden is published in this paper. And Br. Errett has acted an honorable part towards both disputants.

I spoke to-night in the Hall in Pendleton, on the prophetic history of the world, showing that the next great change in events would be produced by the smiting of the stone, which would dash in pieces all earthly kingdoms, and bring the kingdom of God.

Tuesday, April 23. In reading the words of Paul, 2 Cor. 5:15—"That they which live, should not live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them." I was deeply impressed with our obligation to Christ. A late commentator has given the following truthful hints on the passage:

"To live to him is the opposite to living unto ourselves. It is to seek his honor; to feel that we belong to him; that all our time and talents, all our strength of intellect and body, all the avails of our skill and toil, all belong to him, and should be employed in his service. If we have talents by which we can influence other minds, they should be employed to honor the Savior. If we have skill or strength to labor, by which we can make money, we should feel that it all belongs to him, and should be employed in his service. If we have property, we should feel that it is his, and that he has a claim upon it all, and that it should be honestly consecrated to his cause. And if we are endowed with a spirit of enterprise, and are fitted by nature to encounter perils in distant and barbarous climes, as Paul was, we should feel like him, that we are bound to devote all entirely to his service, and to the promotion of his cause. A servant, a slave, does not live to himself, but to his master. His person, his time, his limbs, his talents, and the avails of his industry are not regarded as his own. He is judged incapable of holding any property which is not at the disposal of his master. If he has strength, it is his master's; if he has skill, the avails of it is his master's; if he is an ingenious mechanic, or labors in any department, if he is amiable, kind, gentle and faithful, and adapted to be useful in an eminent degree, it is regarded as all the property of his master. He is bound to go where his master chooses; to execute the task which he assigns; to deny himself at his master's will, and to come and lay the avails of all his toil at his master's feet. He is regarded as having been purchased with money, and the purchase money is supposed to give a right to his time, his talents, his services, and his soul. Such as the slave is supposed to become by purchase, and by the operation of human laws, the Christian becomes by the purchase of the Son of God, and by the voluntary recognition of him as the master, and as having a right to all that we have and are. To him all belongs, and all should be enjoyed in endeavoring to promote his glory and in advancing his cause."

Let us examine ourselves, and see if we "fill this bill.

Wednesday, April 24. I called upon S. Trevor, one of the trustees of the legacies of the estate of the late Dea. John Smith, who was an Adventist and a special friend of mine. He left me a thousand dollars by his will, to use for the Advent cause.

His legacies for benevolent objects amounted to about $4,000. The family being opposed to the will, first tried to break it, and failed. Then notes and bills were brought in, which were considered unlawful, and finally the property was disposed of at a considerable less than its value, so that not one of the legacies has been or can be paid. After spending over one hundred dollars to secure this legacy given in my care, both the expense and legacy are lost.

I have often thought that if good men or women have anything to give, they had better give it in their life time, and see that it is rightly used. This would save it from disaffected relatives, who, rather than it should go for religious uses, will expend it all in law-suits.

Br. Smith sleeps sweetly in the cemetery in Cincinnati, not knowing the wrongs that have taken place. He did his duty, however, and will soon come forth to his reward in the resurrection of the just.

I spoke in the Congregational church this evening, on the soul. The audience, though educated in an opposite view, received my testimony very kindly, and are led to search the Bible to see if what I stated is really so. The idea that man has no immortality out of Christ, sounds strangely to them.

Thursday, April 25. As I was walking up Fourth St. to-day, I was addressed by a young lady, who said, "Do you not know me?" I soon recognized in her countenance the family look of Eld. Apollos Hale, one of my old and best friends, now of Charlestown, Mass. "Why, is this you, Caddy?" "Yes, it is me, and you do not know how glad I am to see you. I have seen no one of my old friends since I came here. I am pleasantly situated, but I am far away from friends and relatives, and I am so glad to see you." It was like meeting an own child. I often meet the children of beloved friends who are scattered over the country, to whom I have spoken words of cheer, as a father and friend. And I look forward to the time when the scattered ones will be gathered, and we shall no longer be pilgrims and strangers on the earth, but the living and the dead, will be gathered to the Paradise of God.

I spoke at night on the spirit of man. Many questions were asked about the thief on the cross, rich man, &c., &c., Moses on the Mount, to all of which I gave Scripture answers. It was a good time. The truth is making its way.

Saturday, April 27. I was introduced to Prof. Brown and others, who are to me, personally, new friends and advocates of the truth. Br. B. has been a Baptist preacher; but failing health has led him for a time to a secular calling. In the mean time the Lord has given him light on the coming kingdom.

I dined with Br. E. Harwood, of the Baptist church. A son of Dr. Brisbane was present, with whom, by general consent of the family, the subject of the nature of man and the state of the dead was freely discussed for an hour or more. I met the questions on the rich man and Lazarus, and the usual objections to the Bible view on this subject. Mr. B. said if he was convinced of the doctrine I preached, he would "at once commit suicide!" I told him he would do no such thing. If he should get a clear view of the subject, he would want to live forever. And, said I, no doctrine gives such harmony to the Scriptures, or opens such visions of glory to man, as his absolute mortality, and the well grounded hope of a resurrection to endless life at the second advent of Jesus. Our conversation was an animated one, in which others of the household took part, and I hope for some good results.

I took supper with Br. Jones, of the Congregationalist church. He is a liberal minded young man, a graduate of Kane Seminary. He opened his doors to me, and listened to my discourses with candor. God bless him and his people for their kindness and liberality. We had some close conversation on questions relating to man, and his future; but he had no new light on his side of the question.

As we had no place for meeting tonight, I met friends at the house of Dr. Tibbets. They feel much animated and blessed of the Lord, through the truth. It is pleasant to see such an appreciation of one's labors.

Sabbath, April 28. Attended the First Christian church on Eighth St. Eld. W. T. Moore pastor. Their chapel is one of the finest pieces of architecture in the city. Its cost was over one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. They have an organ of the finest class, and a large choir, and singing the best of its kind. Br. Moore invited me to take part in the services, and treated me in a liberal and Christian manner. He spoke from John 8:45, "Because I tell you the truth ye believe me not." He showed in various ways that the truth was not at first acceptable to mankind. To the Jews it was a stumbling block, and the Greek's foolishness. He also illustrated the subject in many ways, with much interest. He is an able and very interesting speaker. At the close we enjoyed the communion. It was a rich and solemn season. They have a society of some five hundred members, and a large audience.

I had a short interview with Br. Moore, in which he referred to the discussion, and said that he was not interested in such discussions. He thought we had better let the subject alone, and attend to other matters for the salvation of souls, etc. I told him I thought that subject involved this very thing. We had need to know the nature of man, his condition and wants in order to seek his salvation. Here the subject was dropped.

In the p. m. I spoke in Columbia, on the kingdom. There was deep interest. And at night I spoke on the destiny of the wicked, to a large and intensely interested audience, which closed my labors here. A wide door has been opened here to hear the word of the kingdom, and I trust there will be fruit. The time has not come for organization, and so I leave the matter in the hands of God, who doeth all things well.

Monday, April 29. Took leave of Dr. Tibbets, and my many friends in South Pendleton, and came to the city. Here all is excitement. The elements of the political world are stirred up, and all shades of party feeling and sentiment congregate there this week to nominate a candidate for President of the Republic, in opposition to the present administration. But whether such elements can unite in a healthful reliable party remains to be seen. Everything is changing. And "men's hearts are failing them, for looking for the things that are coming on the earth."

I had an interesting interview with Prof. Brown and his family to-day. They are in full sympathy with the Advent faith. If he had health he would devote his whole time and talent to the cause. But as it is, he has to turn from all study and mental effort, and engage in secular business for a time. I also called upon Sr. Dunning, who has been faithful through all the changes of the cause here. Nearly all the old friends and believers have passed away. Sr. Saxon has lately fallen asleep. She kept up meetings at her house while she lived, and was faithful to the last.

An effort in Cincinnati at this time, I think, would be crowned with good. But it cannot be made at present.

I came to Cumminsville in the p. m., and put up with Br. Tibbets, who had arranged for me to speak in the Christian church—Eld. Beardsley pastor. I was cordially received by him, and had a pleasant talk on our faith. He put some questions relating to the thief on the cross, and Moses on the mount, etc., on which he desired light. He had read the discussion, but some things were not made clear as he wished to see them. A more critical explanation, I think, gave him satisfaction. I spoke to an intelligent audience in the evening. The Presbyterian pastor was out, and both he and Eld. Beardsley expressed satisfaction at the discussion of the prophetic word relating to the first and second advents.

From Samuel E. Pearl.

What is the most effectual way to keep young people from going astray after they are converted? We know that the temptations of youth are more violent in some respects than at any other time in life; hence it seems to me, their faith needs more nourishing. When I was in my fifteenth year I embraced religion, at a protracted meeting, and afterwards joined the Baptist church where I then resided. Several young people, of both sexes, and near my own age, joined the church at the same time. Some of these conversions, I have reason to believe, would have been short-lived any way; but others, I think, who now disclaim any relation with anything that is upright and good, might have been good members of the church and ornaments to the cause, if the influential members of the church had taken their minds from their cares long enough to have studied the welfare of the church a little more.

After we were gathered into the church, no more attention was paid to us, only we were told that temptations would come by and by. And a few of us who believed it our duty, without excuses, to attend the covenant and prayer-meetings of the church, were obliged to hear long tedious prayers, and dry exhortations, as well as experiences, from those who were regarded by some as hypocrites, in which no point was gained, or apparently aimed at, more than to see how long-winded they could be. This discouraged some, while others felt a sort of religious obligation to attend, and thus crucify the flesh.

When the Sabbath-school was organized, I aspired and hoped to take a class in the school. But no: an unconverted person took the class I wished; and after a mechanical recitation, dancing or some other amusement was the topic of conversation, each Sunday. My sense of propriety was shocked at this, but delicacy forbade my saying anything about it. I think that most of the other converts shared the same kind of treatment and example.

During all this time there was scarcely a word upon religious subjects spoken to any of us in private conversation, or away from the church, although we met with each other, and with the older members quite often. In short, the church found no religious employment for us; but Satan soon told some of us what to do, and we all, more or less, backslid from God, and many were turned out of the church. Give young converts something to do. Keep them busy in the work of the Lord.

From W. K. Colling, London, Eng.

Old age and infirmities prevent my leaving the house except a little while in the middle of the day, in fine weather when I call to see a few dear Christian rothers and sisters in the Lord. I feel at life is now almost a blank—not eing able to labor for the Lord as itherto. But I am comforted in nowing that our Master does not re- tire from us more than we can per- rm. And I am looking forward to e blessed time of my Lord's second dvent, when the great change shall ake place, and I be fashioned like hrist's glorious body, and be forever ith the Lord and all his redeemed nes.

Dear brothers and sisters who are lso fellow laborers in our Lord's ineyard, you all have much to con- end with from the world and from nany professors of Christian religion. As to the former, I do not wonder at ; but to be wounded in the house of ne's friends, is cruel. But never mind, lear brethren; cheer up. The disci- les here cannot expect a better posi- ion than their Lord enjoyed. But it will all end well. Bless the ord!

rom John Searce.

The Ringgold (Mo.) Advent church as organized last Aug. by Br. Dugger. We are few in numbers, but we have well-grounded hope, resting in our ord and Savior Jesus Christ. He is he rock of our salvation, and, as Br. link said at Clear Creek Conference, "We are settled, settled, SETTLED on his rock!" We are laying up treas- re in the heavenly savings bank. Jesus will come soon, and give us our ewards and everlasting glory.

From Alfred Sawyers, Sussex, Eng.

"A word fitly spoken," I find, "is ike apples of gold in pictures of silver." Therefore, let us exhort one another daily, laboring in the Lord, for s much as we know, labor is not in vain in the Lord. When I call to re- membrance the past, and think of the much long-suffering of God towards me and my household, my heart gushes out to God with thankfulness for his manifold blessings.

At a very early age I was left to seek my daily bread in the fields by the sweat of my brow. Thanks be to God, I fell among Chiristan people, and for nearly ten years labored in the fields with a man who preached righteousness, and two or three others of like precious faith. But for many years did I walk in the light of mine own eyes, little thinking that for this God would bring me into judgment. But at length I came to myself, and then started out to go to my Father in heaven, confessing my sins, at which time he came out to meet me, and there was rejoicing in heaven and in myself. And now my meat is to carry the message of the glorious kingdom of God, and the redemption which is in Christ Jesus, to perishing sinners.

The day I was baptised into Christ, the minister made use of the words—"Cast thy bread upon the waters, for it shall be seen after many days." I thought how it applied in my case. Brethren, be diligent, for you see the fruits of earnest labor. Sow thy seed beside all waters, for who can tell which shall prosper, this or that; or whether both shall be alike good? God giveth the increase.

I have a wife of like precious faith, who once told me she "never would have anything to do with such a lot as they." But who was she, that she could withstand God? I have also in my own hired house a man and his wife, and daughter, who, by the tender mercy of God, have been brought into the fold of Christ, and there is but one house near us in which we have not one or more souls for Christ. And if the strong man armed is not very cautious, the word will enter there and take root. May God prosper it, is my earnest prayer.

When I think of the Apostle's injunction not to forsake the assembling of ourselves together, and then look abroad over the church and see the cold-heartedness of many, my spirit is humbled within me; for I think surely they must have forgotten they were called to glory and to virtue, and to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. Would to God they would rally around the altar of God, and get a fresh foretaste of our common wealth, and think of the glorious jubilee when the sons of God shall sit at the marriage feast of their Brother and King, in the glory of their Father, in the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world.

A sister who is the mother of a family, and lives with me, is about 65 years of age, and has not been able to stand on her feet for seventeen years; and her husband has been afflicted for nearly twelve months. "Whom the Lord loveth he rebukes and chastens, and scourges every son whom he receiveth." May God give them grace and mercy is my prayer, and brethren, we ask an interest in your prayers, to call down a blessing.

From A. A. Phelps.

The battle waxes hot, and none but moral heroes can abide the awful contest. Oh! how we need the heavenly unction to enable us to "cut our way through!" Human policy is not sufficient. Knowledge is good, but how empty and vain, only as it is coupled with the conquering love of Christ! I am satisfied that the great want of the church is a baptism of power. If Jesus still lives, his promises still hold good. If we had more faith, we should make larger drafts on the bank of heaven, and get them cashed! O blessed Savior, pity our unbelief, and let thy people feel the power of thy blood! O flame of Pentecost, sweep over the shivering millions, and warm them into a new and vigorous life! Let my poor heart swell with a deeper gratitude, and burn with a purer love for God and man! O Essential Love, I pant, I sigh for thee!

From J. W. Rice.

We are still trying to do battle for Bible truth in this part of Illinois, and may God divest us of all selfishness, that we may read and understand the plain teachings of the Bible without prejudice. Our brethren have ceased their open opposition, and have assumed the Indian style of attack, doing nothing openly, but working under cover, saying in private all they can to check the spread of what we conceive to be the plain teaching of the Bible. Neither are they trying to convince us of what they claim to be error; but striving to shut every door against us they they can. And they have succeeded in getting two churches to rescind their choice for pastor. But our God is able to bring order out of confusion, and so far we have nothing to regret: for the persecution has only spread the truth, and we should be willing to bear all things for the truth. Then let persecution come, if only the will of God be that his truth may spread. Pray for us, that our Father may give grace to bear all with patience.

From Mary A Griffin.

About four years since I had the pleasure of hearing you preach in Minneapolis, the first Advent sermon I ever heard. Then my idea of Adventism was very strange. I had believed they were greatly in error. I was asked to read the Crisis, and compare it with the Bible. Wherever I saw the Scripture quoted, I turned to the Bible to see if I could not find it conflicting with the doctrine preached in the paper. To my utter astonishment, for such was my ignorance of what the Bible taught, never could I find anything in tracts or paper, but what proved it to be a Bible doctrine. Although I was raised under the teachings of a strictly devoted father and mother, in the Methodist church, I could not say for my own self that I ever before felt the importance of "looking for that blessed hope," and feeling an assurance of a home with the saints in the new earth, that I do to-day. Bless God that I am led to see and feel the need of my blessed Savior. My only hope is in him.

Father is a subscriber for your paper, and is doing what he can to circulate it and a great number of books and tracts. Many are anxious to read them. I believe that they have caused the Bible to be read more by hundreds than it ever has been before. As for myself, I can now read my Bible with an interest I never felt before. Why is it? It is because I see as I could not see before, until I began to read the TIMES, and Whitmore on Immortality, and many other works.

To-day I am not well, and while I was resting on my bed, have been reading the Minstrel. It contains a balm for every wound. I love to read the hymn—

"What a friend we have in Jesus,
All our sins and griefs to bear."

From E. J. Bently, Cassell's Prairie Wis.

When I look around me, and see the suffering, the trials, and the wickedness that abound, I look forward with impatience to the time when Jesus shall appear and put an end to all these things. I can but realize that the professed followers of Christ (myself amongst them) are not doing all they might do, to advance his cause. I am determined to strive harder to win souls to repentance. I know I cannot do much, but I believe each one of us can do something. Certainly if we sit still, we shall do nothing, and instead of helping others to come to Jesus we shall be stumbling stones in their way, while losing our own inheritance.

My daily prayer is that God will help me conquer self. There I find my greatest enemy. Ridicule from others only tends to make me stronger, and is no trial at all to me. But to conquer myself I find a hard conflict.

We have no regular preaching now. The church is small, and some have moved away, leaving about sixteen members in all. Our weekly prayer meeting is kept up, and I find it good to go there. About three miles from here, at Arena, we can hear preaching by Eld. Geo. Thomsom, who is an earnest worker in the ministry, though laboring under much trial and suffering. May God ever bless the poor lame preacher, who is rich in faith. I would that all Christians would labor as earnestly as he and his church do. How can we expect to win sinners to repentance when Christians will not do their part? If we love God, feel that he loves us in return, and then we are blessed in striving to live for him, let us not be backward in telling it to others.

From J. Mc D. Mitchell, Arkansas.

Having received the TIMES, a welcome visitor to me and my little family, I can say it has caused the scales to drop off my eyes, and explained that which I never thought of before; and now I can thank God that I have seen the truth as it is in Jesus, and am led to believe it with all my heart. Now I can rejoice that I am freed from the traditions of my fathers, and the Platonism of this day. I was at a meeting some distance from here not long since. When the services broke up, I gave the preacher a number of the TIMES, and asked him to read it. He read a little and then handed it back to me. I asked him how he liked it, Oh! he reckoned it would do. Then I asked him to subscribe for it. No, his Bible would do for him.

Another brother was reading the paper, when he says, "Br. Mitchell, this teaches that man has got no immortality this side of the judgment!" Well, said I, is not that what the Bible teaches? He said it was not: that his Bible taught him that he had a never-dying soul to save. He said, "Of course this mortal will put on immortality at the resurrection, or judgment." Then I asked him if that was not proof enough that he had no immortality now? Then the preacher remarked that "if we did not have it within us, we never could put it on!" I told him I was certain that we did not have it within us, for the Bible taught me better than that. It teaches me that through faith and obedience we obtain the promise of it; and that we shall not receive the gift until the last day, or at our Lord's coming. They both turned from me and walked off, saying, that they knew that they did have immortal souls. I told them, that was a sorry way to prove it. At first I had a "right smart" crowd around me; but only one stayed to hear what I had to say. I gave him the paper. He said he was a Methodist. I have heard from him since, as about to turn Adventist. Just one copy of the TIMES did it. Thank God that there is some few out of the many called who will receive the word gladly.

Brethren, pray for us. Pray also for them that are running to and fro, that their knowledge may be increased to see the truth as it is in Jesus, and many led to rejoice that the coming kingdom is near at hand.

Keep to the Right.

BY M. S.

There's a path of wrong, and a path of right,
Which opes to each child at its morning light:
In the early morn of its youthful days,
Oh, keep to the right, to the right always.

Each dear little child of promise so bright,
Like a sweet rosebud unfolding in light,
May add to the bud the grace of the rose,
And be fairer far, as older it grows.

Then keep to the right, each dear little child;
Strive for a spirit that's gentle and mild,
Say, "Mamma I,ll do whatever you say,
And thus I'll be good, and happy alway."

Lesson from a Pin.

"Mother, I want a pin," said Henry, "please give me one."

"I see one glistening on the carpet at your feet," his mother replied; "you have only to stoop and pick it up."

"O I just threw that away"—with a gesture of contempt—"it's crooked."

"Couldn't you straighten it, my son?"

"Don't know; don't want to bother," mutters Henry.

"My little son must not feel it a trouble to convert a useless thing into a useful one at any time. When it is done so easily too."

"Pins are nothing," continued the boy, "you can buy a whole paper for ten cents, mother."

"True, Henry. Yet, if you could visit one of the large pin manufactories, either in England or in this country, and see what numbers of hands are employed, and how many processes have to be gone through with before that little article is finished, you would never again despise a pin. Hand me the crooked pin."

Henry picked it up and passed it to his mother, who straightened it with her fingers in a moment, and then laid it on her hand with three or four others, saying to him, "There, you may have them all, if you will tell which is the crooked one."

"I can't," returned Henry with a smile, "there is no difference now, they are all straight. I didn't think it could be done so easily; I will try it myself another time."

"Do; it may help you to something higher."

"I believe, mother, cried Henry growing enthusiastic, that I'll go round hunting for crooked pins, on purpose to straighten them."

"It is my opinion that wouldn't pay," said his mother, smiling in her turn, "and you could do better. However, as I just now intimated, the habit of straightening a pin for use might lead to straightening things of more importance. There are little faults of character, Henry—crooked things; if you say, O, they're such small things—of no account, instead of taking pains to straighten them, it will always be the worse for you and others. And the longer you allow this kind of a crooked thing to stay crooked, the more difficult will the straightening be, until at length this Scripture will be entirely true of it—"What is crooked cannot be made straight."—Sel.

The Cold Water Boy.

Behold a table with boiled turkey and ham, with vegetables nicely cooked and gravies rich and juicy. There sits a father at its head and the mother opposite and guests are seated on either side; there is no lack of good humor, and merry jest to give spice to the conversation.

There are children too: a boy of ten and a little girl of eight. They listen intelligently and attentively to the remarks of parents and guests, and look up into the faces of one another with interest. Behold, decanters are brought in; glasses are filled, and one and another sip the sparkling wine.

"Excellent!" exclaimed one smacking his lips. "Fine!" echoed another, with glass refilled.

"Shall I drink wine with you, my lad?" asked one of the gentlemen, bowing to the boy.

"Is not your glass filled, William?" asked the father. "John, fill William's glass," turning to the servant. Slowly did William turn up his glass to receive the rosy liquor.

"Drink with the gentleman, my dear," whispered the mother encouragingly. The boy blushed and cast down his eyes, but he obeyed not. Was he frightened? Was he diffident?

"My son, did you not hear Mr. Black address you?" said the father quickly and sternly.

"Drink wine with him, William."

Accustomed to obey his father's slightest wish, the boy's lip quivered, but he obeyed not.

In a moment, raising his eyes and looking his father full in the face, he said manfully,

"Father, I am a soldier in the Cold Water Army, and I can't drink wine."

"Brave boy," exclaimed one of the gentlemen, setting down his glass.

"The Cold Water Army must conquer if every soldier stands his ground as well," said another, regarding William with great respect.

"We will excuse you, my son," said the father in a softened voice, and though they sat long at the table, his glass was not again raised to his lips. There it stood, untasted and full. Yes, the cold water ranks can boast of other soldiers as brave as William.

Stand firm my boys; let no one beat you from your ground. Be up and doing. Intemperance is stealing about seeking whom it may devour. Break his weapons, destroy his engines, give him no quarter.

"COLD WATER! COLD WATER!"

Let this shout of triumph be heard all over the land, from city and hamlet, from mountain and glen.

Cold water! cold water and victory!
—Young Pilgrim.

Felix, the Martyr.

The most excruciating tortures were frequently inflicted on many of the ancient Christians who refused to deliver up their copies of the Scriptures to the heathen; but all kinds of suffering and even death itself were nobly braved by many Christian worthies, to whom the book of God was more precious than life. Felix, an African, being apprehended as a Christian, was commanded by the civil magistrate of the city, to deliver up all books and writings belonging to his church, that they might be burned. The martyr replied that it was better he himself should be burned. The magistrate therefore sent him to the Pro-Consul at Carthage, by whom he was delivered over to the Prefect of the Prætorium, who was then in Africa. This supreme officer, offended at this bold and candid confession, commanded him to be loaded with heavier bolts and irons; and after having been kept in a close and miserable dungeon nine days, ordered him to be put on board a vessel, saying he should stand his trial before the Emperor. In this voyage he lay for four days ander the hatches of the ship, between the horses' feet, without eating or drinking. He was landed at Agragentum, in Sicily: and when brought by the Prefect as far as Venosa, in Apulia, his irons were knocked off, and he was again asked whether he had the Scriptures, and would deliver them up. "I have them," said he, "but will not part with them." On making this assertion, he was instantly condemned to be beheaded. "I thank, thee, O Lord," exclaimed this faithful and heroic martyr, "that I have lived fifty-six years, have preserved the gospel, and have preached the faith and truth. O my Lord Jesus Christ, the God of heaven and and earth, I bow my head to be sacrificed to thee, who liveth to eternity.—British Workman.

Obituary.

[illegible].—Died, at my residence in Lexington, Mich., Friday, April 19, 1872, my father, Geo. Wright, Sr.; aged 74 years, 6 months, 13 days.

Eld. Bathrick, F. W. Baptist, preached an earnest, truthful and touching discourse in the Baptist house. Text: Mat. 25:23—"Well done, good and faithful servant," &c.

"We sorrow not as those who have no hope."

BRIMHALL.—In McKean Township, April 16, of Paralysis, Sr. Brimhall; aged 78 years.

One by one we pass to that bourne from whence we are assured we shall return with rejoicing, and crowns of fadeless light. None have known this cheerful saint of God in her life, but rejoice in her happy, heavenly themes; and when she fell, it was in a moment, but the sweet, calm, heavenly smile bathed her features with an untold beauty. Such a sweet face I never beheld on a person of her years.

The mourning ones have the warm sympathy of numerous friends.

The subject of a few thoughts on the occasion was "How say some among you that there is no resurrection from the dead?" (1 Cor. 15.)

"Time hastens on, soon the morning will dawn,
When the King shall in glory descend;
He will shortly appear and wipe every tear,
From his dear mourning children who weep."

Crisis please copy. J. A. N.

PATTERSON.—Fell asleep in Jesus on the morning of April 18, 1872, John Richard, son of Richard and Mary Patterson, of Utica, Minn.; aged 13 years, 2 months and 3 days.

His last sickness was very trying, being attended with severe pain, which he bore with Christian patience and fortitude. He spoke calmly of his death, divided his little property among his friends for mementoes, when his voice should be hushed in silence. Within a few days of his death, after suffering excruciating pain, as soon as a little easy, he commenced singing the "Rock of ages." He sang the first verse down to the last line—which came forth from his bright lips with such feeling and force that it so wrought upon [illegible] father's feelings that he left the room. But [illegible] continued on and sang the next verse.

"Save from wrath and make me pure,"

After mortification set in he [illegible] Jesus was his friend, and he should come [illegible] the morning of the resurrection. While thus [illegible] with death he sang the beautiful and appropriate hymn—

"Shall we meet beyond the river,
Where the surges ne'er shall roll,
Where in all the bright forever,
Sorrow ne'er shall pierce the soul?"

On the 10th a large number of friends assembled at his parent's home, where I offered a short prayer when the friends formed themselves into a procession with the relatives of the deceased and followed the remains to the place of worship in Utica village, where a discourse was delivered to a large congregation by the writer, from Job 19: 13, 25, 26, after which we followed to the grave the precious dust which was there to await the time when the Redeemer shall come and again stand upon the earth, and speak the life-giving word to the buried dead. Then this lamb of the flock shall be gathered into the fold of the great Shepherd, and wander with him to living fountains of water that will never run dry, where we shall meet our loved and buried dead in Christ beyond the river, where the surges cease to roll. RUTH M. ROWELL.

Book Notices, Etc.

THE Lakeside. Though noticed thus late, it came early to our table, the blooming May-flower of Western Literature. The Lakeside is now a settled fact—a success. We note in the present table of contents among others, the following articles as of special interest; "Sir Charles Dilke at Home; the Science of Lying; the License system of Taxation; California Savages. The Editorial departments are well sustained.

KING Alcohol; impeached, convicted, and would we could say executed, also. This is an address by Rev. C. H. Fowler, of this city, upon the new liquor law of this State, and is an ably prepared and exceedingly valuable document. No temperance man can do without it. We feel obliged to Carpenter & Sheldon, publishers of "the Chicago Pulpit," for a copy.

"INTER-OCEAN" is the name of Chicago's new paper. It makes a handsome appearance, its department heads are well chosen, and well filled with choice matter. Its tone is moderate, but firm and decided. It is Republican in politics, and committed to the principles and interests of that party. It bids fair to take the place in Chicago occupied by the Times in New York. It is published at 20c. a week, or ten dollars a year by mail.

Address: "The Inter Ocean," 14 Congress St., Chicago.

THE American Tract Society, 150 Nassau St, New York, will send their illustrated Weekly the remainder of the present year for one dollar. The last number contains a fine picture (portrait) of "the Jubilee Singers," from the Freedmen's College in Tennessee. By the way, we learn on the best authority that some of the young men of this band of singers, having accidentally fallen in with a copy of "Constable," are deeply and favorably impressed with our views of the nature of man and his future. We commend the Weekly, with their pictures, to all.

REFORMATION AND REVOLUTION: Fifty Aphorisms; by J. J. Van Oosterzee, Professor of Theology in the University of Utrecht, Holland; translated by E. Vanorden; heavy tinted paper pamphlet 25c; Carpenter & Sheldon, Publishers, Chicago. These Aphorisms formed the basis of a two days discussion by the last Evangelical Alliance at Amsterdam, and have been criticised or commended by the leading theologians of Europe. Their translation here will be welcomed by all who are interested in kindred subjects. The eminence and well known ability of Van Oosterzee entitle his condensed views upon the dangers and needs of Protestantism to unusual consideration. They show great care and research, and some of them will provoke severe criticism.

Notices, Etc.

To the Churches co-operating with the N. Y. State Conference:

Have you all made your statement, as requested, to our Secretary, in his last report. If not, please give him the name of your minister, the number of members in your church, its service, how, when and where held; and such other information as may be of interest or necessary to carry into practical effect the tabulation of our Conference statistics.

Will some brother or sister in each church do this without delay. Direct to Wm. E. Brown, South Butler, Wayne Co., N. Y. D. COGSWELL.

Indiana Tent.

Brethren in Northern Indiana who have subscribed towards this enterprise are notified that the money is needed as the canvass is already out. Those who have not subscribed are notified that their assistance is needed. Shall we not manifest a zeal worthy of the cause in which we have engaged? E. C. ANDRUS.

To the Brethren.

I am engaged in preparing a work, designed especially for the ministry, on the importance and necessity of preaching the second coming of Christ, as an event nigh at hand. My object is, in cooperation with the brethren, to have a copy placed in the hands of every minister of the gospel in the United States. All can see the importance of such an enterprise. If one only out of five hundred could be induced to give the trumpet a certain sound, it would pay for the labor and outlay. Of course, it will not be expected that those for whom the work is designed, will purchase it. This will be the work of our brethren all over the country to see that a copy is placed in the hands of every preacher of the gospel.

I propose then to request pledges and subscriptions from the brethren, in order to secure its publication, the amount subscribed to be repaid in books, if required. The nature of the work may be gleaned from the following outline:

The Christian minister—a watchman; the duties of a watchman; Watchman, what of the night? The time of the end; Signs of the times—Fulfillment of Prophecy; Prophecy in relation to the First Advent; Prophecy in relation to the Second Advent; Signs of the Second Advent, Celestial, Terrestial, Moral, National. The Papacy, Spiritism, Time, Tarrying Time, etc., etc.

I would also state that the work will be useful to all for reference, as it will be largely interspersed with Scripture quotations. Any who may feel disposed to aid in this enterprise, may address Miles Grant or G. T. Adams, Crisis office, Boston, Mass.; J. V. Himes, TIMES office, Chicago, Ill.; or myself at Arena, Wis.

[n54tf] GEO. THOMSON.

PLEDGES.

Jos. Laclar, $10.

Notice.

As our next Q. M. is in a new field, let there be a general gathering of the brethren and sisters. Come to work for God with hearts imbued with the love of God, and prepared to work in and give a new impetus to the cause we love.

The Campmeeting Committee are especially requested to be present to decide when and where the Campmeeting shall be held, next August or September. We wish the Committee to examine the several places already viewed, and decide which they will choose. The Committee are: D. A. Dickinson, D. Moore, I. Cooley, D. R. Lewis, A. G. Lewis, M. V. Plank.

F. H. KENNY,
Chairman Campmeeting Committee.

To the Advent Christians of Iowa:

Dear Brethren: We have bought a tent for our Conference use, and have paid for it except about FORTY DOLLARS. We had enough subscribed to pay for it entirely; but some of the subscribers proved delinquents, and do not even respond to my letters. What shall be done? Shall our tent lie unused all Summer? Who will take the trouble to look up those who promised to pay and have not done so? Who will collect the balance due, and then take the tent and go forth in the name of the Lord, to proclaim the gospel of the kingdom. It is time we began to wake up to this matter. D. A. DICKINSON.

WISCONSIN.

The annual camp-meeting of Wisconsin will be held on the on the old camp ground at Prairie du Sac, Sauk Co., beginning June 1, and holding over two Sundays. We shall make an effort to have Br. Grant with us this year, and hope to be successful. Other new ministers are expected, as well as the home preachers. Let all come with hearts fired with heavenly zeal, and let us have the greatest rally from every point that Wisconsin has ever witnessed. We expect a glorious meeting, and a time of God's power. Let none fail to come because of a little sacrifice. If the Jews were required to leave home, and live in tents seven days in the year to worship God, we can also afford to, if we say to the world, "Get behind me, while I go up yonder to worship."

Advertising alone does not produce success. The thing which is advertised must have intrinsic merit, or else large advertising will eventually do it more harm than good. If you have anything which you know to be good, advertise it thoroughly, and you will be sure to succeed; if it is poor, don't praise it, for people will soon discover you are lying.

Such is the policy of the Burlington Route, which runs to three great regions in the West: 1st, to Omaha, connecting with the great Pacific Roads. 2d, To Lincoln, the capital of Nebraska, and all that beautiful region south of the Platte, filled with R. R. lands and homesteads. 3d, To St. Joseph, Kansas City and all Kansas points.

The roads are splendidly built, have the best bridges, finest cars, the Miller platform and coupler, and the safety air brake (to prevent the loss of life that is everywhere else happening); Pullman's sleepers Pullman dining cars, large and powerful engines (to make quick time and good connections), and are in a word the best equipped roads in the West. So that if you desire to go safely, surely, quickly and comfortably to any point in Southern Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, or on the Pacific Roads, be sure that you go "By way of Burlington."

E. H. WHEELER'S
IMPROVED
AXLE & THIMBLE SKEIN
PATENTED JAN. 12, 1872.

THE LIGHTEST, STRONGEST, AND BEST AXLE BEFORE THE PUBLIC.

Less liable to break, and cannot spring under any amount of weight that can be put upon it.

It takes a smaller sized axle and bolster or sand-board than the same sized skeins of common style; is more simple and easier to fit, the skein being of uniform taper, without shoulders upon the inside a better fit is secured. The axle can be turned in a common lathe to fit the thimble, by putting one end out of center.

The arm, or spindle, is so made as to secure the proper set of the wheels, when moderately dished, with the bottom line of the spindle on a parallel line to the bottom of the axle, an important principle never before attained. The set of the wheels is a perpendicular or right angle to the bottom line of the axle upon the face of the spokes, upon their lower half.

This cut shows the thimble and lug for the tension rod across the bottom of the axle, from thimble to thimble, and the socket for the bottom, or the sand-board, as the case may be. I also use a sand guard to keep the dirt out of the shoulder of the hub; but it is not shown in this cut.

to every minister of the gospel of any denomination who will send us his address, or otherwise signify his desire to receive it.

We request the readers of the TIMES to aid us in presenting this offer to such ministers as are devoted men of God, and who would probably accept, and be benefitted thereby.

Do not urge any one to accept, for we have not the means, at present, to send very many papers free, but trust the Lord will provide enough to send it where it should go to prepare the way for our weekly papers, and stir up the watchman to sound the alarm to a guilty world. A copy of the Banner from one with whom the minister is acquainted is worth a dozen sent by mail from the office of publication.

THE BANNER AND TIMES.

We will send the Banner six months free to all new subscribers to the TIMES, and to all old subscribers who mention this offer when they remit (to TIMES office) for 1872. We make one condition to this offer, viz, before the close of the six months they must either notify us to discontinue, or remit for the future, as soon as convenient.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, May 14, 1872.

Warleigh's "Demonstaation."

Selections made for THE TIMES by C

Says Rev. Henry S. Warleigh, Rector of Aschurch, Tewkesbury, England, in his very recent work entitled A Demonstration of the Extinction of Evil Persons and Evil Things: It is to the glory of the church of England that she expunged the doctrine of endless miseries for the wicked from her Articles; and by her supreme court she has formally declared that she disowns it; and it is high time that some one, regardless of his interests and the esteem of his fellows, should boldly proclaim that those of her ministers who reach it have no legal standing within her pale any right to eat her bread. (p. 7.).

After the second death there will be no prospect of resurrection, nothing but endless extinction; by which the wicked become as though they had never been. (p. 25.)

It is the extinction of the wicked in which we believe; and this makes all the difference in argument. Annihilation is the destruction of the particles of which a thing is composed; extinction is the destruction of the parts of a thing; so that it ceases to be what it was: and when we apply this word to a human being, we mean that the parts of his wondrous organism are separated and destroyed; and he is an organized, living man no longer, though the particles of which the parts were composed still exist. (pp. 26–7.)

When, in the great assize, the sentence of death is passed upon the then resuscitated sinner, he will be destroyed as a living man: his life will be brought to an end. He will live no longer, and the process by which this is brought about is called in Scripture, 'destruction.' This brings the unconverted man to an end, as man. It is the total and final extinction of his life, though not the annihilation of the particles of which he was composed. (p. 20.)

Now what is our duty as Christians but just to believe what God tells us in his Book, whether we have before believed or not? We are guilty of amazing presumption if we believe or teach that he does not mean what his words naturally and lexically do mean; for that we have received the philosophical heathen dogma, that man cannot die, that he must necessarily live as long as God himself lives. What is this but rationalism, and the very corruption and false philosophy against which St. Paul so solemnly warns us? And we are equally guilty if we plead that we have been taught the contrary to this natural meaning by our great and learned divines. What is this but making the tradition of the Christian elders the standard of our faith, just as the Rabbies, Scribes and Pharisees made the tradition of the Jewish elders the standard of theirs? And when any, who, with humble prayer, seek their faith from the word af God alone, and who read, mark, scan and inwardly digest that, try to point this out, the teachers of popular Christianity stop their ears, and call us infidels and heretics. But the cloud of dust which they cast at us, judicially blinds their own eyes! Will they suffer us to entreat them to pursue a different course? (pp. 26–7.)

It is one of the greatest difficulties to clear our minds and conceptions from the meshes in which they have been so long entangled. The perplexity arising from this is the greater in as much as our literature is involved and held fast as in a net, while—to make the difficulty greater still—they who try to correct the misconceptions and bring back theological modes to the Bible, and to the primitive standard, are counted as ignorant heretics, whose aims are to introduce skepticism and rationalism instead of faith. The Reformation did a mighty work toward clearing our ideas, and Luther wished to extend it to the corrupted doctrine concerning the ultimate state of the wicked. But one man could not do everything; and what he and his fellow reformers left unfinished, their followers have not completed. Hence, our present ecclesiastical and doctrinal complications. The Church of England did a great work in purging her Articles from the dogma of endless torments, but her ministers have contrived to neutralize her efforts by their unscriptural teaching; and yet they eat her bread. (p. 42.)

Let these passages be impartially considered; and, further, that there is not a single passage in the whole Bible of an opposite tendency, and who will undertake to say that the Scriptural idea of unquenchable fire is an endlessly burning flame: as if that which was cast into it was ever being devoured, but never burnt up? The true idea is, that whatever was subjected to it should not be rescued from the flames, but should be utterly and endlessly destroyed. It is not an endless process, but an endless result. One would think that the text we are examining would of itself be sufficient to point this out. It speaks of chaff being subjected to the fire. What is the action of fire upon chaff? Is it that it is preserved in the fire? Is it that it is endlessly burning and never burnt up? It is really too absurd to be entertained for a moment. Why then do otherwise sensible persons say, that the meaning is that the wicked shall ever be burning in hell fire, but never burnt up; endlessly living and writhing in flames. They who hold this, must hold also, that the revealing Spirit has used a strangely inapt figure to teach us his mind, if this is his idea. Here is chaff cast into the fire; it is burnt up so that it is chaff no longer; and our opponents say that represents wicked men, who shall be thrown into hell fire, where they shall not be burnt up like chaff, but where, as living conscious, sensitive men, they shall live, and be ever burning, yet never burnt. It is this wretched handling of the Bible which has brought it into disrepute among unbelievers at home, and among civilized, educated heathen abroad. And yet we pretend to lament the little success the gospel meets with. It is time that the eyes of the public should be opened, and that ignorance and hypocrisy should be unmasked. To speak flattering, pleasant words would be unfaithfulness to God and his truth, and we will not use them while his word is so abused and distorted. Mat. 3: 12, then, teaches that the wicked shall become like burnt up chaff; and it thus stands in harmony with all the rest of the holy oracles. (pp. 44–5.)

Let no one fear to believe what God reveals, and let him not prostitute the common rules of literary interpretation, and his common sense, to the traditions of men. (p. 78.) (To be continued.) C.

What I Know about Adventists.

Although not personally acquainted with many Adventists, yet I have been among people of that faith frequently, and have noticed with some surprise, one of the peculiar objections that is forever being introduced to the doctrines which Adventists believe to be part of "the faith once delivered to the saints." If "an outsider" may speak of the impression made upon him in looking over the various denominations now in the field and claiming to be the elect, he certainly must endorse the words of one, who, though not a member of any sect, has given considerable thought to the evidences and doctrines of Christianity, and said, "if we care for Scriptural authority in doctrine, the Adventists stand upon firmer ground than any of their opponents."

But the objection alluded to, and strenuously insisted upon,—is, that if the doctrine teaching the absolute destruction of the wicked is held to, and their eternal conscious torment denied, it gives wicked people a license to do wickedly, and places before them a less motive to godliness than the orthodox doctrine furnishes, and that in consequence the church will have fewer accessions to its membership, and the number of them who shall one day walk with him in white will be greatly diminished.

It is proper always to judge of doctrines by their fruits. But I fancy this objection arises from a very superficial examination of the results of Advent teaching, or may be from no examination at all.

Certain it is that if the doctrines concerning the nature of man, immortality, the future of the wicked, etc., as taught by Adventists, are productive of mischief, we should be justified in expecting that the views considered so orthodox, and so opposed to those, ought to be working a great reform among men, and rapidly bringing in that day when all men shall know the Lord.

From one generation to another the doctrines of eternal life in misery has been the theme of countless sermons and personal exhortations, until if there were virtue in it, the world ought to be better than it is, and Christian people who profess to believe it, ought to be more zealous under its influence. Yet scarcely one can be found who believes that the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ is making that rapid advance into, and victory over the dark places of the earth which we believe it ought to make, when we remember that "the Word of the Lord is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword."

Eighteen centuries have been sufficient to establish Christianity over but a small portion of the earth, and even many of the conquests once made are now lost. Both Mohammedanism and Paganism prevail now where Christians once dwelt. The question then arises, what restricts Christianity to this small proportion of the inhabitants of the earth? How comes it that among the enlightened upon whom the popular theory of immortality (which is so free from anything gross!) and future punishment (so exquisite and refined!) has been urged as part of the word of God—in which eternal blessedness is said to be placed in the alternative with eternal misery—so few make their election to be on the safe side? Whatever circumlocution may be indulged in on this subject, the plain truth is that men do not—cannot believe such a fearful doctrine, and regarding it as untrue they risk the whole matter, and at heart believe that God will, somehow, save them at least from such a woful end, and they unconsciously, but not the less certainly, dismiss the matter from their thoughts.

This is the result of teaching the popular doctrine concerning the destiny of the race, and it is because these things are not taught in the Bible that the preaching of to-day is so ineffectual and leads so few to a better liife.

The word of God is the powerful messenger that is to be used in the conversion of the world. But when men promulgate heathen traditions, and Platonism is taught instead of the truth as it is in Jesus, the church need not wonder that its growth is impeded and worldliness increasing.

This sad state of affairs is nowhere more evident than among those who cry loudest against Adventism, and who predict a flood of iniquity if their doctrine is taught.

In my inquiries among Christians, of what are usually termed Evangelical denominations, I have found them ready to admit that Adventists are, as a rule, good people,—that they are among the most earnest and self-denying workers in every good cause,—they never call names, nor consider themselves the depositories of the Divine will,—it is not their way to describe other professing Christians as blasphemers or infidels; but wherever there is a good work to be done, children to be taught, misery to be relieved, or any cause of liberty and progress to be helped, there the Adventists are to be found without a thought of sect or self. Can an evil tree bring forth good fruit?

And yet how the hands are lifted in horror and fear settles upon the hearts of people if Advent doctrines are explained or taught. When I have looked upon the Advent people and perceived the spirit they manifest and how they abound in good works—that they are generous with their means, and following the example of him by whom all Christians profess to be guided, I have been constrained to say "what I know about Adventists."

A BAPTIST.

The Graves Were Opened

Many curious questions have been asked about this, but we shall know it all by and by. We cannot tell whose graves were opened, but the word of God says, "Many bodies of the saints which slept arose," &c. I do not think it likely that they died again: Christ was soon to go up, and it appears seemly that He should be accompanied by trophies; and I believe that amidst the shout, "lift up your heads, ye everlasting gates," &c.,were the voices of the saints who arose from their graves.

Here we learn the condition of departed saints—they rest: no terror or fright disturbs them, for they sleep in Jesus. There is nothing injurious in sleep—it is not a permanent state—the saints will not sleep always. We see also these saints had an interest in our living Lord. Our loved ones in the tomb have as much interest in him as we have—death makes no difference.

We are not told of any communications these saints made to those to whom they appeared; so, on the Mount of Transfiguration, Moses and Elias did not relate what was passing above.

The saints of old had an interest in Christ's death—those who trusted him while looking forward, as well as those who trust him looking backwards. We see by these saints rising from their graves, that Christ unlocked the door of the grave for others as well as for himself.

Every man shall rise from the dead in the last day, but every man will not rise by the same power or principal. The believer rises by virtue of his union with Christ. The resurrection of Christ is the seed of the resurrection of his people—the seminal of the glorious harvest. The wicked will rise by virtue of the mandate of the Judge.

May we be found not summoned to appear before the Judge, but rising in union with Jesus, to receive the crown of glory and joy which his blood has purchased!

Christ is "the first born from the dead"—a strange place to take birth from! Our glorious Christ took human life from the blessed virgin; on the altar of the cross he laid that down. He never took it again, but rose in power of divine life. He took life from the tomb, where sin had consigned our life.

After his resurrection, Christ spoke of his "flesh and bones;" he never spake of his blood—that was the life, and he had laid that down. Therefore the "gift of God is eternal life in Jesus Christ our Lord.

Remember these three things:—Sin is the strength of the law: the blood of Jesus is the strength of the gospel: and the resurrection of Christ is the strength of faith. If Christ be not raised our faith is vain; but blessed be God, "He is raised from the dead," and all believers are saved.—The British Herald.

The Effort—The "Good Tidings."

Believing that the great and glorious bible truths held by us as a people ought to be more widely disseminated, it was proposed at the National Conference, held more than two years ago, that a book should be written by brethren selected for the purpose, which should present some of the doctrines that have been so obscured by tradition as to have been lost sight of by the church; embracing, however, only such as seemed essential, and might prove the most interesting and instructive. There was considerable delay in preparing and publishing it, but early in September an edition of two thousand was published, and is now nearly exhausted. But it is very desirable they should go out much faster.

"Good Tidings" is a book that should be extensively read by others than Adventists. As publisher, I have arranged to have them sold at a much reduced rate. It is quite certain there are now thousands who would readily buy the book at the price it is now offered, if they knew of it, or if presented to them. If brethren in the different places would make a little effort, very many could be introduced, with promise of the best results. As comparatively few have seen it, I will give the subjects of the thirteen chapters:—The destiny of the earth—The time of reward—The resurrection of the just—The nature of man—What is the soul?—What is the Spirit?—The intermediate state—The Bible doctrine of future punishment—Prophecy, nature and objects—The metalic image—Exposition of Dan. 11—The four angels—Exposition of seventeenth of revelation.

The subject of prophecy, which to many seems more difficult to understand, is here presented in such clearness and simplicity, that its design, I am sure, in all its grandeur and beauty will easily appear. And other subjects that are so ably treated, are of the very first importance. Now, pray do not say that the book probably contains nothing new to Adventists. It was not written and published for Adventists, but for others, and will you not assist in obtaining readers for it? Can we not by use of good publications do much to correct the erronious views that prevail, and thus cause thousands more to rejoice in the blessed hope? Certainly much has been and is now being accomplished, but we must double our efforts.

I see that the price of most books now published, of this size and binding, is from $1.25, to $2. The price of this, single or by the doz., is given by the Business Agent; but if any wish for a larger number they can make inquiry of me as to terms.

A DISCUSSION

BETWEEN

Eld. Clark Braden, of the Christian Church, and Eld. Himes, of the Advent Christian Times.

Upon Four Propositions, Involving the Nature of Man, the State of the Dead, and Future Rewards and Punishments.

CLARK BRADEN'S NINTH LETTER

We will commence this letter by noticing, briefly, what is worthy of notice in Eld Himes' two last responses. I repeat my assertion that analuo does not properly mean return. It means almost the same as our English leave, or rather leave for the purpose of returning. It is so used in Lk. 12:36. It means "leave the wedding," as the use of come in the connection clearly shows. Return and come would be toutology. But Paul speaks of his death in 2 Tim. 5:6 as an analusis. Does he mean return? Does he say the time of my return at the resurrection is at hand? No, he means his departure to be with Christ. So in Philippians, he speaks of death as a departure to be with Christ. It is a departure, and an immediate being with Christ. My opponent may writhe over this, but he is impaled beyond release. My opponent's attempt to avoid the argument based on the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus, is based on a palpable fallacy. He confounds fable and parable. Jotham's address to his fellow-townsmen was a fable. There is just the same difference between a parable and a fable that there is between a novel and a fable. A novel must be true to life, and not improbable. It must detail in its fictitious combination only what does occur in real life. I do not teach that the wicked in the intermediate state are enduring literal fire. I distinctly warned my readers against this fallacy. Because the fire is not literal; the existence and punishment of the wicked is not real. Because the pavement of the New Jerusalem is not literal and gold, the existence and happiness of the righteous is not real.

Such is the weak attempt to set to one side our argument. His objection that if the wicked are now being punished, the day of judgment is a farce, is very weak. Are not criminals confined until trial? Is not such confinement a punishment? Is it not a consequence of their conduct, and a punishment? But just as the sentence after trial is the full and final reward, so will the penalty inflicted at judgment be the full and final reward of the wicked. His appeals to the stock passages of soul-sleepers—their gospel of revelation, Eccl. 3 and 9, shall be attended to when we reach it legitimately, which will be in discussing the second proposition. I here pledge myself to storm that citadel of soul sleeping, spike the guns, and raze it to the foundation. Our Savior sanctioned so much of Pharisaic ideas as he quoted and used. He never quoted nor used the non-resurrection of the wicked, nor the materiality of the soul. Nor were these Pharisaic ideas! He did quote and sanction their teachings of resurrection, judgment, intermediate state, and the consciousness of the spirits of the departed dead. So much then for this weak attempt to set aside the argument on the account of the Rich Man and Lazarus. Now Peter does say that God cast down the angels who sinned into Tartarus. Will Eld. Himes deny it? Jude does say that the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah are with them. Dare he deny this? Jude does not say they are now engaged in their sins committed on this earth. Then are not the devils in Tartarus and the spirits of the Sodomites with them in Tartarus?

As to whether I have proved anything or not, I am content to let my readers decide. Br. Himes is not judge and jury, but simply an attorney, who has a very hard case to plead. His long disquisition reminds me of an embarrassed urchin in a backwoods debating club, who arises with hands both jammed down to the bottom of his pantaloon pockets, and mumbles out, "Mr. President, them air fellers on 'tother side haint said nothin'," simply because he has nothing else to say. I wonder he did not call for the phrase "immortal soul" again. I think I have cured him of that. I will call attention to what I confess I cannot understand. After quoting my declaration, "It is now agreed by both parties that God's purpose in Ex. 3:6 was to declare to Moses his existing relation to the patriarchs;" he says that when I introduced the passage I was careful to declare, "Mark, I do not say that this was the intention of the passage: nor that Moses so understood it." Now a more gross perversion and misstatement of my language could not be made. He asserts that I said that it was not the purpose of God to declare his relation to the patriarchs. I asserted that was his purpose! I said that it was not God's purpose to affirm the conscious existence of the patriarchs. Cannot my opponent apprehend the difference between an affirmation of a relation between persons, and the affirmation of the existence of the persons, after all my explanation?

If he cannot, I can only console myself with the thought that is my business to furnish arguments, and no part of it to furnish intelligence to apprehend them. Whether my statement that when God said, "I am the God," of the consciously existing or living Isaac, and the God of Abraham, Abraham must have had as real an existence as Isaac; for the copula and could not be used in the literal sense of actual existence, and the proliptic sense of future existence at the same time, be trifling or not; I leave to our readers to determine. My opponent's illustration is not analogous. One of my boys is dead. I can say I am the father of Winthrop Braden, if he is now consciously existing. If his existence is extinguished, if he is a nonentity, I cannot say I am his father; I can only say I was his father when he existed. I am not unless he exists. I am not the father of a nonentity. Thank God I do not so read my Bible. Br. Himes, every unprejudiced reader concedes that on that argument you are utterly overthrown. Now cease such ignorant or willful misrepresentation of my position, as I have just exposed; or they will lose all the respect for you they still retain. He wants me to explain "love the Lord with all thy soul, heart, mind, and strength." It means love the Lord with all our affections, mental faculties, and power of spirit; or to love him with all the affections, powers and faculties of spirit.

He says Paul's spirit was his mind. What was his mind? A function of body or spirit? Now, which? 'Dividing soul and spirit' means dividing life and being. Indeed! The word of God divides the life from the being: "When my spirit or breath of life [then spirit means breath of life] is taken away from my soul [body that must be], it is a dead soul." Then mind is breath of life, and Paul's breath of life was stirred in him! He had the cholic doubtless! "God Jesus receive my breath of life!" "The breath of life is willing, but the flesh is weak!" "Who knoweth the things of a man, but the breath of life that is in him." Enough of this definition of spirit. If he falls back on his definition of mind, I insist that he tells us what mind is. Is it an entity or a function? If a function, a function of what? Body, or breath of life, or of a spirit, or rational conscious entity-spirit like angels and God? He now says that the destruction inflicted by God, mentioned in Mat. 10:28, is after judgment. Then death is not an extinction of conscious being. The persecutors cannot destroy the spirit. They do not extinguish its conscious being. Such was its constitution, that they cannot extinguish its existence, its conscious being. There is no escape from this. I repeat, hades means the abode of spirits always in the New Testament. Sometimes literally. Sometimes figuratively. Just as heaven means abode of angels and God, so hades means abode of spirits.

In reply to his eighth response, I would remind him that our first parents did not know enough to clothe themselves, and the angels did it for them. So says the Bible. How can he reconcile that with his ideas of their extensive acquired knowledge? I leave him to explain. The New Testament does not contradict what the Old reveals. But it reveals a vast deal that the Old does not reveal, but merely dimly foreshadows. His attempted reply to my argument based on 1 Pet. 3 and analogous passages, is not an examination of the passage, but an attempt to array other Scriptures, or rather his deductions from them, against it. David's spirit has ascended. His spirit waits, as Paul tells us in Rom. 8 for the redemption of his body. His spirit is redeemed from hades and made perfect. Heb. 12. Our Savior meant when he addressed the thief, "I say to-day! I say now! I did not say yesterday; or I will not say to-morrow; but I say to-day!" Now neither Greek emphasis nor common sense will tolerate for a moment such nonsense. Did Paradise ever mean Christ's kingdom, either at resurrection or any other time? What did it mean? It meant only the abode of good spirits. The thief was to be with our Savior in the abode of good spirits, and on that day. Neither common sense, nor the meaning of the words, will tolerate for a moment such an idea as "I say to-day to you, you will be with me in my kingdom, thousands of years hence, when I come at the resurrection."

Now in reference to my translation of Pet. 3:18. Christ was put to death "in flesh," not the flesh. Was alive "in spirit," his spirit, just as "flesh" was his flesh. 'Spirit' is not the Holy Spirit, but the Spirit of Christ. The article the is wanting in all the oldest and best MS. It is Christ's flesh and Spirit here spoken of and contrasted. It is not "by which," but in which. In his spirit he went and preached. He preached not to persons, but to spirits. Not to persons on earth, but spirits in prison. The preaching was not done when the ark was preparing, but that was when they were disobedient. As the whole reply hinges on the assumption that 'spirit' is the Holy Spirit, when that is set aside, the whole reply goes with it. The article is wanting before flesh and spirit, and this clearly shows it was Christ's flesh and Christ's Spirit. It was in which—in his Spirit he went and preached.

In regard to his objections based on the ideas of Christology, I reply, I believe there was a perfect human and divine nature in Jesus. A perfect divine spirit or Logos, and a perfect human spirit. I believe that the whole person, Jesus, increased in knowledge, was tempted, suffered, and rose again. The preexistence of the Logos does not affect the question at all. The Spirit of Jesus was separated from his body, went to hades and was conscious. So our spirits are separated from our bodies, and are conscious.

Again do we affirm that physical death was not the penalty of the transgression, for these reasons: 1. Man did not die physically until years, in Adam's case nine hundred and more years afterward. 2. Christ has never saved, and does not save a single being from physical death. Will Br. Himes answer two querries? Did man die the death denounced the day he sinned? Does Christ save men from physical death? In regard to Heb. 11, I will remind my opponent that I stated that not until Christ's ascension were the spirits of the Old Testament saints made perfect. Paul's spirit and that of his brethren were made perfect or redeemed from fear of hades, and together with the Old Testament saints. In conclusion we will remind our readers that his entire argument against our eighth letter is not an attempt to show that our exegesis is wrong, but simply an attempt to array against it his ideas of what other Scriptures teach. And I will merely say that later and the best critics sustain my position. I would cite Lange, Delitsch and Landis, and we might give other critics. As Lange says "the objections to 1 Pet. 3 as we interpret it, are dogmatic, and not exegetical." I say let God be true in the matter, no matter what dogmas fall.

We shall now present our last argument or series of arguments on this proposition. Let the reader bear in mind that at the time of our Savior and his apostles the Jewish people were divided into two great religious and political parties—the Pharisees and the Sadducees. Not only so, but they had been thus divided for generations. These parties had divided the nation, and waged terrible civil wars, which were quelled by the strong hand of the Roman government; and was only held in check in our Savior's day by the same power. Much the larger portion of the nation belonged to the Pharisees, and the minor sects. Essenes and Herodians held with the Pharisees concerning the soul and its consciousness after death. The Pharisees were a former ritualistic class, and great sticklers for the law, or rather traditions with which they had loaded it. Our Savior condemned them for making void the law of God with these traditions. Soul-sleepers often refer to these condemnations, and then try to convey the impression that the views of the Pharisees concerning the future state are the things denounced by our Savior. There is not one particle of truth in the statement. The Pharisees believed in the immortality of the human spirit—its consciousness between death and resurrection—a resurrection of the just and unjust—the eternal felicity of the good, and eternal misery of the wicked in gehenna. They generally believed in an intermediate state between death and resurrection. Among them and the Hebrew people in our Savior's time, sheol and hades meant the state of the dead between death and resurrection. With the mass of the people it was the underworld, and was beneath the earth.

The earth was a vast plain. Above were the heavens—the abode of God and angels. Below was hades or sheol—the abode of evil spirits, and the place of the confinement of the spirits of men until the resurrection. At first these spirits were in a dreamy phantom state, and hence to the Hebrew writers in that day, hades was not a desirable place. In our Savior's day the Hebrews believed in a separation of the spirits in hades or sheol. The good were in Paradise or Abraham's Bosom. The wicked were in Tartarus. Some believed that Paradise was the Garden of Eden, situated to the east of the earth and on the same plane with it; from which man was banished into this world, and the entrance to the garden closed, except to the spirits of the good. Tartarus was located beyond the confines of the earth in gloom and darkness. To this our Savior refers when he uses the phrase "outer darkness." So does John when he says "without are sorcerers," etc. Such was the belief of the mass of the people in our Savior's day. The Sadducees were a wealthy aristocratic and skeptical class of free-thinkers. Though comparatively few, on account of wealth and education, they were formidable rivals of the Pharisees. They generally accepted only the Pentateuch. They denied the existence of angels and the human spirit. Of course, they denied the consciousness of the human spirit after death. With them death was an extinction of all conscious being. When they used the terms sheol, hades, Paradise, Abraham's Bosom, Gehenna and Tartarus, they meant just the same as the Pharisees, and the mass of the people, with this difference. They did not believe their reality.

When our Savior came, as he was regarded as a great Teacher and Prophet, both these parties were anxious to learn how he stood affected toward their peculiar dogmas, and their parties. He condemned both parties for their faults, and pointed out and condemned their faults. He also approved of and accepted all that was good that they taught. Our Savior and his disciples taught that there would be a general judgment. They taught a resurrection of the just and the unjust. In speaking of the state of the dead, and the rewards and punishments of the future life, both before and after the judgment, our Savior and his disciples used the terms, the dialect, and the phraseology of the Pharisees. He speaks of the judgment, resurrection, of Satan and evil spirits who kept not their first estate. He sanctioned and taught the ideas of the Pharisees concerning these matters. My opponent will not deny this. He as frequently and clearly used their terms and phrases concerning the intermediate state, and eternal conscious punishment of the wicked; and he as certainly and as clearly accepted and sanctioned their ideas concerning these matters. If his use of hades, sheol, Paradise, Abraham's Bosom, Tartarus, and the conscious punishment of the wicked in gehenna was merely illustrative, an accommodated use of the terms to impart moral truth, and a figurative use; then his use of their ideas concerning judgment, resurrection, Satan and evil spirits and human spirits, are also merely figurative, an accommodated use for illustration. Will my opponent tell me why Christ did not mean just the same in one case as the other?

Let us now particularize. The Sadducees certainly understood that he was opposed to their ideas, and if to them, he was to modern Sadduceeism, or soul-sleeping, when they came to him with the dilemma concerning the woman who had married seven husbands. In his reply he not only disposed of their dilemma, but by an appeal to the books they accepted, he proved the conscious existence of the spirits of the departed dead; and by that proved the possibility of a resurrection. He then disposed of soul-sleeping in one sentence, and put his divine sanction on the doctrine of the conscious existence of the spirits of the departed dead; and his divine condemnation on the doctrine of the extinction of the consciousness of the human spirit by death. "God is not the God of the dead [such dead as you Sadducees make the dead—those whose conscious being is extinguished—mere non-entities], but he is the God of the living [those who are consciously existing]; hence all [the dead] live [or consciously exist] unto him." The Pharisees and the mass of people who believed with them, were pleased with his answer. They clearly saw and understood that he had forever silenced Sadduceeism. They saw that he believed with them, the resurrection and the consciousness of the spirits of the departed dead. In the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus our Savior used the terms hades, Abraham's Bosom just as the mass of the Jews used them, without any qualification. He spoke of the consciousness of the dead immediately after death, of the intermediate state, and of retribution immediately after death, just as the Jews did; and without one qualifying expression. The mass of the people could understand him in no other way than using and sanctioning these ideas; and he did sanction them, or he was a hypocrite and deceiver.

In his reply to the thief, when hanging on the cross, he used language that to all Jews was susceptible of but one interpretation. Sadducees could understand it just as the Pharisees did, whether they believed it or not. "Verily, I say unto thee, this day thou shalt be with me in Paradise." All Jews present, Sadducee as well as Pharisee, could attach to this language but one meaning—"This day your spirit will be with my spirit in the abode of the spirits of the just or righteous dead." Did our Savior in that awful hour use language in an equivocal sense? Peter, in Acts 2:31 told the Jews that Christ's soul was not left in hades, neither did his flesh see corruption. They would give to it but one meaning, unless Peter explained the language, and by his explanation gave it a different meaning. He did not even hint such an idea, hence he meant just what they could only understand it to mean. "Christ's soul was not left in the abode of the spirits of the departed, nor did his body see corruption in the grave." Such was the only meaning the words could have in ordinary and universally accepted Jewish usage, and such was their meaning, and Peter's intention in using them.

We come now to an important passage, that gives an eternal death blow to soul-sleeping. Were there no other passage in the Bible on the subject,, this one is sufficient to annihilate the doctrine. (Acts 23:6-9.) "Paul, knowing that one part of the council were Sadducees, and another part were Pharisees, cried out in the council, 'Men and brethren, I am a Pharisee, and the son of a Pharisee, and for the hope of the resurrection of dead am I now judged.' And when he had said this, there arose a dissension between the Pharisees and Sadducees, and the multitude was divided. For the Sadducees say there is no resurrection, nor angel, nor spirit, but the Pharisees acknowledge both. And there arose a great clamor, and the Scribes of the Pharisees' party arose and contended, saying, 'We find no evil in this man, but if an angel or a spirit spoke to him—let us not fight against God.'" Here we have it clearly stated, that the Sadducees denied the resurrection and also the existence of angels and human spirits, that is their conscious existence, apart from the body. The Pharisees believed the resurrection and the existence of angels and human spirits, that is their conscious existence apart from the body. The spirits here spoken of are human spirits apart from the body, for three reasons:

1. The Sadducees predicated their denial of the resurrection on a denial of the conscious existence of the human spirit apart from the body. As there was no human spirit apart from the body, there could be no resurrection. They were more consistent, and had more common sense than soul-sleepers.

2. Angels and spirits are here spoken of as separate and distinct beings. It can only mean human spirits for they are the only spirits spoken of in the Bible, besides good and bad angels, unless it be God—the Logos and the Holy Spirit. 3. In the tenth verse the Pharisees say, "If an angel or a spirit spoke to him." As Paul had claimed that Jesus, whom the Pharisees believed to be dead, and existing only in the condition of a disembodied spirit, had spoken to him, they referred to this, and meant a disembodied human spirit. Then the Sadducees denied (1), the resurrection; (2), the existence of angels, and the conscious existence of disembodied human spirits. The Pharisees believed, (1), the resurrection; (2), the existence of angels and the conscious existence of disembodied human spirits. Now with these very ideas before him and his hearers, and appealing to them, Paul declared he was a Pharisee. He was a Pharisee in believing the resurrection, and the existence of angels and the conscious existence of disembodied human spirits, or he was a liar and deceiver. Now, honest reader, which? With all believers of revelation, this passage, when understood in its only plain common sense meaning, settles the question. It gives one eternal quietus to soul-sleeping. It puts it to sleep forever. It utterly extinguishes its conscious being. I confess I know not how a stronger case could be made, than we have made here. Had we advanced no other argument this would be enough.

Peter, in 2 Pet. 2:4, speaks of God's casting the angels who kept not their first estate, down to Tartarus. This sanctions the Pharisaic idea concerning Tartarus. Jude speaks of the same event, and says these unjust angels and the spirits of the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah endure punishment unto the day of judgment. Peter, in 2 Pet 2:9, says, "God knows how to reserve the being punished unto the day of judgment." Paul speaks of death as a departure, a decease, going away, a putting off his house, outer man, flesh, body, clothing, tabernacle or tent. Peter also speaks of death as a departure, a putting off the tabernacle or tent. The Sadducees could not use such phrases without hypocrisy and fraud, nor could the apostles, if they believed death extinguished their conscious being, the people to whom they wrote would understood them just as we do now. The apostles used, without one word of qualification, Pharisaic terms phrases and ideas, and they believed them or they were hypocrites and deceivers. John speaks in five places of the consciousness of the spirits of the dead between death and the resurrection. He describes the judgment just as the Pharisees did. He represents the wicked as being cast into gehenna, just as the Pharisees did. He uses their descriptive phrases "their smoke ascendeth forever and ever, the smoke of their torment." Our Savior says they go into the fire prepared for evil spirits—into everlasting torment they are cast, into outer darkness where the warm drieth not, nor is the fire quenched. In using these Pharisaic ideas and symbols they could mean only what their readers and hearers understood them to mean.

Hence the conclusion is irresistible that our Savior and his disciples believed with the Pharisees concerning the future state. They used the very terms, phrases, and ideas of the Pharisees, and taught just as they taught concerning these matters. Nay, Paul, with the very idea of the conscious existence of the disembodied human spirit before him and his hearers, declared he was a Pharisee, in believing this very idea. The readers and hearers of our Savior and his apostles could have understood them in no other way, and they never undeceived them, or qualified their use of Pharisaic terms, phrases and ideas; but they so used them as to confirm their hearers in their belief. Hence they were Pharisees in regard to these ideas, or deceivers. They believed in sheol or hades as a place of confinement of the conscious spirits of men. That there was to be a resurrection and the wicked would be punished forever, consciously punished. They placed the wicked, after judgment, in gehenna, where their hearers understood the wicked were to be consciously punished forever. They used the terms by which their hearers used to declare the conscious eternal punishment of the wicked. Hence they believed and taught the truth of my proposition, and it is true, or Christ and his apostles were deceivers, or deceived.

In our next we will close our part of the discussion of this proposition, by a summary of our arguments. CLARK BRADEN.

The Hundred and Forty and Four Thousand.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE FIRST FIVE VERSES OF REV. 14.

Because the apostle wrote this at the close of the first century, and because he was shown things which were to be in the future, many think and believe that the history of the first century is not here described. But we should not overlook this direction: "Write" "the things which are." Some things which had occurred are admitted by all to be incorporated in this vision; for instance, the death of Christ, and his resurrection and ascension. Why not admit that the work of the apostles is also to be found in this vision? For I shall endeavor to show in this article that the "first fruits unto God and to the Lamb" were those who believed on Christ, through or by his own teachings and those of the twelve apostles.

The first point in the subject to consider is thus written out for us: "A amb stood on the Mount Zion." one dispute the fact that Christ is re set forth as the Lamb that bear h away the sin of the world, accordg to the announcement made by John e immerser.

Mount Zion.—This was one of the ames by which Jerusalem was known. ut when did Christ stand on "the lount Zion?" The answer is given Ps. 2: "Yet have I anointed my ing upon Zion, the hill of my holiess. I will declare for a decree: The ord hath said unto me, Thou art my on: this day have I begotten thee."

The fulfillment of the prediction reorded in this Psalm (see margin) ocurred at the baptism of Jesus, when e annointing came upon him—the pirit of his Father was there poured pon him without measure—and a oice was heard from heaven saying: This is my beloved Son in whom I m well pleased." When he came to tand in the pulpit and expound the rophecies, he opened to Isaiah and ead: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon ne because he hath anointed me to reach the gospel to the poor." At is transfiguration a voice out of the loud was heard, saying as at his bapism, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." Thus the Father of the "Lamb" of Rev. 14 ecognized him openly as the anointed King standing on the holy hill of Zion. But why need record this in the vision given to John on Patmos? Because the history of the church of Christ would be incomplete without it.

"With him the hundred and forty and four thousand," "As many as received him," says John, in writing his gospel, "gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." In order to fulfill another item of prophecy, a certain lass must be reckoned as being with him; for, says the prophet in speaking of Christ, "I will declare thy name unto my brethren; in the midst of the hurch will I sing praise unto thee." If Christ is the "Son of God," and those who believe on him have "power" to become "sons of God," what is the relation then, that exists between Christ and believers? Let Paul answer: "He is not ashamed to call them brethren." Who then stood with the Lamb on the Mount Zion? His brethren, and these were the hundred and forty and four thousand. "Having his name and his Father's name written in their foreheads."—Dr. A. Clarke's translation.

Different sects of idolaters had the peculiar mark of their gods in their foreheads. It was called the "sectarial" mark. The Hindoo deities, of which there were between eighty and ninety, had each a mark in their foreheads, which their worshippers adopted. In ch. 13, from v. 11 to 16, we have the description given us of a power which obliges "all to receive a mark....in their foreheads." This power is found to be an anti-christian, and an ecclesiastical one, which would establish a peculiar worship, and all who would not worship the first, or leopard beast, or the image made to it, meet with death. This power was the papacy, and the mark was the cross held in the right hand by the worshipper or by the priest, or else the sign of the cross made in the forehead, as they kneeled before the altar and before an image of Christ and the Virgin Mary.

This name is the seal of the Lord, given to believers by the sealing angel of Rev. 7. The sealing angel represents that class of messengers who continued the proclamation of the gospel after Christ had ascended to his Father's throne. A belief in the gospel is succeeded by the sealing witness of the Holy Spirit. Example: Eph. 1:13: "Sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise." Eph. 4:30: "Sealed unto the day of redemption." 2 Cor. 1:21: "God who hath sealed us." Rom. 8:15, 16: "The Spirit itself beareth witness." Heb. 10:12: "The Holy Spirit is also a witness." Gal. 4:6: "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts."

THIS SEAL DISTINGUISHES US, AND IS OUR SALVATION.

To Illustrate.—When the destroying angel passed Egypt, all whose houses were not marked with the blood of the Passover Lamb were visited with death. The first born among man and beast were smitten. Ex. 12:13: "The plague shall not be upon you." See for fulfillment vv. 29, 30.

In Ezekiel (ch. 9) we have a similar work portrayed. The prophet beheld a man clothed in linen with a writer's ink-horn by his side, who is commanded to go through the "midst of Jerusalem, and set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and cry for the abominations that be done in the midst thereof." And another is told to slay all who were not thus marked. This evidently was a vision, showing the prophet the manner by which God would preserve a portion of his ancient people at the time of the taking of the city by the king of Babylon.

It is a necessity then, that a mark be fixed upon all who are accounted worthy to escape those things coming on the earth. This mark is here called "The Father's name, and the Lamb's name."

WHY IS THE MARK NEEDED?

It is needed, because at the close of this age we have represented to us a peculiar scene, in Rev. 6.

The great day of God's wrath is there shown us in vision. One class cry out, "Who shall be able to stand?" One answer to this question is, "all who have the seal of the living God in their foreheads."

Paul says to us: "Having this seal, the Lord knoweth them that are his." No one can be saved without this knowledge, for "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." Believers only are sealed for redemption. Christ became our passover Lamb; therefore his blood is sprinkled upon us for our salvation in the time of trouble.

The Voice.—This evidently refers to the sound made by the descent of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost. It is thus described: "And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind." (Acts 2:2.) Also, it was a result of that descent of the Spirit. For in examining the meaning of "heaven" when used as a symbol (as it is evidently so used here), we find it to be the church, or the place the church occupied. It is a fit symbol for the church and for its dwelling place, even if it be temporary, for the church is called the "temple of God," the "sanctuary of strength," the "holy place," the "household of God," the "habitation of God through the Spirit." The land on which Jerusalem was built was called holy ground. After Christ was crucified the word of the Lord went forth from that city, in harmony with Jesus' directions: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endowed with power from on high."

Heaven, then, as used in v. 2, is evidently the church located at Jerusalem, after Christ's ascension.

I will here cite a few instances where "heaven" is evidently used as a symbol, representing a localized church. (1) Rev. 8:13. The angel flying through the midst of heaven crying, "Wo to the inhabitants of the earth." This was a warning God's people received from his watchmen, foretelling future calamities to come upon the Romans by the Saracens, the Turkish, or Mahommedan powers under the fifth and sixth trumpets. (2) Rev. 14:6. Another angel is seen flying through the midst of heaven—with a message calling on those who hear it to "worship God." This cannot be explained as literal heaven, for the fulfillment of the angel's message is found in the proclamation of the everlasting gospel, therefore the place where this angel is found is the heaven meant in v. 6, and is there clearly set forth as the church which God has chosen for the resting place of the Spirit upon earth and among the children of men. The angel represents the class of ministers employed in sounding the alarm, for that woman "Jezebel," of Rev. 2:20, was introducing a false worship, which was seducing God's people away from him. This false worship consisted in adoring images of Christ, the Virgin Mary, or some other saint, or the relics of the dead. (3) Rev. 18:4. A voice is heard from heaven saying, "Come out of her my people." In listening to this voice where would the people of God move to, in order to obey the angel. This Babylon is upon earth: where is the true church? Upon earth also, but not all out of Babylon. Some were, and these were employed by the Lord to call out the rest. Who shall say that Luther's work was not of a heavenly origin? He heard this voice. Out he came; others followed him; and in less than fifty years one-half of Europe was turned against the work and the worship of Babylon.

We will now read the entire verse: "And I heard a voice from heaven as a voice of many waters and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps." The voice or the sound of the Holy Spirit descending upon the church at Jerusalem was immediately accompanied by the voice of "multitudes of various nations" represented by the "many waters"—waters signifying peoples, nations, tribes, etc. In harmony with this is the record found in Acts 2:5: "Jews out of every nation under heaven." As Parthians, Medes, Elamites, Romans, Egyptians, Arabians, and people of other nations, heard the gospel in their own tongue, it was a matter of astonishment to them; they "marvelled," and in their amazement and doubt asked, "What meaneth this?" Others mocking, said, "These men are full of new wine." But Peter lifted up his voice and pronounced it as a fulfillment of the prophecy of Joel. (ch. 2:28, 29.) Thus the apostle John not only heard the voice of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost, but he heard it also on the isle of Patmos, and heard also the voice of multitudes of people, and the voice of the church, and witnessed the result of that work of the Spirit, namely, the gathering out from the twelve tribes of the children of Israel, of 144,000 converts. The result of Peter's sermon on that Pentecostal refreshing was the conversion and adding to the church of about three thousand souls. If three thousand were added in one day, could not the number reach its completeness before the expiration of the apostle's ministry? The Lord added daily such as should be saved, and about five thousand believers were in Jerusalem at the time the rulers of the Jews sought to stop the preaching of the apostles. Here was also a pattern company. Completely given up to the worship of God, in the breaking of bread and of prayers, and of the performing of miracles, the feeding of the poor, and of the convicting of deceivers like Ananias and Sapphira, and proving to the Jews daily that salvation was in their midst according to the promise made unto their fathers, by the prophet Isaiah: "I will place salvation in Zion for Israel my glory." (46:13.) "And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord." (59:20.)

Carefully compare the second chapter of Acts with Is. 11:10-15, and it will be seen that the work prophesied by Isaiah was commenced on the day of Pentecost.

THE HARPS.

"And I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps." Harps accompanied by voices signify the singing of songs of victory, as example: The return of the Jews when led by King Jehosaphat against against the children of Ammon, Moab and Mount Seir. (See 2 Chron. 1:28.) The apostle writes thus: "This is our victory, even our faith:" and we also find that those who believed on Jesus, by the preaching of the apostles, were continually praising God, for by their faith they had gained the victory over the unbelief of their day; but those who did not believe on Christ were unable to sing the new song. Harps are a symbol belonging to this age and not the future one. When Moses, as the leader of the Jews, sang the song of deliverance after crossing the Red Sea, the Jewish women led by Miriam, responded to the song with timbrels. They were on their way to Canaan: the Lord had wrought for them a sure deliverance, and it was immortalized in song. So these "harpers harping with their harps," were on a journey to the heavenly Canaan. The Captain of their salvation had gained "eternal redemption" for them, and they immortalized his victory over death and the grave, in songs of praise. When the saints are safe in glory, they are represented as clothed in white robes and with palms in their hands; harps are not found there, although they sing in glory, yet their singing is not accompanied with the music of harps. Therefore harps are an emblem pertaining to the present temporal condition in which the redeemed are now found, and not an emblem of future life. White robes and palms are emblems of conquerors.

THE NEW SONG.

"And they sung as it were a new song," etc. Evidently the song of redemption is here meant, for whenever we find any song introduced into this vision of John, it invariably relates to the power of Christ's redeeming blood. See ch. 5:9; 7:10.

The Four Beasts.—As these are described in ch. 4, the only question we need to settle is, What do they represent? I believe that the ministry, the watchmen of Zion, are here meant. They are the eyes of the church, and it is required of them to lead the church as well as warn the world of coming danger, give the time of night, watch to know the necessities of the church, and to feed them with meat in due season. They are to watch the signs of the times, and inform the church when they may expect their Lord's return. Being made acquainted with the past as well as with the future, by God's word, they can see what is before them, as well as see what has been fulfilled in other ages of the world. Hence they are described as "being full of eyes before and behind." Before the four beasts and the elders the 144,000 sing the song of redeeming love.

The Elders.—Four and twenty elders evidently represent the twelve Jewish patriarchs and the twelve apostles of the Lamb. As there were twelve sons of Jacob, and these were heads of twelve branches of the house of Israel, according to the flesh, so there must be twelve apostles of the Lamb; heads of the twelve divisions of the present house of Israel, according to the faith of Abraham which he had before he was circumcised.

"Redeemed from the Earth."—The hundred and forty and four thousand here represented as being with the Lamb on Mount Zion, evidently numbered many of those who had walked with Christ and his apostles, when he was in Jerusalem, even before his crucifixion as well as after. They were those who saw his majesty, beheld his humility; shared his toils, and often were his companions in tribulation; beheld him crucified, witnessed his death, placed him in the tomb, and wept over him; waited for his resurrection, and beheld him then as their glorified, immortal and heavenly Redeemer; were led out by him as far as Bethany, and there received his parting blessing; stood gazing up into heaven and heard the testimony of the angels who stood by in shining raiment, that this same Jesus would so come in like manner as he went away. Why are these said to be "redeemed from the earth!" As no man could by any means redeem himself or his brother from the bondage of sin, under which the whole family was once held, Christ appeared in the end of the Jewish age, "or fulness of time," to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. This work he accomplished, and all who believe on him are said to be "bought with a price," "redeemed" "with the precious blood of Christ as of a lamb without blemish." So then, the hundred and forty and four thousand are a body of believers, whom the apostle James addressed as the "twelve tribes," "scattered abroad"—the company gathered unto the Lord through the faithful labors of the twelve apostles.

"NOT DEFILED WITH WOMEN."

An illusion is here made to idolatrous women who caused Israel to sin while journeying through the wilderness. (Num. 25.) Many of the early Christians were those "who turned from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven." One thing required of the Thessalonians by the apostle Paul was that they should "abstain from eating meat offered to idols." This was also decided upon in the Conference at Jerusalem. In the speech of the apostle James we read "that we write unto them that they abstain from pollutions of idols." (Acts 15:20.) Also abstain from fornication, which was a prevailing sin of that day. By obeying these injunctions they saved themselves from defilement, and were preserved unto "sanctification and honor." Why this pure company are introduced into the vision is because of the work of the three angels described in ch. 14. Their work was that of proclaiming against idol worship, against receiving "the mark of the beast and his image"—which was a defilement so great that all who were thus defiled were killed, according to the antitype found in Num. 25. Can a company of Christians be found anywhere else in this dispensation of whom it could be said, "They were not defiled?" The word "Ephesus"—the name of the first division of the Christian church—is said to mean "chief, desirable." The first living creature "full of eyes before and behind," was like a lion, the king of beasts, or first among the beasts. So this company, like chaste virgins espoused unto Christ, and bought by his blood from among the great company of unbelieving men, are the "first fruits," and not the last.

Without Guile.—Hear the words of Jesus when addressing Nathaniel: "Behold an Israelite indeed in whom there is no guile." To the disciples he said: "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you." Hear Paul: "But ye are washed, ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus and by the Spirit of God."

Therefore it could be truthfully said of this company that they were "without fault before the throne of God." If the believers of our day wish to live near to God and enjoy perfect sanctification, can they even equal the purity that existed among the believers found in Jerusalem during the week of Pentecost, when they were continually praising God? Do we not often look to that "chief and desirable" state of the church, and behold how holy they were, how free from strife and division, and wish that we could see such a company here in our day? What carefulness the believing of the proclamation of the glad tidings wrought in the Christians of that day!

In conclusion, let us be reminded of the great pattern before us, by whom all are to measure themselves, namely, Christ, who gave himself for us, that we might be cleansed from all iniquity, and be found of him without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing, a glorious church, holy and without blemish: that when he shall rise up and close to the door by which we are now permitted to approach unto that Father, we may be shut in with him, and go no more out forever. Amen.

The Angel's Oath.

Rev. 10:5, 6.

"And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth, lifted up his hand to heaven, and sware by him that liveth forever and ever....that there should be time no longer.

Many have been the eloquent utterances (and many more have been the magniloquent declamations) over the sublime conception that at a certain epoch, time shall actually end! How this is to be, is not so clear! Created beings live chronologically in successive exercises and movements, and must be conscious of the fact. Moreover, if a physical universe is eternally to exist—and the resurrection of the body would seem to guarantee that—there will be revolutions of suns and planets, and, perhaps, even of this renovated earth, to measure time. In what sense, then, beyond that of merely the closing up of human probational history, could the phrase in question be true? Alas! for pulpit eloquence that common sense should so often clip its wings in the very midst of its loftiest flights! And sound exegesis, which agrees with common sense, is often equally fatal to these flights of imagination. Thus, in this passage, a study of the context, or a consultation of critical authorities, would show that the writer is not speaking of time absolutely, or time in general, but of the time allotted for certain events, which would expire at a particular crisis, and then there should be no delay in the fulfillment of the divine promises and threats; or, as the next verse phrases it, "The mystery of God should be finished." The time of forbearance as to punishment, the time of permitted development of evil should be no longer. This makes a better text for edification and comfort, is not a misplaced eloquence.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 14, 1872.

EDITOR'S APPOINTMENTS.

Brockway Center, Tuesday eve., May 21
Commence a protracted meeting in Pt. Sanilac, Wednesday eve., May 22.
Arranged by brethren. J. V. HIMES.

THE leading article on our first page last week was from the pen of Br. L. C. Collins. No doubt most of our readers recognized the author. There is a peculiar flavor to his writings, not easily forgotten when once tasted.

THEY are hunting up old Bibles in Chicago. One man has a copy 273 years old. We have a copy printed in 1662, which we think unique. It is profusely illustrated—and the picture of the casting out of demons should set an immaterialist to thinking! We shall be glad to show it to any of our friends who may call.

ONE of our exchanges says, speaking of "Theological Articles"—"We are constantly requested to write articles on subjects of a doctrinal character, and give the columns of our paper a deeper shade of debility." We think the arguments of the immaterialist system are already sufficiently debilitated. If there is "a deeper shade of debility" attaching to them, we may well be spared its exhibition."

LESSING, an eminent author; an immaterialist, though far from orthodox, is quoted by Prof. Townsend as saying that Christ was "the first that taught with authority the immortality of the soul." Unfortunately for the masses, these great geniuses rarely stoop to "chapter and verse theology." How little people in general know of the Bible. Scholars assert that Jesus "taught with authority the immortality of the soul," whereas the truth is the exact opposite of this assertion for he taught that all unworthy souls should be killed, or "destroyed." (Mat 10: 28.)

JAMES WALKER says, and he ought to know, for he is a "D.D.," that "the doctrine of a day of judgment—of a single day or a set time for the judgment of all mankind, seems to have originated in the mistake of construing passages literally which were intended to be understood figuratively." The "D.D." owes us something more. He should tell us if Mat. 16:27; Rev. 22:12; Rom. 2:16; Acts 17:31, etc., are not to be understood literally, how we may know what portion of the Scriptures, if any, is literal. Dr Walker holds that "the day of judgment to a man is the day of his death." Paul held it was the day of our resurrection. The two teachers are certainly at variance; and we are sorry to say that the tide of public opinion is with the D.D. Still we shall take the unpopular side, with the apostle, believing him to be right.

WE call the attention of our readers to the passages from Rev. Henry Smith Warleigh's very recent work, on the Extinction of Evil Persons and Evil Things, selected for our columns by a California correspondent. They only show that from the bosom of the Established Church of England a mighty protest is going forth against the God-dishonoring dogma of eternal misery. The declaration so boldly made; that those of the ministers of the Established Church who preach "endless miseries" "have no legal standing within the pale" of the Established Church, "NOR ANY RIGHT TO EAT HER BREAD;" amounts to a challenge which must from such a source open up a great controversy on the doctrine denied and denounced. Warleigh's work, together with Rev. Mr. Griffith's pamphlet entitled The entire Evidence of Evangelists and Apostles on Future Punishment, may be obtained at this office. We have ordered a supply, and expect them soon.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

WEDNESDAY, May 1. Having learned that my good wife, who still remains at our old home in Buchanan, was quite ill, I came this evening to see, and minister to her comfort, with that of others dependent upon me here. We must provide for our household, or merit the Scriptural rebuke—"He that provideth not for his own,—is worse than an infidel." The most of my life for the last thirty years, has been spent in missionary work which of necessity has separated me from my own home the greater part of the time. This course of life has been taken by mutual understanding; not looking to this life for our final home or reward, but to that which is to come. The promise of Christ is, that any one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, you my name's sake, shall receive an hundred fold, and shall inherit everlasting life." (Mat. 19: 29.) This promise we sacredly believe. First, there is another life, which will be immortal and eternal, and this is promised to the faithful ones, who really forsake all, in the true sense of the promise, for Christ. (2) Those who shall do thus for Christ shall have a hundred fold, in this life, in such things as they need: thus things are made more than equal in this life, and in that which is to come, the gift and reward is beyond comparison or computation,—eternal and immortal life. Could we ask as much? Poor frail children of dust! Even after we have "done all, we are unprofitable servants." Yet, the promise is that we shall have everlasting life. Amen. So be it. We will still toil on, to the end in the blessed hope.

"We give our mortal interest
And make our God our all."

On my arrival at Buchanan, I found Mrs. H. very feeble, with a seated, if not dangerous cough. It casts a gloom over us, though the cloud still has a "silver lining" of hope. We all cling to life. It is not natural to die, or to desire to die. We love to live, and in a rational state of mind we desire and long to live forever. This was the ground on which the ancient Greek and other heathen philosophers, imagined that though man might die, yet the life and supposed entity in man, would live on eternally. This idea came of the strong love of life; but while the love of life was real, the idea that the man, when dead, was living on, was a grand deception, and a lie. The only hope of future life is in the re-living of the dead ones. And the only hope of living forever with God, is by the resurrection to life, at the coming of Jesus Christ. If families meet again, in the future life, it will be on the ground of a fitness for eternal life. They that live only for one life, and bring up their children for one life, must meet the consequences, in the life or world to come, which will be separation, destruction. We are forewarned of this: and if we neglect to prepare for the kingdom, eternal separation will follow! The Lord wake us up to the duties we owe to all associated with us by tender ties. I have desired so to live, with my family, that we might look for the endless life when Jesus comes. We are now making in all probability, our last earthly change as to the location of our home. Another change is called for, and we are in a transition state, broken up, and soon to be scattered for months. When we may be gathered again, and under what circumstances, only our wise Father in heaven knows.

SABBATH, May 5. I assisted in the public service at the Advent chapel, by special request, though Br. Barnhart of Dowagiac, Mich., had been engaged to speak. He gave us a good sermon from 1 Cor. 15: 1, 2, on the first principles of the Christian's faith. He embraced the truth as held by the Adventists a few years ago, and left the Dunkards, with whom he was an acceptable member until he became, in the estimation of their Elders, a heretic. He is now settled in the truth and works with us. We had a precious season in communion. Jesus made himself known in the breaking of bread. The church here have no settled pastor since Eld. Mansfield went to Norwood Park. They want a good pastor, and should have one. They need and should have one of our best men. God give them a "pastor after his own heart."

POSTPONED INDEFINITELY.

The visions and theories of the Seventh-day keepers who follow Mrs. White require that ere long a bloody persecution shall break out in which all Saturday keepers shall be reduced to the alternative of submitting to the confiscation of goods, imprisonment and perhaps death, or the observance of what they style "the Pope's Sabbath," or Sunday. The correctness of their theory depends upon the speedy advent of this state of things; for if it does not dawn soon, their prophetical leader will be proved to belong to the order of false prophets.

But the signs of the times all point in another direction. Instead of a tendency to a stricter observance of the so-called Christian Sabbath, the tide is setting strongly in the precisely opposite direction. Mr. Beecher's late lecture in behalf of the opening of public libraries on Sunday was not the effort of an unpopular innovator, but rather the recognition by a popular leader of the real tendencies of the day upon the Sabbath question. The danger is not for a moment of too great strictness, but of looseness or license in its observance.

Besides this, there is not an atom of a sign that the strictest Sunday keepers ever thought to impose their views upon conscientious observers of the seventh-day. Their warfare is against those who ignore any Sabbath, and disturb those who would be glad to enjoy a quiet, peaceful day of rest on Sunday.

And even the Sunday-keeping party are bringing themselves into disgrace by their loose observance of some of the "commandments" they profess to reverence so highly. We alluded recently to the deception practiced in attaching names to a call for a politico-religious convention; and regret to say that a third instance has been added to the list of moral blunders (we use a mild term) attaching to this legal-Sunday move. It possesses little significance, and will soon be buried out of sight. Whether our friends' hopes of a persecution will be buried with this failure, or their credulity will survive every evidence the course of events can possibly furnish, remains to be seen.

From Our California Correspondent.

I would call your attention to an article in the April number of The (British) Contemporary Review, entitled "Is eternal punishment an open question in the Church of England?" By his statement of fact and then by his specific words of reply, the author seems to give two answers to the inquiry. By referring to Warleigh's book on the Extinction of Evil, you see a declaration that many of the Bishops, Deans, etc., have believed the truth on the Life and Death question. But the article is in itself suggestive of new liberty and decidedly promotive of it. The author is in error greatly in holding forth the theory of Origen; but he protests so manfully for freedom on the question that, from such a source, the appeal must be very influential. Hear him (p. 5871):

"The upholders of the dread dogma seem strongly to resemble Job's three friends. There is a show of piety in being, as they suppose, on God's side. But it is a mere show of good. Let them scan the true nature of their proceeding by what is said in the last chapter of that sublime book....It is high time this was made an open question, not furtively, as it were, in one or two instances, but avowedly, undeniably; so that no clergyman shall suffer for holding the view of justice, mercy and reason, and that no candidate shall be refused ordination who abjures the unpopular dogma....The Rev. Samuel Minton, minister of Eaton chapel, openly teaches the doctrine of utter annihilation for the condemned, and has published numerous tracts enforcing the idea, and showing very conclusively that if we are bound by the letter of Scripture, we cannot refuse his belief.... We are represented in Scripture as vessels in the hands of the Potter; but the Potter does not preserve misshapen vessels, which serve neither for use nor for ornament; he breaks them up. It has been reserved for Dogmatic Theology to invent an INFINITE HORROR, and to insist upon it as a sina qua non of the church's belief, though it finds no place in the Creeds; and not even to allow the liberty of an alternative opinion. By this we see that a tradition is often harder to cope with than an expressed and authoritative doctrine. If this monstrous doctrine had been made the subject of an Article of Religion, or nakedly exposed in a Creed, it would have challenged the world's contradiction, and would have found numbers to accuse or else to excuse it. But existing, as it were, latently, and taken for granted by unthinking generations, it seems to have a vitality by reason of its very grossness and natural incredibility."

Dean Stanley has recently issued a work, in which he "rejoices" that this is an open question in the Church of England; and the author of the article quoted from is evidently not thoroughly posted as to what is going on "under his nose." His words are, however, none the less valuable as a manly protest for the fullest liberty.

Probably the wheat crop in this State this year, will exceed anything ever experienced or prophesied. The farmers are prosperous accordingly.

Now is the time for missionaries of the truth to go abroad in California. For people willing to work, and possessed of a few hundred dollars to invest in land, there is no State like our own. And the good farm hand can always find work at the very highest rate of wages. C.

How Can You do It?

I asked a brother this question only yesterday. Do what? you say. I will tell you. He had just given me a fresh proof of his almost unexampled liberality, and I said to him, knowing his circumstances, How can you do it? "Why" said he, "the love of God in the heart enables me to do it, for where there is a will there is a way." In all my acquaintance I know of no one who in proportion to his means is as liberal as Br. ——. Besides he is as modest as he is generous. A few days ago he handed me a liberal sum for the Tract Fund, but would not allow me to send his name.

He is constantly doing good. His wife and children are worthy of him, and cheerfully assist him in his labors of love. The recipients of their numerous charities belong alike to Catholic and Protestant communions. Wherever they see human suffering that they can relieve, there is their work. Nor are their benefactions confined to their own neighborhood. To distant states, even to England their money has gone for charitable purposes.

Well, perhaps you are ready to say that he is rich and that you would give as liberally if you were rich. Let me undeceive you. He and his wife labor with their own hands for their daily bread, "Diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord," they pursue their humble calling with thankful hearts, glad that they are enabled to do some good in the world. They were converted at a tent meeting held in this city a few years ago. Their life is a striking example of what may be done with the love of God in the heart, for where there is a will there is a way. They are true Christians. Who will emulate their example?

Rochester, N. Y. J. H. W.

Moral Courage.

What do we imply from the words "moral courage", but to do right regardless of surrounding circumstances? We are all of us more or less affected by the circumstances by which we are surrounded, but if our surroundings are bad and we strive to cultivate that spirit of love and meekness that Christ did, we will soon learn when to speak and when to keep silent. If we have that moral courage which will characterize us as the children of God, when assailed by an enemy we will not give way to any feelings of anger, but will manifest a feeling of love and speak gently and kindly. By thus doing we may add much to the interest and influence of Christianity. If we have that moral courage requisite to make us earnest seekers after truth, we will not be afraid to condescend to men of low estate, if we can but do them good and teach them the unbounded love of God, and the purity and simplicity of his word.

In preferring one another in honor will not be humiliating to us, but a pleasure.

If we possess true moral courage, no worldly honor or worldly applause will induce us to yield assent to any thing that is wrong: Though it may never be so popular, we will stand for the right with the world against us. We will not be afraid to promulgate the second coming of Christ, "an event near at hand, even at the door;" though the masses do not believe the doctrine, it is none the less true. And if we have not the courage to confess Christ before men, he also will deny us before his Father.

We have life and death placed before us. If we choose death we may pass along easily and enjoy the pleasures of this life: but the end is eternal death. But the Christian, endowed with true moral courage, by patient continuance in well-doing seeks for glory and honor and immortality (Rom. 2: 7), and will find many difficulties to pass through, but amid them all his courage will not fail him. His courageous service will be rewarded, and he will receive eternal life at last.

DAY CONKLIN.

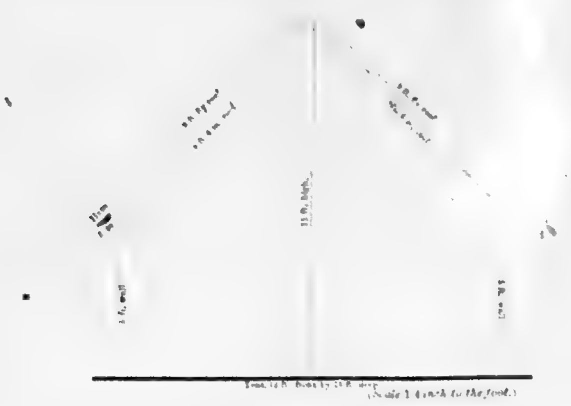
Elder Preble Exonerated.

Our attention has been recently called to Eld. J. N. Andrews' "Examination of T. M. Preble's First-day Sabbath," as found in the Review, vol. 38, No. 11, and 20 where Eld. Andrews accuses Eld. Preble of garbling and perverting the writings of the London Quarterly Journal of Prophecy, Sylvester Bliss, Dr. Jennings Jewish Antiquities, Dr. Peter Akers, etc.,

Now that Eld. Andrews had some cause for complaint, is perhaps true. But the blame does not rest with Eld. Preble. The facts are these: Eld. P, sent us extracts from the writings referred to above, but when we found that the MS. for his book would swell the volume to a larger size than was first intended if we published the whole, we wrote to him to know if he would be willing to have us cut down some of the lengthy extracts he had sent us from the writings of others. He answered that he had no objections provided it could be done without any change in sentiment. And in cutting down such extracts in our haste, we unintentionally omitted the signs of omission. Hence, the omission charged to Eld. P. and the mixing of different author's writings together, of which Eld. A. complains, occurred after the MS. left Br. Preble's hand.

We very much regret that such a thing occured, but the blame does not attach to Eld. Preble, nor do we see that the argument is particularly affected.

TENT FOR CAMPMEETING.

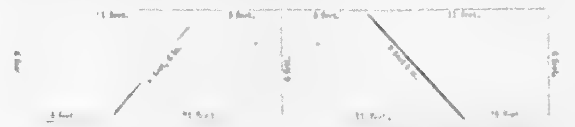


(Scale 1 inch to the foot.)

1. 5 breadths of good heavy sheeting, 9 yards long with 1 inch hem in one piece forms the walls and roof, 45 yards.

2d. 5 breadths of good heavy sheeting in one piece, with 5 inch hem to insert a 3 inch board for a fly roof, 30 yards.

3. Take two breadths, of same goods, 11 yards long, and after sewing them together, cut as below, making a 5 inch hem, on each bias edge, 23 yards.



(Scale 1 inch to the foot.)

Then join the long side of two of them, and sew from the top down five feet from the under side of the hem; do the same with the other two and you have the end.

At the Michigan Camp-meeting 3 inch strips will be furnished on the ground. Can we not have 30 or 40 tents on the ground this year? Let every family who can have one. And those who cannot—let two or three combine. The sheeting is just as good for use afterwards.

I would like to have all who intend to have a tent on the ground write and let me know that I may know how to calculate for Lumber, etc. Direct to Spurgeon on the Spirit.

Convinced as I am that the "bone" of disagreement between us and modern orthodoxy is congenital immortality, which is the basis of Catholic, Mohammedan, Spiritist and many other dogmas which are current in the world, it may not be improper to keep before the people the mooted question, in as much as overwhelming results hang upon the issue. If they are right, we are radically wrong, and vice versa.

Having been reading some of the celebrated C. H. Spurgeon's sermons, I was struck with his didactic powers of presenting scenes of fancy (in part at least) to large audiences, who, carried away with his eloquence, are made converts to his doctrine. Hear him:

"As for us we believe ourselves to be immortal; that God has endowed us with a spiritual nature which sha'l outlive the sun, outlast the stars, and run on coeval with eternity. Like the years of God's right hand, like the days of the most High has God ordained the lives of souls to be. Now I can well believe that the most of us wish that our position after death, may be like that of the righteous.

"The first consideration in death is that the Spirit is disembodied. What a spirit is like without a body you and I cannot guess: it is, of course, not a thing to be seen or heard, or touched, or handled: it is quite out of the realm of materialism, and quite beyond the reach of the senses. Yet you and I are conscious there is an immaterial something within us infinitely more precious than these poor clay hands and feet and eyes of ours. This immaterial something will leave the body and it will be naked; not a thing to be desired, for even Paul says, 'Not that we would be unclothed'—he did not desire the disembodied state for its own sake, nor should we. Those disembodied saints who are now in heaven are happy, perfectly happy as to their souls, but they, as to their manhood are not yet made perfect. They without us, the apostle says, cannot be made perfect: until we all are gathered in, and the resurrection day comes, they are without bodies: and are as it were, but half men: all the powers they have are full of happiness, but they are waiting for the adoption to-wit: the redemption of the body, which will be at the second coming of the Lord Jesus Christ.

"But what is there desirable in the state of the Christian when his spirit is disembodied? I should desire to be like a Christian in the disembodied state because he will not be altogether in a new and strange world. Some of you have never exercised your spirits at all about the spirit world. You have talked with thousands of people in bodies, but you have never spoken with spiritual beings; to you the realm of spirit is all unknown: but let me tell you, Christians are in the daily habit of communing with the spirit-world; by which I mean that their soul's converse is with God. Their spirits are affected by the Holy Spirit. They have fellowship with angels who are ministering spirits sent forth to minister to them that are the kins of salvation. Now when some of you enter into the spirit-world, you will say—'I never was here before: this is a foreign land to me.' I can conceive that you will call for some compassion. 'Is there any one here with whom I have had dealings?' And there will be a voice heard—'Yes, I have often spoken to you and you to me.' 'Who is that?' It is Satan or some evil spirit with whom alone out of all spirits you have ever had communion. He will be the only friend to meet you, and what a friend! Your grim companion, your fellow sinner, and your fellow-prisoner forever. But the Christian in the disembodied state might cry—where are those with whom aforetime I had fellowship?' And a response will come from the ministering angels. There, above all will be the blessed Spirit of God. There will be God himself, and the spirit of the ever-living Christ. All these will make up sweet company for the believer. After the soul has left the body, we believe that it at once appears before God, and receives by anticipation, what will be its final sentence. To the righteous soul there is no sleeping in the grave, no delay in purgatory before he enters into heaven. 'To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise,' is the portion of all who trust in Jesus.

"After the judgment is pronounced, the disembodied spirit dwells in heaven. Some of you could not be happy if you were allowed to enter that heaven. If you could be admitted between those pearly gates which forever exclude pollution, sin and shame, you could not be happy there. Shall I tell you why? It is a land of spirits; and you have neglected your spirit; Some of you even deny that you have a spirit; and I do not wonder that you say so, because I do not suppose that you have ever exercised it.... After a while our bodies will be raised again; the soul will re-enter the body: for Christ has not only bought the souls of his people, but their bodies, too."

Dear brethren let us be thankful for a more scriptural light, if so be the word sustains us, as I am confident it does. In reference to the interim preceding the second coming, there is no need of guessing the condition of the departed: they sleep, and hence "praise not the Lord." Truly "an immortal some thing" must be a "nondescript" and I don't wonder Mr. Spurgeon was a ta loss how to estimate its nothingness. Truly its but a vague compound approaching a vacuum of nonentity. Better our hope in God, who treasures all our dust and will in due time fulfill his purposes in our recreation and resuscitation.

Whatever God Does Is Best

Compelled by violent persecution to quit his native land, Rabbi Akiba wandered over barren wastes and dreary deserts; his whole equipage consisting of a lamp, which he used to light up at night, in order to study the law; a cock which served him instead of a watch to announce to him the rising dawn; and an ass on which he rode. The sun was gradually sinking beneath the horizon, night was fast approaching, and the poor wanderer knew not where to shelter his head or where to rest his weary limbs. Fatigued, and almost exhausted, he came at last near a village. He was glad to find it inhabited, thinking where human beings dwelt there dwelt also humanity and compassion; but he was mistaken. He asked for a night's lodging, but was refused, not one of the inhospitable inhabitants would accommodate him. He was therefore obliged to seek shelter in the neighboring wood. "It is hard, very hard," said he, "not to find a hospitable roof to protect me against the inclemency of the weather; but God is just, and whatever he does is for the best." He seated himself beneath a tree, lighted his lamp, and began to read the law: he had scarcely read a chapter, when a violent storm extinguished the light. "What," exclaimed he, "must I not be permitted even to pursue my favorite study? but God is just and whatever he does is for the best." He stretched himself on the bare earth, willing, if possible, to have a few hours' sleep. He had hardly closed his eyes, when a fierce wolf came and killed his cock. "What new misfortune is this?" ejaculated the astonished Akiba; "my vigilant companion is gone; who then will henceforth awaken me to the study of the law; but God is just, he knows best what is good for us poor mortals." Scarcely had he finished the sentence, when a terrible lion came and devoured the ass. "What is to be done now?' exclaimed the lonely wanderer: "my lamp and my cock are gone, my poor ass too is gone—all is gone! But praised be the Lord, whatever he doeth is for the best." He passed a sleepless night, and early in the morning went to the village, to see if he could procure a horse or any other beast of burden, to enable him to pursue his journey. But what was his surprise not to find a single individual alive! It appears that a band of robbers had entered the village during the night, and killed its inhabitants, and plundered their houses. As soon as Akiba had sufficently recovered from the amazement into which this wonderful occurrence had thrown him, he lifted up his voice and exclaimed, "Thou great God, the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob! now I know by experience that poor mortal men are short-sighted and blind; often considering as evils what is intended for their preservation. But thou alone art just, and kind and merciful. Had not the hard-hearted people driven me by their inhospitality from the village, I should have assuredly shared their fate; had not the wind extinguished my lamp, the robbers would have been drawn to the spot and have murdered me. I perceive also that it was thy mercy which deprived me of my two companions, that they might not by their noise give notice to the banditti where I was. Praised then be thy name, for ever and ever!" —Hurwitz's Hebrew Tales.

NORWOOD PARK.

The following account of the place where the printing department of the Association, and our residences are situated will interest our readers. It is from the Chicago Journal:

NORWOOD PARK,

Ten miles from the Kinzie street depot, and seven miles west of Lake Michigan, is the beautiful village of Norwood Park. In point of location this place is most favorably situated. Its streets are spacious, the lots are wide and deep, and the hight of the land is about one hundred feet above the level of the lake. The rapid growth of this suburb since its commencement, three years ago, is a matter of general comment. The managers are pursuing a liberal policy, and are doing a commendable work in the way of beautifying and improving the grounds. About 800 acres of rolling ground are embraced in the village, and on account of the hight of the land, with reference to the surrounding country, the drainage is good. The place is neatly laid off with streets running in curvlinear lines, making in one place, south of the depot, a "circle" one mile in circumference. Two small parks are laid out on either side of the depot, and two near the circle. The lots are 50 by 200 and 300 feet, and the land sells at from $5 to $35 per front foot. A considerable amount of sidewalks have already been constructed. The population of Norwood is now about 300. A large religious publishing association, under the name of the Western Advent Christian Publishing Company, with steam presses, book bindery, etc., has commenced operations at this point, and printing in all its phases is carried on for the city. The company already employs fifteen hands. The weekly circulation of their paper is 5,000 copies. An artesian well, which flows about sixty gallons per minute, making a beautiful rivulet, flows by the depot and is spanned by a rustic bridge, which would be a credit to a more pretentious town.

The American Reformed denomination have here a fine church building which cost $8,000, of which Rev. U. D. Gulick is the pastor. The Baptists and Methodist [This is a mistake. Ed.] also hold religious service here, and each expect to build a church this summer. An excellent graded school is in progress, for which a $10,000 building is to be constructed during the present season. A commendable feature of the place is that no liquor can be sold in the corporation, it being a part of each deed that the sale of liquor on the premises shall invalidate the title of the property. Twenty-five new houses are in process of erection. A fine three-story hotel, to cost when complete $25,000, is also being built. There is one store in the place where a variety of goods are kept.

Some $200,000 worth of land has been sold in Norwood since the fire, and during the present season 900,000 feet of lumber have been sold to parties in the place.

A goodly number of Chicago's active business men are already located at this point, among whom may be mentioned the following: T. H. Seymour, M. D. Stevers, D. H. Lincoln, George Dunlap, H. V. Reed, A. S. Campbell, James Winship, Martin Schenck, L. B. Shepherd, George Summers, A. D. Read, F. R. Duck, F. G. Lane, George Whipple, C. J. Corse, J. Warmsley, George Campbell, W. L. Himes, W. J. Holbrook, Robert Pollock, Dr. Ward, F. M. Fox, Jos. Winship, N. R. Foster, E. S. Fox, E. F. Holbrook, J. V. Himes, and Messrs. Guilbert, Thayer, Snell and Murwin.

—The place has quite doubled in population and houses since we came. And we again remark, that any persons wishing to invest from $250 to $1,000 and upwards, can do it to advantage here, and at the same time help the association. We changed the property of the association in Buchanan for real estate here. The trustees will sell this for the benefit of the Association. Who will invest, and help us and themselves too? Any responsible person with the necessary means will find an excellent chance for business in taking the new hotel. It will be leased on exceedingly favorable terms.

* * * Enter the torpedo! This murderous and valuable explosive is now the theme of heated discussion in the council chambers of a dozen naval boards; and nowhere are its merits canvassed more earnestly than in England. An English paper discusses the inventions of the ram and the torpedo together as follows, showing that a very steadfast attention is paid to them: "We know that a single stroke of the ordinary 'ram' or a single explosion of a well planted torpedo is enough to sink the strongest iron clad, if it be not constructed of very efficient water-tight compartments; and two or three strokes or explosions would suffice to destroy it even then. But we know nothing of the real chances of striking and avoiding a hit, although we are told that the ramming experiment may be safely tried by gunboats prepared with buffers for the purpose. None has the science of attack with the towed torpedo been practiced by our squadrons of evolution, while the science of defeat against them is quite in its infancy. One thing, however, we may note with satisfaction, that if the 'ram' and the 'Harvey torpedo' be two novel terrors at sea, the one is, at any rate, the antidote of the other. No ship handling skillfully the towed torpedo need ever fear the assault of the hostile ram. The 'Whitehead torpedo' is essentially a submarine gun, but too little is known of its efficacy to discuss its influence at sea." The English have, however arrived at the conclusion that their great ships, like the Hercules and the Monarch, are more than a match for any smaller ships in the use of the torpedo and in dealing a blow with the ram.

The Christian Life.

The Weakening of the Sense of Sin.

It seems to us one of the striking peculiarities of modern feeling, that sin, in one's self or in others, rarely excites the abhorrence which was formerly visited upon it. In the general experience, repentance seems to have lost its intensity, and righteous indignation its heat. The indications of this relaxing severity of moral condemnation are seen on all sides. An instance is afforded by the tendency of legislation as regards criminals. The movement is more and more away from all severity of punishment. The very object of punishment is often made to consist in restraining a dangerous person within safe limits, and in reforming the wrong-doer. The further aim, of emphatically pronouncing the condemnation of the community, voicing impressively its sense of the guilt of crime, is to a great extent lost sight of. Just horror at the murder is swallowed up in pity for the murderer. In this same direction points the leniency of popular feeling toward great public offenders. The defaulter who has ruined hundreds of families, the traitor who has plotted and prepared rebellion, are easily tolerated when the first excitement of their crimes has passed away. The same feeling is manifested toward nations. One country makes an atrocious attack on her neighbor, and as soon as the assault has failed voices are everywhere heard crying out to spare the offender.

Looking in a wholly different quarter,—that of literature, a like feeling is manifested. On the one hand, in strictly religious literature, and in the utterances of the pulpit, we find far less of genuine keen self-condemnation for sin than in the corresponding expressions of earlier periods. In literature, of all departments, there is noticeable a prevalent disposition to treat moral evil as a simply natural malady. The great masters,—Dickens, Hawthorne, George Eliot,—still give wonderful pictures of the retributions of conscience. But in the average essay and novel, this element of the soul's strong condemnation of its own wrong-doing disappears.

A like fact is to be observed in a popular school of theology,—what may be called the Comfortable Theology. The strength of this school is far greater than can be measured by external organizations. Its influence to some degree is felt in all religious bodies. Its strength is fed to some extent from noble sources. But its conclusions are too easily reached to wholly satisfy most men who desire to find the truth and the truth only, whether it be bitter or sweet. It helps itself wonderfully by making little account of what has hitherto seemed one of the greatest facts in the universe,—the fact of sin. It says, "Yes, sin is a great evil," —but glides easily away from a deep realization of the fact.

Shall we appeal further to the personal experience of Christians? Shall we ask how they may have been conscious of the want within themselves of a deep sense of their own ill-desert? How many have felt a shallowness in their experience in this respect; have known that they lacked a motive to effort; a quickening to the sense of pardon, in a heart-realization of their own imperfections? Is it not generally the case that, too insensible as we are to all spiritual truths, this one especially of our own sinfulness fails to get deep hold on us? We dare not say with confidence what the answer of most will be to these questions, but we believe it will be such as would confirm the general idea which we have advanced,—that the great truth of the sinfulness of the race has for the time partly lost its rightful power.

Whatever be the causes of this changed sentiment, there are various results from it that need to be guarded against. It brings with it a weakening of motive in the great struggle of life, the struggle to escape from sin into holiness. Man needs the sharp spur of self-reproach, the intense sense that like Bunyan's Pilgrim he must escape from the City of Destruction. Except in nature's wonderfully high, virtue becomes languid, and faith's occasion is gone, when the soul does not intensely feel its need of emergence into a higher state.

No great truth can be lost alone—it must carry other truths with it out of sight. The one greatest truth of all, the love and goodness of God, must be but dimly apprehended when man does not realize what a deliverance God has achieved for him and offers him. The deeper the sense of sin, the sweeter is forgiveness, the more glorious he who saves us. All high religious truth has these two aspects, toward man in that deepest need which only comes of voluntary wrong, toward God revealed as Restorer and Deliverer. David, who knew the the depths of humiliation, "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity,"—rises to the tenderest confidence, "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." It is Paul, who cries, "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" that feels deepest in his heart, how "Nothing shall separate us from the love of Christ."—Christian Union.

Correspondence.

From J. G. Baughman, No. Berne, O.

I am trying to preach the gospel in the central part of Ohio, where Adventism is but little known. The precious seed of the pure gospel was first proclaimed here by Br. A. E. Babcock, and the word proved to be as bread cast upon the waters. A few months ago the writer experienced that the truth can make us free, and cause one to rejoice in a faith that saves from guilt and sin. Since then I have publicly and privately preached Christ in new light. The Bible indeed is a new book to me; and although I meet with much opposition, yet I am happy, and feel conscious that God is blessing my feeble efforts to his own glory. We have one organized society in Millville. I have visited several other places, and have been urgently requested to return. I have now four regular appointments, and expect soon to devote all of my time to the work of the ministry, for I feel that "the harvest truly is great, and the laborers are few." We would all be very glad to see you, Br. Himes, and hear you preach the word of life to us. May heaven's richest blessings be with you in your labor of love. Pray for us.

Br. C. W. Low, of New York, one of our old preachers says:

"By the grace of God and the faith of Jesus, I am still on my way to the kingdom. I am trying to do a little with my head, heart and hands, in the things of life and grace for this life and the life to come. I feel that the true church of Christ is not far from their eternal home.

From H. M. Wheeler, Schuyler Co., Ill.

I want to call your attention to the wants of the cause in this county, with the hope that by doing so I may induce some of the preaching brethren to come this way and hold forth the word to the scattered ones. There are enough men and women that believe the truth in theory, in this county to form two or three churches, but we have no one to attend to this work. I do not know that all that profess to be Adventists in theory would come forward if there was an opportunity for them to do so. But this I do know; that there are some that want to obey the Lord in the ordinance of baptism, at the earliest possible opportunity. We want a grove meeting here this summer if possible. I feel that it would be the means of doing much good.

From W. C. Hicks.

I have just closed a successful effort at the Graham S. H., Fairgrove. Organized a church of twenty members mostly heads of families. The good Lord was very precious through all our meetings, prejudice is disappearing on all sides, and many more are waking up to the importance of searching the Scriptures to see if these things are so. It is blessed to be there now to hear the dear ones talk of the love of God, and the blessed hope. Wife made her first attempt to preach the word during those meetings, and her efforts were abundantly blessed. I feel assured the Lord will bring her into a free place in his love.

In the first part of my effort in this place, while visiting from house to house, I met with Eld. Farley, formerly of the United Brethren denomination, but had not been preaching anywhere of late. His mind being troubled on the doctrine of endless misery, he had withdrawn from that conference. Believing in the "Immortality of the soul," he was rather inclined to favor Universalism. I prevailed on him to remain over night with me. I gave him some tracts. He left me next day only to come back after three weeks to declare himself on the side of truth, and will now go into the field with me at present, until the Lord opens a door for him. He asks the prayers of the brethren. Br. Farley promises to be a useful minister in the cause, having had a long experience in the field, having been a traveling preacher, I think, about twenty years. There is also a Baptist minister looking into the truth, and I think may come out all right. This "infidel" preaching is raising quite a stir in those parts.

I go next to Unionville, where it is published that I preach rank infidelity. Well, they can call it what they have a mind to; it nevertheless is taking deep root in the hearts of the people, even though their preachers run about and tell the people not to go to hear the false prophets. Pray for us.

From W. F. Fahnestock.

It is truly heart cheering to occupy the position we do, as we can almost count the days, so few are they, until we shall enter into that rest which remaineth for the people of God. Yes, when I look back almost thirty years, to the time when you and Br. Miller was here, and sounded the cry, "Behold, he cometh!" when I girded on the armor and started out to meet the bridegroom; I say, to look back through the wilderness in which we have been led by that loving Father who truly has been to us a pillar of cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night. How thankful should we be that through all this mighty warfare, he has encamped around and about us, and permitted not a hair of our head to be injured—for a hard fight it has been with me. I have gone out single handed, fought the good fight. I had thought last week I had finished my course; but had the blessed assurance that there is a crown of righteousness laid up for me, and not for me only, but for all those who love Jesus' appearing. Yes, through those long years I have been esteemed almost a lunatic because of that "blessed hope," even by the members of Christ's body in the various churches. Yet, with all their opposition, without one friend to sympathise with me in my views of the glory that shall follow, I have had grace administered for every time of need, and may yet be spared to join the blood-bought throng who will exclaim—"This is our God, we have waited for him!"

From William Branch.

The "hen" story a few weeks ago, showed that in avoiding one extreme there is danger of rushing to the other. I have concluded to write a few words, enough to let the brethren and sisters know that I am still at work in the field which we believe is soon to be gleaned by the angel reapers. I have just closed a meeting of twelve days at Woodhull, where the word was received with gladness by nearly all. But some (who "cling to the traditions of the fathers,') seemed to be too dyspeptic to digest strong meat, and the consequence was, if they tried it at all, it distressed them so, they could not endure it. Hence, arose the cry of "damnable doctrines," "don't you go to hear it," etc. But the truth as it is revealed to us in God's Holy Word, is in perfect harmony with reason and common sense, and if we investigate with unbiased minds will make us wise unto salvation. There were six conversions at Woodhull, and last Sabbath (Apr. 28,) I baptised four in the Looking-glass river, and in the evening organized a church of thirteen members. Next time I go there, I expect to baptise ten or twelve more, and twelve or fifteen more will be added to the church.

The truth has taken deep root, and some who have long been looking for something "reasonable" in religion have now found it. One man came to me with the avowed intention of cutting my sermons to pieces; but he has since told me that I argued both his side and mine, and left nothing for him to do but to judge. He now belongs to the church and no doubt will be a faithful worker in the Lord's vineyard. His wife also has made a start in the good way.

As I look around I cannot help realizing the truthfulness of Christ's words—"The harvest is plenteous but the laborers are few." Brethren and sisters let us "pray the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." The time has come when the true minister of the gospel must be diligent in sounding the alarm and preparing men to meet their God. Who will go forth with the whole armor buckled firmly on, and fearlessly meet the foe? Let us each say, "Here am I, O Lord; send me."

From Br. Jonas Wendell.

There are some brethren in Christ in Kansas, and they wish to secure a Tent for that State, and as I have had some experience in tent meetings, I have been solicited to say something in their behalf. I have long since been convinced from personal experience that tent meetings, are among the most effectual means of getting the great truths of the gospel, before the people. They bring out a class that seldom go to a house of worship to hear the gospel preached. I understand, that there are but few believers in the gospel, as preached by Christ and the apostles, in Kansas; and that they are poor, and may need some help. Now I propose to start a subscription in THE TIMES; and that the brethren and sisters of Kansas send in their names, with the amount they will give; and in those localities where there is a church, let the church contribute, and send in the amount as a subsciption from the church, and let this subscription remain open for the brethren of Kansas for four weeks, and that will decide if they need help, and to what extent.

From. W. W. Cate, Bates Co., Mo.

I have preached here one year, sometimes two or three times a week. I have received therefor one sack of flour and one straw hat. God bless the donors. Yet the Lord has blessed my labors and is giving me many friends. Some twelve or fifteen have been converted or reclaimed under my labors, a part of whom have been drawn into other churches, who have tried very hard to get them all. But some of their best members are embracing the truth, which troubles them much. I am laboring entirely upon my own resources. I have more calls than I can fill. I mean to do all I can in the Lord's vineyard, and not let my family suffer. I want to be more diligent, more faithful, till the Master comes.

From N. C. Miller.

I am doing all I can. I left a few tracts in Milan, with an appointment written on the back that I would preach there. The merchants said they might lay on the counter so people could read them. We must spread the truth everywhere we can. I am now trying to preach in the towns. I left an appointment in Milan, in the hands of a good old Methodist brother, but when he found I was an Adventist he did not announce it, though he promised faithfully that he would do so. When I arrived in the court house a Presbyterian was preaching. All right. I'll storm the walls yet. Thank you for those tracts.

From D. C. Abbott, Santa Clara Co. Cal.

It is now about five weeks since we have received a copy of the paper that we cherish above all others, THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES. Perhaps it is owing to your removal: if so all right: we will not murmur. But the truth is we are living in a small town where we have no pure gospel preaching, and none of any kind but once in two weeks; and being the only Adventists in the place, we need all the help we can get, and of course miss the weekly visitor.

I had the opportunity of being present at the dedication of the first Advent chapel built on this coast. In very deed it was a feast to my soul.

I have been among Christians all my life. Was raised by Christian parents, was converted to God in 1858, have been a regular working member of the Baptist church in Santa Clara eight years, ending April 1870, when I was excluded for believing the Bible means just what it says—which faith the pastor was pleased to term "infidelity of the worst stamp!" I desired very much to say a few words in defence of the truth, but was not allowed a word. Neither had the pastor the courage to try and set me right, but denounced the Adventists from the pulpit as "liars and hypocrites in the sight of God." Two of us were excluded. The church was in a prosperous condition, —from that hour it has seemed as if they had incurred the Lord's displeasure. It gradually sunk away for ten months; the pastor was discharged, and the house has since been locked up.

The Lord has abundantly blessed "the two infidels," and I have enjoyed more genuine peace and happiness since, than in all the twelve years of my previous Christian life. The Lord appears to lead me in the green pastures and beside the still waters. He is indeed a very present help in every time of need, and helps most wonderfully.

Speaking of the church at Vallejo, I must not omit to say that I never before saw such brotherly love manifested. Not a discordant note did I hear. Although they were all strangers to me when I arrived there, when I left I felt as if I was leaving home. They are "salt of the earth," indeed.

I am now to turn my attention to preaching the gospel of the kingdom. Although the masses will not endure sound doctrine, and have itching ears, and love fables, they must be warned of the judgment to come. If the sentinels will sleep on their posts, the Lord will remove them and call others, even if he has to go to the shops and farms and mills to get them. He will have his witnesses.

Tried For Heresy.

Bro. Himes: Since my last writing, I have passed through one of the most trying hours of my life, a short account of which I will give you. You remember that I wrote that my church had charged me with preaching heresy, but dould not pronounce judgment at the time of trial. At our last conference meeting they concluded to try me, and Heaven save me from witnessing such another trial, if trial it may be called. Such disrespect for the Bible! Such utter disrespect for justice!

When the charge was first presented it was this: "found guilty of preaching open communion, and Adventism;" But I am a little too fast. The moderator of the meeting knowing that I had a great many friends present who would defend me to the last, if they had a chance, thought best to arbitrarily tie them down, (knowing that he could not do it by the laws of the church) and so prevent any disturbance from that quarter, which he did by telling them, that no member had a right to vote who sympathised with me, thus robbing them of their highest privilege in conference, the right of suffrage, in order that my expulsion might be accomplished with ease.

But to return to the charge. After the church had decided the charge was sufficient to begin an action upon, a visiting Baptist Elder arose and told them that preaching Adventism should not be included in the charge; "for" said he "we all believe in the second coming of Christ;" "but," he continued, "there is ample room for a charge. He preaches that the wicked will be burned up, and be no more. Now if you will charge him with this, I will stand by and defend you as long as I live."

The church then agreed to charge me with preaching "Open communion and the destruction of the wicked," and proposed to begin the trial by allowing me a short time to defend myself from the charge. I arose and told them, if they would lay their Abstract of Faith aside, and try me by the Bible "the only rule of faith and practice," that I was ready for trial, otherwise I had no defence to make. The moderator then arose and said, that they had not come there to try whether the Baptists were right or not, said he had found that out forty years ago; and talked as though he thought it sacriligious to doubt the infallibility of their confession of faith. The elders then said that it would not do to try me by the Bible, "for" said they, "he can prove any thing he wants to by the Bible, if we will allow him to jump about and take isolated passages; and so he might keep us here a week, and no good come of it at last." So they told me that I must submit to trial by their confession of Faith. I then arose and told them that I did not know before that the Baptist church claimed infallibility for its tenets, if it was so I could see no material difference between it and the Papal church: and if I must not investigate the Bible for myself nor have the liberty of conscience in this matter of faith, but must have a local faith preserved for me in the bounds of which I must keep, that hard as it was to give up affiliation with my brethren, I preferred proscription: whereupon the vote was cast, and myself and wife, with five others, first-class members and citizens, were expelled from the church as peace-breakers and heretics. but we feel no harm by what has been done as yet. On the contrary we rejoice that our heavenly Father counts us worthy to suffer for his truths sake, and make us the first immolations offered upon the altar of Truth in Arkansas. And although we shall have many things to suffer, even at the hands of Cristian friends who hold orthodox views, yet we are determined to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints," and never suffer our persecutors to make us ashamed of Jesus and his word.

"Ashamed of Jesus that dear friend
On whom my hopes of heaven depend?
No! when I blush, be this my shame—
That I no more revere his name!"

There are a number of the brethren who will come out and be with us, as soon as we can be organized. We have the use of the school house in our town, where I now try to preach twice a month. We long to have you with us again in the fall.

Wandering in Prayer.

Here is another difficulty which is peculiarly distressing to God's children. I am not the only one who has had to mourn over it. Every one who prays feels it at times. We kneel down in God's house, or in our own private chambers. We wish to speak to our Father who is in secret. And perhaps, for a moment or two, we really pray in earnest. Then, almost without being aware of it, our attention flags. Some thought of quite another kind springs up, uncalled for in our minds. And thus we find ourselves speaking to God with our lips, while our hearts are far from him. And it is very humbling to confess that sometimes the most trifling thoughts steal into our minds at such solemn moments. It is not that we are merely drowsy; that would be bad enough. But our thoughts fly off at times to matters of the most trivial nature. The world and sin still hover about us, even when we are upon our knees before God.

Now, is there any remedy for this? I believe there is; and if we use it, the evil will grow less and less, and we shall, in the end, master it.

First, look upon such wandering in prayer, as a direct offense against God. Ask him to forgive it, for Christ's sake, and to grant you power to resist it. Next, watch against it before-hand. Our Lord couples watchfulness and prayer together. He says, "Watch and pray." (Mk. 8: 33.) And Peter says. "Watch unto prayer." (1 Pet. 4: 7.) Try and get your mind into a serious frame before you begin to pray. For if you rush at once from worldly occupations into God's presence, you will be pretty sure to have your heart full of them all the while; thus your mind will be distracted, and though your lips may pray, your thoughts will be roving elsewhere. Set a watch too upon your heart whilst you are praying. Keep before you, all the while, the fact that you are speaking to God, and that you are in his presence. Make prayer a real thing. You are confessing real sins. You are begging for real blessings. You really want to be heard and answered.

In this manner you may, with God's help, in some measure at least, remedy the evil. I do not say you will entirely overcome it, for I believe that few Christians, if any, have gained such perfect control over their thoughts that at all times, when on their knees, they are able completely to shut out every thing else, and to realize the presence of God only. But you may, by watchfulness and perseverance, do much toward keeping your mind clear of those worldly intruders which so much disturb our devotion.

I ought, perhaps, to mention that the power of keeping the heart and the mind fixed in prayer often depends upon the state of the body. Hence, in the time of sickness, or of any bodily suffering, how difficult it is to give the whole mind in prayer, or in any other spiritual exercise. It is a happy thing for us that God knows our frame, and can bear with our infirmities.

Infidelity.

Adventists are very often held up before the public from the pulpit, as infidels, and the truth they believe as black infidelity. A few evenings ago, I heard a preacher, somewhat noted in this direction, state in his sermon, that if it was possible for men to understand the Bible, it would lead them to believe there was no God!! This led into the secret why we are called infidels, and the ground of their misrepresentation; because Adventists believe and teach that the Bible is a revelation from God, and designed by him to be understood by the faithful searcher. And instead of leading them to believe that God is a great eternal nothing, "without body, parts or passions," they believe the Bible says of him that he is a real, self-existent being: and all those that love him, the pure in heart shall see him. (Mat. 5: 8.)

The meaning of infidelity once was —before the preaching of Adventism—a disbeliever in the Bible. But the word has changed its meaning in some localities. Now, if a man believes the Bible, as it reads, it being its own interpreter, he is branded with infidelity. But the time is come when Bible truth is not put down with such argument as hard names.

That "Machine" No. 2.

The next we read of music is at the the dedication of the golden image, the king of Babylon set up in the plain of Dura. (Dan. 3: 1–6.) But had not God preserved his children by a miracle they would have perished for non-compliance with that arrangement.

We have now examined the history of God's people for more than 4,000 years as given in the Bible, and fail to find one direct order from God to use music in his worship. But suppose we did, we should not feel justified in using it unless sanctioned by the new covenant; for the following reasons. (1) Under the law they might keep bond-men and women; but under the new covenant, never. (2) Under the Old they must sacrifice; but under the New, never. (3) Under the Old they put away their wives for various causes; but under the New but for one cause. (4) Under the Old they might have a plurality of wives; but under the New, but one at the same time. (5) Under the Old they were compelled to gather at old Jerusalem; but under the New where two or three meet in Jesus' name, there is the place of worship.

Perhaps some will say, God ordered trumpets to be blown. Very true. But it was for the same purpose we ring our church bells. But no one expects the bell-man to give them the key or ring while the church is singing. But "drowning men will catch at straws."

We next examine the New Testament on the question of music in sacred service. The first is that of the angels that announced to the shepherds the birth of Jesus. (Lk. 2: 9–14.) It is said there was a multitude of them and their song was full of divine joy; but no music. It would seem that if they used music in heaven (as some say,) it would have been very appropriate at that time. For if Jesus was to be the patron of instrumental music it would have been befitting at his birth. Why not?

The next record of any note is when he rode into Jerusalem. "The whole multitude of the disciples began to rejoice and praise God with a loud voice and saying, blessed be the king that cometh in the name of the Lord. Peace in heaven and glory in the highest." Matthew records "Children crying in the temple and saying, Hosanna to the Son of David." But the Pharisees, who had such a fine sense of harmony in music, were displeased. They looked upon it as no better than an Indian pow-wow. They, no doubt, thought they needed an organ to strengthen the weak voices and soften the stronger ones; and so intense were their feelings that they could not restrain them, but demanded of the Master that he should rebuke them. But Jesus, so far from complying with their wishes, told them that "out of the mouths of babes and sucklings God perfected praise." (Mat. 21: 16.)

Next in order is the supper. There they "sang a hymn." (Mat. 26: 30.) This is all we know about the songs sung by angels at his birth, or the multitude at his ride into Jerusalem or himself and his disciples at the close of the last supper. But there is not a word to encourage the music lovers, but a strong rebuke to those who would call the songs of the saints "an Indian pow-wow."

I notice the directions given by the apostles to the church concerning this order of worship.

"Is any merry, let him sing psalms. (Jas. 5: 13.) "I will sing with the spirit, and will sing with the understanding, also." (1 Cor. 14: 15.) "And be not drunk with wine wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit, speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord." (Eph. 5: 18, 19.) "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and spiritual songs; singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord." (Col. 3: 16.)

How it is possible for any one to suppose that the instrumental music is pleasing to God in his worship, with these plain facts practised by Christ and spoken by his apostles? I do not know but it will be said, it is taught in Revelation. I deny this and will prove it. The harp is mentioned three times in that book, and in each place is used as a symbol of of the voice in song. Proof, Rev. 5: 8: Here each had a harp and golden vial full of odors: but the vials and odors and harps are explained in the next sentences: "Which are the prayers of saints;" "And they sang a new song, saying," etc., Now we understand what the harp represented. Read v v. 8–14, and ch. 14: 2, 3; 15: 2–4. This last speaks of their singing the song of Moses and the Lamb. Surely this ought to teach us that the harp is but a figure of the songs of the redeemed family, for not a word is said about music in their song.

Juvenile Exegesis.

"Charlie," said a friend of mine to her little five-year old son, "do you remember the Scripture verse you learned last Sunday."

"Yes, ma'am."

"Well, repeat it, my son."

"Be satisfied with what you've got, and don't pout."

How's that for juvenile exegesis on the passage, "Be content with such things as ye have,"

Here's another:

One of my infant-class scholars, a bright little girl of four summers, in repeating her verse, said: "I love them that love me, and—and—they that seek me the first thing in the morning shall find me."

Could a Hebrew of the Hebrews have gotten at the meaning more correctly?—Sel.

Seeing the Point.

A boy returned from school one day with a report that his scholarship had fallen below the usual average.

"Well," said his father, "you've fallen behind this month, have you?"

"Yes, sir."

"How did that happen?"

"Don't know, sir."

The father knew, if the son did not. He had observed a number of dime novels scattered about the house, but had not thought it worth while to say anything until a fitting opportunity should offer itself. A basket of apples stood upon the floor, and he said:

"Empty out those apples, and take the basket and bring it to me half full of chips."

Suspecting nothing, the son obeyed.

"And now," he continued' "put those apples back in the basket."

When half the apples were replaced, the son said:

"Father, they roll off, I can't put any more in."

"Put them in."

"Do you expect to fill it with apples? You say you don't know why you fell behind at school. Your mind is like the basket. It will not hold more than so much. And here you have been filling it up with chip dirt—dime novels."

The boy turned on his heel, whistled, and said, "Whew! I see the point."

Not a dime novel was seen in the house from that day to this.—Sel.

Do it Well.—Said Harry, throwing down the shoe-brush, "There, that'll do; my shoes don't look very bright. No matter; who cares?"

"Whatever is worth doing, is worth doing well," replied a serious but pleasant voice.

Harry started, and turned round to see who spoke. It was his father. Harry blushed. His father said, "Harry, my boy, your boots look wretched. Pick up your brush and make them shine. When they look as they should, come into the library."

"Yes, pa," replied Harry, pouting; and, taking up the brush in no very good humor, he brushed the dull boots until they shone nicely. When the boots were polished he went to his father, who said to him:

"My son, I want to tell you a story. I once knew a poor boy whose mother taught him the proverb, 'Whatever is worth doing, is worth doing well.' The boy went to be a servant in a gentleman's family. He took pains to do every thing well, no matter how trivial it seemed. His employer was pleased, and took him into his shop. He did his work well there. When he was sent on an errand he went quickly, and did his work faithfully. When he was told to make out a bill, or enter an account, he did that well.

"This pleased his employer, so that he advanced him step by step until he became clerk, then a partner, and now a rich man, and anxious that his son Harry should learn to practice the rule which made him prosper."

"Yes, my son; so poor that I had to go into a family and black boots, wait on the table, and do other little menial services for a living. But doing these things well, I was soon put, as I have told you, to do things more important. Obedience to the proverb, with God's blessing, made me a rich man."

Harry never forgot the conversation. Whenever he felt like slighting a bit of work he thought of it, and felt spurred to do his work well. "Whatever is worth doing, is worth doing well," cheered him in his daily duties.

Michigan Central Railroad

The following, with reference to this popular road, is from the Peoria Transcript, all of which we can heartily indorse:

"The coming season will be one of unusual activity with the traveling public. East of Chicago the Michigan Central and its connections is the most expeditious of all great through lines to New York and other cities on the coast. A cotemporary says the most painstaking General Passenger Agent of the best line of railway in the United States is Henry C. Wentworth, of the Michigan Central. And what has given the great Niagara Falls route to New York and the East such perfection and popularity of management is the fact known to us by nearly eighteen years of travel on it, that, from brakeman to superintendent, there is not a man in the employ of the Michigan Central who is not of the same cast in this particular sphere. The Central has been thoroughly re-equipped for the present season with steel rails and Pullman palace cars, which run without change from Chicago to New York. For safety, speed and elegance, its appointments and arrangements are the perfection of railroad management."

If not, please give him the name of your minister, the number of members in your church, its service, how, when and where held, and such other information as may be of interest or necessary to carry into practical effect the tabulation of our Conference statistics.

Indiana Tent.

Brethren in Northern Indiana who have subscribed towards this enterprise are notified that the money is needed as the canvass is already out. Those who have not subscribed are notified that their assistance is needed. Shall we not manifest a zeal worthy of the cause in which we have engaged? E. C. ANDRUS.

To the Brethren.

I am engaged in preparing a work, designed especially for the ministry, on the importance and necessity of preaching the second coming of Christ, as an event nigh at hand. My object is, in cooperation with the brethren, to have a copy placed in the hands of every minister of the gospel in the United States. All can see the importance of such an enterprise. If one only out of five hundred could be induced to give the trumpet a certain sound, it would pay for the labor and outlay. Of course, it will not be expected that those for whom the work is designed, will purchase it. This will be the work of our brethren all over the country to see that a copy is placed in the hands of every preacher of the gospel.

I propose then to request pledges and subscriptions from the brethren, in order to secure its publication, the amount subscribed to be repaid in books, if required. The nature of the work may be gleaned from the following outline:

The Christian minister—a watchman; the duties of a watchman; Watchman, what of the night? The time of the end; Signs of the times—Fulfillment of Prophecy; Prophecy in relation to the First Advent; Prophecy in relation to the Second Advent; Signs of the Second Advent, Celestial, Terrestial, Moral, National. The Papacy, Spiritism, Time, Tarrying Time, etc., etc.

I would also state that the work will be useful to all for reference, as it will be largely interspersed with Scripture quotations. Any who may feel disposed to aid in this enterprise, may address Miles Grant or G. T. Adams, Crisis office, Boston, Mass.; J. V. Himes, TIMES office, Chicago, Ill.; or myself at Arena, Wis.

Notice

As our next Q. M. is in a new field, let there be a general gathering of the brethren and sisters. Come to work for God with hearts imbued with the love of God, and prepared to work in and give a new impetus to the cause we love.

The Campmeeting Committee are especially requested to be present to decide when and where the Campmeeting shall be held, next August or September. We wish the Committee to examine the several places already viewed, and decide which they will choose. The Committee are: D. A. Dickinson, D. Moore, I. Cooley, D. R. Lewis, A. G. Lewis, M. V. Plank.

F. H. KENEY,
Chairman Campmeeting Committee.

To the Advent Christians of Iowa:

Dear Brethren: We have bought a tent for our Conference use, and have paid for it except about FORTY DOLLARS. We had enough subscribed to pay for it entirely; but some of the subscribers proved delinquents, and do not even respond to my letters. What shall be done? Shall our tent lie unused all Summer? Who will take the trouble to look up those who promised to pay and have not done so? Who will collect the balance due, and then take the tent and go forth in the name of the Lord, to proclaim the gospel of the kingdom. It is time we began to wake up to this matter. D. A. DICKINSON.

To those that were not there, we we wish to say, important business will come before this Conference, and we wish all the lovers of Jesus to be there. Come to work for God and his cause. Advertising alone does not produce success. The thing which is advertised must have intrinsic merit, or else large advertising will eventually do it more harm than good. If you have anything which you know to be good, advertise it thoroughly, and you will be sure to succeed; if it is poor, don't praise it, for people will soon discover you are lying.

Such is the policy of the Burlington Route, which runs to three great regions in the West: 1st, to Omaha, connecting with the great Pacific Roads. 2d, To Lincoln, the capital of Nebraska, and all that beautiful region south of the Platte, filled with R. The roads are splendidly built, have the best bridges, finest cars, the Miller platform and coupler, and the safety air brake (to prevent the loss of life that is everywhere else happening); Pullman's sleepers, Pullman dining cars, large and powerful engines (to make quick time and good connections), and are in a word the best equipped roads in the West. So that if you desire to go safely, surely, quickly and comfortably to any point in Southern Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, or on the Pacific Roads, be sure that you go "By way of Burlington."

E. H. WHEELER'S

IMPROVED

AXLE & THIMBLE SKEIN

PATENTED JAN. 12, 1872.

THE LIGHTEST, STRONGEST, AND BEST AXLE BEFORE THE PUBLIC.

Less liable to break, and cannot spring under any amount of weight that can be put upon it.

It takes a smaller sized axle and bolster or sandboard than the same sized skeins of common style; is more simple and easier to fit, the skein being of uniform taper, without shoulders upon the inside a better fit is secured. The axle can be turned in a common lathe to fit the thimble, by putting one end out of center.

The arm, or spindle, is so made as to secure the proper set of the wheels, when moderately dished, with the bottom line of the spindle on a parallel line to the bottom of the axle, an important principle never before attained. The set of the wheels is a perpendicular or right angle to the bottom line of the axle upon the face of the spokes, upon their lower half.

This cut shows the thimble and lug for the tension rod across the bottom of the axle, from thimble to thimble, and the socket for the bolster, or the sandboard, as the case may be. I also use a sand guard to keep the dirt out of the shoulder of the hub; but it is not shown in this cut.

RIGHTS FOR SALE.

ONE YEAR FREE

to every minister of the gospel of any denomination who will send us his address, or otherwise signify his desire to receive it.

We request the readers of the TIMES to aid us in presenting this offer to such ministers as are devoted men of God, and who would probably accept, and be benefitted thereby.

Do not urge any one to accept, for we have not the means, at present, to send very many papers free, but trust the Lord will provide enough to send it where it should go to prepare the way for our weekly papers, and stir up the watchman to sound the alarm to a guilty world. A copy of the Banner from one with whom the minister is acquainted is worth a dozen sent by mail from the office of publication.

THE BANNER AND TIMES.

We will send the Banner six months free to all new subscribers to the TIMES, and to all old subscribers who mention this offer when they remit (to TIMES office) for 1872. We make one condition to this offer, viz, before the close of the six months they must either notify us to discontinue, or remit for the future, as soon as convenient.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, May 21, 1872.

Warleigh's "Demonstration."

[Second Article.]

Says Mr. Warleigh again:

But our doctrine is said to be dangerous. "If I tell my people," said one not long ago, "that there are no endless sufferings for them, but that the wicked will come to an end, they won't care for my warnings, and will never repent." What a vain begging of the question is this! The simple question is—What is God's truth? for that alone can be profitable to the conversion of sinners. Nor will he give his blessing to a lie on which side soever it may be. Endless pains have with reiterated energy been preached almost universally now for fifteen hundred years; and what good has been done? Look at so-called Christian England, where but few weeks pass, if indeed any, when sinners are not threatened with never-ending sufferings. Examine the parishes and congregations where this is most frequently done. Is it there that most of heaven's blessings appear? Where is the effect of their frequent denunciation of endless, ever-enduring torments? Look around and ask where? It is nowhere. How can a lie from beneath convert sinners? How can the ignoring of heaven's truth win souls? There are Scriptural terrors of the Lord. These are profitable; for they appeal to a powerful instinct, which God has implanted in our nature—the love of life and the dread of death, of extinction. With these we can "persuade men," but with the other we cannot. People do not believe it! (pp. 59–60.)

But now, to complete the examination of this question, it will be necessary to point out the foundation error upon which this vast scheme of endless torment has been built. This is the doctrine of the innate immortality of man. Our opponents hold that when he is once brought into being he must necessarily and absolutely live forever as long as God himself shall live; and some have gone so far as to say that even God cannot put him out of being, inasmuch as he cannot perform a contradiction. To oppose this doctrine we are quite aware that we shall have to go against the pride of intellect which is the accumulation of thousands of years, and to differ from men of the highest reputation. The dogma of the immortality of the soul, as it is phrased, is established as an undoubtable and undoubted truth; and it is thought as senseless and shocking to deny it as to deny the existence of God. And yet, strange as it may seem, it can be proved by neither reason nor Scripture. Those who first introduced it offered it only as a conjecture; and it was not received as true till philosophising Christian teachers gave it currency by a non-natural interpretation of certain texts. After much opposition from those who held forth the simplicity of their faith in Christ, it was almost universally believed in. Too soon was it perceived what advantage could be taken of it to keep the people in bondage and dependence upon the priesthood. The dogma of endless torment followed as a matter of course; for as the soul, as alleged, must live to endless ages, and as the vast majority of those who died were not holy, and fit for heaven, where were they to live but in hell, writhing in endless tortures? The contemplation of this became intolerable to the human mind, especially to the survivors of those who had died in their sins. Hence the invention and introduction of purgatory, indulgences and masses, which have so vastly enriched the priesthood through their assumed power of praying souls out of torment, and of introducing them into glory. The deluded people were instructed to look upon the Pope and bishops as little gods, who held the eternal destiny of people in their hands; and at last the minds of the people became so degraded and so incapable of thinking for themselves, that they actually believed all this and much more of the same sort. As they loved their departed friends; parents and children, husbands and wives, brothers and sisters, rushed to the priesthood; the rich with their untold riches and unnumbered acres, and the widow with her two mites; without which this holy priesthood, those loving fathers, would not stir a little finger to help the tortured soul out of misery. Of course these golden revenues were much prized, and the doctrine upon which all the profit was founded became stereotyped. If any questioned all this usurpation, they were consigned to the flames, without the option of a single mass to take them out.

The Reformers saw all this, and their indignant spirits rose to the occasion. Luther himself denounced the dogma of the immortality of the soul and of endless torments. But "the spirit of error," the deceiver of the nations, contrived to get these dogmas introduced into the Reformed Church, into the standard articles of some branches, and into the teachings of almost all her ministers. Protestant clergymen do not, indeed, thus increase their income, though many of them assume the false power of the priesthood and ask for "offerings;" but it seems not a little gratifying to poor little human fallen nature, to stand aloft over the heads of the people, and in the name of the Most High, as they allege, deal out threatenings of endless wrath and misery among their must-be silent hearers. And if any one questions the truth of such teaching, it is almost like putting his hand into a wasp's nest. The teachers take alarm, and try and sting his character, to misrepresent his doctrine and neutralize his efforts; and thus Bible reading and inquiry are stopped, and consequently this giant Error keeps his goods in peace.

Our purpose now will be again to search the Bible to see what it teaches concerning this point of the alleged immortality of the soul. It will be seen that it does not teach the innate, intrinsic immortality of man; but that it does teach that he is capable of immortality, and shall certainly have it if he be united to the immortal God, as the branch to the vine, and so made a "partaker of the divine nature." It further teaches, as we believe and will show, that if a sinner be not thus united to God, and be not a new creature, he must become extinct. The Scripture teaching on the pneumatology and psychology of man will clear up every difficulty. (pp. 63–5.)

It is really melancholy for the prospects of pure truth, when our constituted guides put forth the notion that the "indwelling Ego," or soul, has form, and some kind of "corporiety or material substance;" so that when it leaves the body and becomes "unclothed," it is likely still to preserve "a distinct objective existence," and that hereafter this Ego, this subtle material soul "shall aggregate to itself certain elements from the surrounding environments," and thus make for itself an other body similar to its present body. This is put forth with an air of profundity; but is it worthy of a name better than rubbish? In one short verse, the teaching Spirit of the Most High has shown us more of psychology and pneumatology of man than can be found in all the papers and treatises of those who write on the subject, apart from the Bible. It teaches us that into the earthly frame, which God called ha-adam, he breathed his Spirit, and thus made man a living creature. This is the Bible's teaching when we let it speak for itself. (p. 71.)

(To be continued.) C.

"I am a Clergyman; I am Posted."

There are some very important lessons to be learned by noting the self-conceit, pride of position, and scholarship, of some persons who "know nothing yet as they ought to know." We give one illustratio[illegible] this.

Last Autumn, while passing through Wisconsin, homeward on the train, we heard two men, who sat near by, conversing about the scenery of the prairies. One remarked—"All this shows the action of water. These western prairies have at some time been entirely covered with water." We had become weary of silence and felt like talking, and only waited the proper opportunity to ask a question. When their conversation ceased, we asked—

"When do you suppose these prairies were submerged with water?"

"Oh! I do not know, but it is evident they have been. Don't you think so?"

"Yes," we replied. "And may it not have been in the the time of the flood?"

"No," was the quick reply, "the flood was never here. The flood covered only a small part of the earth."

"But," we replied, "the Bible tells us that it 'covered all the high hills that were under the whole heaven, and the mountains were covered. And all flesh died that moved upon the earth.'"

"Ah!" said he, "you do not understand the Bible; the Bible does not mean all the earth. I am a clergyman. I have looked into these matters. I am posted. It is now given in by all scholars of note in our schools, by theological students and eminent ministers, that the flood covered a radius of only five hundred miles in Asia."

We replied—"If this be so, it seems a want of wisdom and prudence to have constructed such a huge and costly ship to escape such a flood. Noah and family could have moved out of that territory, on the old style of travel, at much less expense and labor and time than it took to build the ark. Again, the story about all those animals coming into the ark instinctively. How about this? Were there not animals enough in other parts of the earth?"

"Ah!" said our clergyman, "perhaps the flood covered a larger radius than I mentioned, but it never covered the whole earth. Do you believe the ark was large enough to hold all the animals said to have gone into it?"

"Of course I do. I believe the Bible, and it is so recorded. Do you not believe the Bible?" we asked.

"Oh! yes, I believe the Bible; you don't understand it. It doesn't mean so. This is your difficulty," said the clergyman. "The ark would not hold one eighth of the animals said to have entered it."

"We wish to understand the Scriptures. Who shall tell us what they mean if they do not explain themselves?" we replied.

"What denomination do you belong with?" asked our posted clergyman.

"The Second Advent Denomination."

"Are you a minister?"

"Yes, I have spent some years in the work of preaching."

"You do no not believe in the immortality of the soul, then?"

"No, I believe the Bible, and that teaches me that the soul is mortal and immortality is offered us."

"Have you seen Prof. Bartlett's book—'Life and Death Eternal?'" he asked.

"Yes, I have the book."

"What do you think of that?"

"I think it a very shallow and weak effort, perverting and mistaking nearly all our positions, and then reasoning from a false base.

"Well, Prof. B. is perhaps the strongest reasoner in the country. I am a student in the institution in which he is a teacher in Chicago. I am a Congregationalist minister. If you think him weak I don't know who you would think an able man."

"We do not call him weak, the trouble is with his theory. The stronger the man the weaker his subject appears when he attempts to sustain error. Have you seen Mr. Constable's Review of Prof. B's. book?" we asked.

"No. Who is Mr. Constable?"

"He is an Episcopal minister, of some note, in Cork, Ireland, a destructionist. He has given a short review of Prof. B., which will cause his ears to tingle."

"Have you seen Mr. Landis' work on the Soul?"

"Yes, and we find him in the same condition with Prof. B. and less satisfactory to his readers."

"Have you seen Dr. Mattison's work on the Immortality of the Soul?" he asked.

"Yes, a young lady recently converted had it loaned to her by her minister to indoctrinate her, and she wished me to read it and give my objections, if I had any, to the following—'That the human soul is immortal is shown by the sympathy and affection we feel for our kindred after they die. If the soul was not immortal all interest and affection would cease for them the moment they die.' I read this proposition of Dr. Mattison's then asked the young lady, 'Did your father ever kill a calf?' 'Yes,' was the reply, with surprise. 'Did its mother ever moan for it after death?' The point of this simple illustration was palpable. The young lady, replied 'Yes, and if the doctor's proposition is good, then the cattle and other animals have immortal souls.' All can see this."

"Our posted clergyman had fully endorsed the doctor's proposition when I repeated it, but when he saw it exploded by this simple figure of the dead calf, his self-confident spirit broke down; but after resorting to some low talk he resumed the subject.

"Can you read Hebrew and Greek?" he asked.

"No, I cannot read either, but I have seen men who could, and consulted books of some such. I suppose you can read both."

"Yes, I can, and if you could, you would see that the original proves the soul immortal."

"Why then do not our linguists and lexicographers so translate and develop the original? If you can read Hebrew you of course know that the term nephesh chaiyah, translated 'living soul' in Gen. 2: 7, is the same in Gen. 1: 20, 21, 24, 30, and 7: 22, and shows that all animals are souls."

"No, I never examined it."

We now thought best to test his posting. "Have you read Prof. Hudson's 'Debt and Grace?'" we asked.

"No. Who is he? I never heard of him."

"He was a Congregationalist minister, and a Prof. in one of your colleges. This work has been extensively circulated among scholars, and is admitted an able work. Have you seen Panton Ham's work on the Nature of Man?"

"No. Who is he?"

"He is a Congregationalist minister in England, who taught the mortality of the soul. Have you read Whately, White, Moncrief, McCulloh, Leask, whose works are extant, and who are admitted to be men of sound learning? They all teach that the soul is mortal, and eternal life can be had through Christ."

"No, I have never seen any of these works."

"But you claimed to be posted; and on such subjects as these, where long thorough discussion is being had it becomes us to read what can be said on both sides. Have you ever read any work on the subject of man's mortality in opposition to the immortality of the soul?"

"No, I have not."

"Will you read one? I have Whitmore on 'The Doctrine of Immortality.' I will give you a copy. It is better to be posted.

He took the book and moved to a distant seat. Our conversation closed. I pray the Lord to "post him" in the truth in Christ:—I. C. Wellcome.—Crisis.

Strong Testimony.

A friend hands us the following, clipped from the New Haven Palladium, and says, "Are there not some in other denominations who would bear the same internal testimony?"

In the Congregational churches, the spirit of religious worship appears to be on the decline. The reason of this doubtless is, that the principle part of our church service is the sermon; and, as a general rule, the less there is of the gospel in it, the better satisfaction it gives. The "old fogies," who had some taste for religious instruction from the pulpit, are rapidly dying out; the people are thought to be more generally instructed; and so the "congregation of the period" demands two orations every Sabbath, which shall be as innocent as possible of the common teachings of the New Testament. If the singing is performed by a quartette or a single female, if a female solo can be found to do it, the time so employed is not grudged, but otherwise the prayers and the praises are expected to be short and swift.

Our popular ministers have a reputation for eloquence and originality, not in presenting the claims of the gospel, but in discussing the exciting and absorbing topics of the day, on some question of modern science or philosophy, falsely so-called, in reference to which they cram for the occasion. If the preacher has a touch of the harlequin, and a graceful facility at a quib or a joke, he will draw the largest crowd, but at the same time bring no vital increase to the church. Ministers of this class, who attract great numbers of curious hearers, have seriously demoralized the Congregational churches and ministry, and done an immense injury to the religious sentiment of the people. They are most popular lecturers, whose performances are a substitute for "Sunday theatricals."

The evident tendency in our churches is to a decline of the worship of God, and a more earnest worship of the sermon and the minister. So, if the sermon ceases to be entertaining or exciting, or if it treat of repentance, faith, love to God and man; or if the minister is independent in his relations to the congregation, the "leading men" of the parish —those Diotrephean prefects of modern Congregationalism—pronounce his "usefulness at an end," and proceed to cast down the god they have set up.

CHAPTER III.—MAN, A LIVING SOUL.

I. When we say that man was originally and properly earth, and that what he originally was, he might and does become again, we are far indeed from supposing that this was all he intended to become when God formed him. God had a far higher end in view. The figure which in its organized yet lifeless state was man, was also to be man endowed with life and capacities of a high order. We come then to the final stage of the creation of the human race.

II. When we read in Gen. 2:7, "that God formed man of the dust of the ground," we find it added that he also "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." Man had been at first a beautifully fashioned and wonderfully organized lifeless figure. He becomes by a further act of God, a living soul. How he became so we are told, as well as what he became.

III. God breathed into the nostrils of the lifeless figure the breath of life. (Nishmath chajim.) We will further bring proof from Scripture as to what this breath of life was. We will at this stage of our inquiry, assume that it is identical with what is elsewhere called "the spirit," or "the spirit of man," or "the spirit of God." (Ruach.) We will here also state briefly what we hold this breath of life or spirit to be. We are not going to enter philosophically into this question, for that we hold ourselves utterly unable to do. We doubt greatly that man has as yet mastered the properties of that matter which is to a great extent open to the inspection of his senses. We hold him then incapable of analyzing that spirit which is imperceptible to sense. But to some extent we hold ourselves capable of knowing from Scripture what the breath of life, or the spirit breathed into man, by God, is. We hold it then to be a direct emanation from God himself; to be the divine influence and power proceeding from God to man: to partake therefore of the divine attribute of immortality. This breath of life we cannot imagine to be capable of death. We might as well, I suppose, imagine God himself to be capable of dying. We also suppose that whatever this breath of life resides in, must live as long as this breath of life abides in it. We suppose this breath of life to be the grand vivifying power of God; not only living itself, but giving life. We cannot imagine death to be where this spirit is.

IV. We also suppose that the effect of the entering in of this breath of life differs according to the organization of the subject on which it operates. This does not limit the power of God, for it is he who creates each different organization, and creates one different from another for the very purpose of producing the difference of effect. Nor does it alter the nature of the breath of life which is in all subjects of its operation the very same, while it produces according to the organization of each subject a different effect according to the will of God, who both forms and inspires. But it produces in different subjects a difference of life, according to the organization upon which it acts. The breath of life breathed into the organisation of man produced that human life of which each man is conscious, and which he understands from this inner consciousness far better than anyone can explain to him.

V. Again we suppose of this breath of life that it may remain in any organization as long or as short as God who gave it pleases. It may be destined never to leave the organization upon which it has entered; or it may be appointed to leave after any periods of time fixed upon by God, from the longest to the shortest. What are laws which regulate its eternal or its temporary abode in any organization of the breath of life is its duration. Those in which it abides forever, such as the angels of God, are immortal. Those in which it abides for a time only, are mortal, while their period of life may range from ten thousand years, or ten times that, to an hour or a moment, according to the arrangement of him who gives and takes away. Such in brief we suppose to be that breath of life which God breathed into man, lifeless before its inspiration.

VI. Its introduction into man produced a marvelous effect. The lifeless figure becomes full of life. The inanimate frame becomes instinct with animation. Man becomes a living soul. We are not told that man became the breath of life, or became spirit, which is the same thing. Doubtless, if this were the case we should have been told so. As we are not told so, we reject the idea. We will find hereafter that Scripture expressly rejects it. Man did not become that breath of life which was breathed into him by God. Man was not transubstantiated: earth did not become spirit. But in consequence of the inbreathing into him of the divine breath of life, man, before lifeless, became a living soul. By this is meant that life or soul, by the Hebrews called nephesh, by the Greeks psyche, became, while the breath of life remained in man, the possession or attribute of man. The frame was not lifeless, but full of life; was not soulless, but was a living soul; each part of him while it remained connected with the rest, was instinct with life, soul, animation. The brain, the heart, the lungs, the limbs, each sense, and each minutest or least important part, was, in measure and degree, living. Man became something he was not before: that something was the life, the soul, the animation, which the inbreathing of the breath of life caused him to have.

VII. We are now able in some degree to see both what man originally was, and what he subsequently became. He was originally earth, as lifeless as any clod of earth. Into this earth enters a divine breath of life. The earth does not cease to be earth, but it becomes, what it was not, full of life, it possesses as its attribute what it did not possess, viz., a soul. The breath of life was not the soul any more than it was the body, but it was the producer of the soul, as being the quickener of the body. Hence, we have man in the condition to which the last act of God brought him, no longer the simple creature that he was. He is still as much as ever earth, and earth is still his only essential property; but he possesses also, so long as God pleases, the breath of life from his Maker, and as a consequence of this possession, and so long as he possesses it, he has, or has become a living soul.

VIII. Hence, we see human nature become what may not improperly be termed tripartite. There is still the original man made of earth; into this is breathed a divine immortal spirit, or breath of life; as a consequence, the original man becomes a living soul, becomes something he was not before. But while we see man become thus truly tripartite, we must remember this condition is not essentially his. All he can claim as essentially his, is his earthly origin from clay. What he has become depends for its continuance upon God. He has not been changed into divine spirit possessed of the attribute of immortality. He only has this divine spirit dwelling in him at the pleasure of God. It may be withdrawn, and man sinks back to his original. With the withdrawal of the breath of life of necessity is connected the ceasing to be of that living soul which only the indwelling of the divine spirit causes man to be. Man then no longer is a living soul, but the lifeless figure he was at first. He is dust and dust only. He has not any longer spirit, and he is not any longer living soul. The object of his first creation, life for a purpose, gone, and God does not even think it worth while to preserve the figure, however beautiful, or the organization, however wonderful and perfect. The organization is destroyed: the figure crumbles into its essential dust. The death of man produced by the withdrawal of the spirit is followed by the destruction and disorganization of his form and shape.

CHAPTER IV.—THE BREATH OF LIFE.

I. Having in our last chapter given a general sketch of man in the perfection of his being, and alluded to his constitution as in a measure become tripartite, we think it will be necessary to say somewhat more of some parts of this constitution of man. Of his body we need not say anything, as probably sufficiently understood. But of the breath of life which God breathed into his body, and of the soul, which as a consequence his body then received, of each of these we think it necessary to say more. The true understanding of human nature will be found of the utmost consequence in our understanding many theological questions. As a false understanding of it has led to many grave theological errors, so the true understanding of it will enable us to retrace our steps to truth.

II. In our present chapter we will lay before our readers what Scripture tells us of the breath of life. We will also establish the identity of this breath with a term of far more frequent use in Scripture, viz., the spirit, sometimes spoken of as man's spirit, and sometimes spoken of as God's spirit. Having established this identity, we will in our next chapter enter upon the examination of what Scripture tells us of the spirit. Its more frequent mention of a part of the human constitution under this term, will enable us the better to understand about it. We will then devote a chapter to the understanding of the more important question of the nature of the human soul.

III. We find the first mention of the Breath of Life (Nismath chajim) in Gen. 2:7, where we read of its being breathed directly from God himself into the nostrils of man yet inanimate. From its mention here we should, as we have already stated, infer it to be a direct emanation from Deity, and therefore possessed of one of the divine attributes with which it is connected, viz., the immortality of God. This and some other circumstances we will find to attach to it from a more particular examination of the places in which it is spoken of.

IV. Before we proceed to the examination of these places, we must first draw the attention of our English readers to the fact that they will not apparently find all the places we refer to, justifying our conclusions in the authorized version. This however, is only apparent, and arises from the Hebrew word translated breath, in Gen. 2:7, not being always so translated in the authorized version. It is for example, very frequently translated spirit. We can only assure them that all our references are to passages where the Hebrew word translated breath in Gen. 2:7, occurs. We do not think that we will be guilty in any instance of an oversight in this respect, as we have gone over our ground very carefully. The Hebrew scholar can in any case correct us, and we will willingly acknowledge any oversight that we may unwittingly have made.

V. We find then, in the first place, that the breath of life is an attribute of God himself. It belongs to, and forms part of the divine nature itself. We frequently read in Scripture of the "breath of the Lord." This is plainly that breath of life which we read of in Gen. 2:7, and which we there considered an emanation from the divine nature itself. Even after it has been given to man, even after it has entered into and formed, as it were, part of his constitution, it is still regarded by God as his own breath, properly belonging to himself. "Who," says Elihu, in the ancient book of Job, representing the primitive faith of man upon this subject, "Who hath given God a charge over the whole earth? or who hath disposed the whole world? If he set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath." (Job 33:4; 34:14.) Here we find that the breath of life, even while it is in man, is regarded as the property and attribute of God. It is still his, not man's; it is still as much as ever his; his, as part of his very essence; his, therefore, to dispose of as he pleases; his to take away from man, as it was his at the first in his bounty to bestow it on man.

VI. We see the same great truth in many other places of Scripture. The breath of life which man possesses is ever spoken of as God's gift to man, and not as properly belonging to the essence of man. God ever speaks of himself, as he "that giveth breath unto the people" of this earth. (1 Is. 42:5.) Man is not this breath, but this breath is God's gift to man. Like every other gift, it is distinguishable from the party to whom it is given. Man was once without it, and yet was man. But when man was without it, it was a part of the divine nature residing in the fulness of the Deity himself. (Job 33; 4.)

VII. This breath of the Almighty, i. e., belonging to and part of the divine nature, is that which gives life to man, and which bestows upon man his soul. (Job 33:4; 1 Ki. 17:17-21; Gen. 2:7.) "The spirit of God hath made me," says Job, "and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life;" and in the narrative of the calling back to life of the widow's son by Elijah, we find that the coming back of the soul of the child was dependent on the presence of his breath. We thus find the breath of life from God to be at once the source of life to, and the bestower of a soul upon, man, while it is at the same time clearly distinguished from that life and soul which it bestows. The "breath of the Almighty," which gave Job life, is just as much distinguished from the "life" which it gave, as the "Spirit of God" spoken of in the first clause of the verse is distinguished from Job himself whom that spirit made. In fact, as we shall presantly see, the "spirit of the Lord," and the "breath of the Almighty," are but different descriptions of one and the same divine attribute, and it would be therefore as absurd and as erroneous to confound the "spirit of God" with Job, as to confound the "breath of the Almighty" with Job's "life."

VIII. That this breath of life is only a gift to man, not man himself, and a gift since man's fall taken from every child of Adam, at one time or other, is evident from Isaiah's significant warning against putting our trust in man. "Cease ye from man," says the prophet, "whose breath is in his nostrils: for wherein is he to be accounted of?" (Is. 2:22.) Is not this to say—Why trust in a creature from whom the divine breath of life, which alone distinguishes him from the clods of the valley, is ever trembling in his nostrils, ready to depart? Think not man to be this breath of life. He has it only from God for a little while, and then what is he? The earth that covers him is not more dull and dead. Accordingly death to which we will devote a chapter further on, is ever described as the departure of the breath of life from the man, who was not identical with it, but only had it as a gift for a little while. Life is dependent on its presence. "All the while my breath is in me," says Job, "and the spirit of God is in my nostrils; my lips shall not speak wickedness." (Job 27:3.) Here Job identifies his "breath" with the "spirit of God," speaks of both as the gift from God, and both to be distinguished from and to be separated from himself. And then what is he? Dust and ashes! This is yet more fully set forth in a latter part of this book, in which a description of death is given us which it would be well indeed for our popular platonizing divines to ponder over when they speak of death: "If God set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath; all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again into dust." (Job 34:14.)

IX. Before we proceed fruther, we will just draw attention to a most important point in this entire question; and one on which we will further on dwell at greater length, viz: the fact that all the lower creatures of God are in their lifetime possessed of the very same "breath of life" which man possesses, and which God breathed into man's nostrils when he made him a "living soul." We are told this important fact in the narrative of the destruction of life by the flood, where we read that "all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man; all in whose nostrils was the breath of life." (Gen. 7:21, 22.) We here find the "breath of life," whatever it be, whatever be its nature and whatever its consequences to its possessor, was not the possession of man alone. It belonged to, and was possessed by, all the lower creatures as much as it was by man. The fowl, the beast, the insect, had it breathed into their nostrils as much as man.

X. Now there are a variety of consequences and inferences which follow of necessity from this fact. In the first place, it is quite apparent that the inbreathing into a creature of the breath of life, or the possession by a creature of the breath of life, does not make that creature to become the breath of life. Beasts had this breath of life; but it would not be a true definition of a beast to say it was the breath of life. The same is true of man. God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; but man did not therefore become that which was breathed into him. It would not be true to define man as the "breath of life."

Another consequence which follows from this is, that the possession of the "breath of life" does not of itself confer immortality on that creature. Every living creature whatsoever, every animal below man even down to the minutest animalcule, had this breath of life resident in them. Yet, not one of them was immortal. All, without exception, were made under the law of death. It follows, therefore, that man's possession of it did not of itself constitute him immortal. He might lose his existence, and cease to be, just as the brutes did, for aught that his possession of the breath of life could effect.

A third consequence of this fact is, that the "breath of life" is separable from the creature in whom it may reside. So long as it abides in any creature death cannot come to that creature. The death of all the lower animals at the period of the flood resulted from the separation from them of this breath of life. So in the very same way it was separable from man. And here we see again the truth of the first inference which we drew from this most important fact. When a beast died, the breath of life, whatever it was, was separated from it. There was no longer union, but division. A carcass of a beast lay on the ground, the breath of life had left it, and was where you please and what you please. Which of the two was the beast? The carcase was the beast, as all will allow, though now in a different condition from what it was. Just so with the man, so far as his possession of the breath of life is concerned. A dead body lies upon the ground, the breath of life has left it and is where you please and what you please. But, according to our analogy, the dead body is the man, the man is not the breath of life; that is something which has left the man. Make what you please of it, endow it with what attributes you like, locate it where you may imagine—it is not the man. It has left the man behind it. The carcase it has abandoned is he.

XI. Such are the important inferences we are already able to draw from the fact that the possession of the breath of life was common to man and beast. This, of course, is only our inference from this common possession. Other facts may hereafter arise to alter our conclusion. We here merely argue from the facts of creation, as brought before us up to this point. Man, because of his possession of the "breath of life" cannot be defined as the breath of life, or as an immortal creature, or as inseparable from the breath of life. It may be taken from him, and he would then be but a lifeless carcase, unless some other endowment by his Maker hinders such a consequence. His possession of the breath of life does not.

XII. It now only remains for us in this chapter to show that "the breath of life," spoken of here, and attributed to the lower creatures as much as to man, is identical with "the spirit," which is also said to belong to man; so that we are to consider them but different names or symbols for one and the same thing. This will be of important consequence in more than one respect. As the term "spirit" occurs much more frequently than the term "the breath of life," we will be better able to see more fully what the breath of life really is. We will be able to correct our previous idea of it, if it be in any measure incorrect: or we shall be able to confirm the view we have taken if it be correct; or we shall be able to complete the idea if it be imperfect. On the other hand, it may possibly be that we may be able to confirm or even to extend our just idea of "spirit" from what we have already seen of its synonym, "the breath of life."

XIII. Bishop Horsley, a first-rate Hebrew scholar, and a man of strong intellectual ability, does not hesitate to give on this point the following decided opinion: "None," he says, "who compares the two passages, (viz: Gen. 2:7, and Eccl. 12:7,) can doubt that 'the breath of life' which 'God breathes into the nostrils of man' in the book of Genesis is the very same thing which the 'spirit of God gave' in the book of Ecclesiastes." (Bishop Horsley's Sermons. Sermon 39.)

There can be, we also think, no doubt of this. Where Horsley is here in error is in identifying the soul of man with the spirit; but of this, more hereafter. We are now dealing with the question of the identity of "the breath of life" with the "spirit given by God to man;" and here we thoroughly agree with Horsley's dictum, and for this reason. We doubt if any man of sense could compare together Gen. 3:7 with Eccl. 12:7, without allowing that "the breath of life" in the former, is identical with the "spirit" in the latter. They are evidently but different names for one and the same principle of life which God gave to man when he made him a living soul. We will, however, proceed to give full proof from Scripture that they are but different symbols for one and the same thing.

XIV. The parallelism of Hebrew poetry is a feature which has been frequently remarked by Hebrew scholars. The parallelism to which we are now alluding, is the frequent occurrence of verses composed of two clauses in which the second clause is the repetition of the sentiment of the first in different language. Now in the single book of Job we find such a number of verses of this kind, in which the breath of life in one clause is plainly used for spirit in the other clause, that we can have no hesitation in accepting them as synonymous terms. We will mention some of them. "All the while," says Job in one passage, "my breath is in me, and the spirit of God is in my nostrils." In another place he says, speaking of death, "If God gather unto himself his spirit and his breath." (Job 27:3, 34:14.) We do not see that it is possible to doubt that in passages such as these, the breath of life is said to be identical with his spirit.

XV. What we have seen from these passages in the Book of Job, we also see from the writings of Isaiah, composed on the same principle of poetical parallelism. Thus we read in one place: "Thus saith God the Lord . . . He that giveth breath unto the people upon it [the earth] and spirit to them that walk therein." And in another place he introduces God as saying, "I will not contend forever, neither will I be always wroth; for the spirit should fail before me, and the souls which I have made." (Is. 42:5, 57:16.) From the latter passage indeed, we might suppose that it is the soul of man which Isaiah identifies with his spirit; but the word here translated souls is not the usual Hebrew word for soul, but is the identical word translated breath in Gen. 2:7, and elsewhere. Between the soul and the spirit of man (Hebrew: nephesh and ruach) there is a clearly marked distinction in the Hebrew Scriptures. We challenge any scholar to bring forth from the entire range of the Old Testament a single case of parallelism, such as we have brought forward between "breath" and "spirit." This is the more remarkable when we consider that for once the "breath" (nichma) is spoken of, the Hebrew term nephesh, translated most frequently by "soul," occurs twenty times or more.

XVI. We have then, we consider, established the identity of the "breath of life," breathed into man by God with "the spirit" given to him by God. The words are but different names for one and the same principle. With this established, we have but to remark that from the parallelisms above advanced, we have confirmed some of the observations already made by us. We will merely remark, then, that the "breath of life," is indifferently spoken of as belonging to man and as belonging to God. Job calls it both his own breath and God's breath. It is both in this way; it is man's as given to him by his Maker; it is God's as proceeding from God, an emanation from the Divine nature, going forth from it when God pleases, returning to it when God pleases; not the essential property of man but the essential property of God, and as such deathless and immortal.—Henry Constable, in Rainbow.

Our Dependency.

There is no subject or doctrine more prominent in God's word, than that of our dependency. We are created dependent creatures. In the creation, man was dependent upon God for animation, the breath of life. Then it was that God created living souls out of the dust of the ground. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." (Gen. 2:7.)

But our dependency does not stop here; the soul thus created is still dependent for prolonged animation; and God has provided the meat necessary to supply that dependency. "And God said, Behold I have given you every herb bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat. (Gen. 1:29.)

I might go on to enumerate many more dependencies, but to be brief, the retaining of that breath of life was conditional. Upon a strict obedience to the commands of the Creator. Was that strict obedience faithfully adhered to by the created living souls? It was not. What was the consequence? Why, the living soul, created an animated being, loses its animation, the breath of life," and returns to the dust of the ground. "For dust thou art, and unto dust shall thou return." (Gen. 3:19.) Hence, the living soul becomes exterminated, loses its vitality; and thus we see in Adam's posterity the development and decay of the great human family of living souls, one following after the other down into their silent abode, there to mingle dust with dust, and ever to remain thus, at least, as far as those souls have in themselves, the ability to extricate themselves. And now we learn why the great Preacher in his sermon said, (Eccl. 3:19), "For that which befalleth the sons of men, befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they all have one breath; so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast, for all his vanity." How helpless our condition! How great our dependency!

And must we forever remain silent and forgotten? Has the great Creator forgotten his love, his mercies, his will? Has he willed that we should remain forever lost? Is there any faint glimmering in prophecy; any hope of rescue; any promise whereon we may safely rest our dependency? If not, then who can be saved?

Thanks be to God! We hear one saying: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing ye that dwell in the dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs; and the earth shall cast out the dead." (Is. 26:19.) We hear the Lion of Judah the seed of David, saying (Mat. 19:26): "But Jesus beheld them, and said unto them, with men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible;" thus teaching us conclusively, that we must place our whole dependence upon him that has promised to redeem us. Have you faith to believe that he who promised will or can fulfill? If you have not, you are in a bad condition. You are classing yourself with unbelievers, and must reap the reward of such. If you have faith, show your faith by your works. For it is the only revealed plan in God's word, whereby we can be saved. Hence we are admonished to give all power, honor and glory, to God the Father and to our Lord Jesus Christ. Also it is written (John 3:16) "For God so loved the world." For and on account of precisely their lost condition, wherein all the living souls were involved through disobedience, and unable to extricate themselves, God's mercy was so aroused, that he gave his only begotten Son, in whom was power to overcome the common enemy, death and the grave. Exalt his name! God is Love. "He that loveth not, knoweth not God. For God is love.

But our dependence on Jesus, in whom is all power, is still not exhausted; for we discover our daily dependence upon him for strength and an abiding faith, that will not waver in times of peril. While our great High Priest is officiating in his royal capacity, where no living soul can approach and live, we are exhorted and warned to "watch and pray;" for he will very soon come out of his place to bless his people; and sad will be the time to those who have not placed their whole dependence on him; who have not watched as commanded for the return of the just One to judge the world, the time being nearly due for his return; who have assumed to have the ability within themselves to save themselves by their own good works, and hence have placed no dependence upon another to bestow upon them the promised gift of God, eternal life. O deluded souls!

But how can any living soul watch and pray, who has never placed its dependence upon him, for things present, or things to come? Let us then grasp the full assurance of realizing God's promises of having bestowed upon us a life that shall never end. "when he who is our life shall appear." Praise his name for the offer! We will accept it, in our dependency wholly upon him, and ever be found watching and praying. Cheer up, ye afflicted, all ye in pain and upon beds of sickness. The great Physician is coming. He has the remedies and proposes to cure you.

Hark! Do you hear his voice? He is knocking at the door, saying, "If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him." Dear reader, "Yet a little while, and he that shall come will be here."

Spirit of Man and Beast.

The question has been asked, Does the beast possess body, soul and spirit, the same that man does. I take the position that the brute creation are composed of the same elements that the human family are. The difference is in their organization, intelligence and accountability. Their origin by creation, and their dependence for life is the same. The element which sustains the life of man, sustains also the life of the beast. But with regard to their creation, although we do not find spirit, soul and body, in one verse attributed to the beast, as we do to man, as in 1 Thes. 5:3; and this is only to the Christian, yet we find it abundantly recorded in the Scriptures. It is admitted by all Bible students, that the origin of both man and beast are the same. The Lord formed man of the ground (Gen. 2:7); and every beast out of the ground. (Gen. 2:19). So much for their bodies. Now soul, from the word nephesh, is applied to the beast as well as man. "One soul of five hundred, both of persons and of beeves, and of asses, and of sheep." (Num. 31:28.)

The word soul never means anything that can live after the body is dead, in man, any more than in the beast. But there seems to be a claim that the spirit is something more in man than the in beast. This may be true in a certain sense, when the term is applied to the mind or its qualities. But that is according to their organization; for if the spirit is the conscious part, it can be proved that some of the human family (idiots, etc.,) are not possessed of as much intelligence as the circus rider's horse, or the hunter's dog; they cannot be made to learn as much. But when we come to the word spirit, we find it put for the same original words, and applied to both man and beast alike. In the Hebrew the word is "n'shamah chayim;" breath of lives. Man possessed the breath of all lives. The animals, fowls and creeping things were created first, and man, when created, was animated with the same principle of life contained in the breath. "All flesh died, every beast, fowl and creeping thing, and every man, all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, n'shamah chayim; and every living substance was destroyed. (Gen. 7.) Now if the spirit could be a distinct, conscious entity, it was just the same in the beast as in man, for they were possessed of the same element. But the record says "every living thing was destroyed," therefore if the spirit was a living thing, it was destroyed in man as well as in beast.

In Eccl. 3:19, we have the word ruach, breath. "Yea, they have all one breath." The Douay Bible reads—"Yea, they have all one spirit." It is too late in the day for men to try to make out that this means in beast the breath, but in man it means a living conscious being. This spirit is the principle of life, which all created beings had in common at their creation. Man's superiority consists in his superior organization. In Eccl. 12:7, we read, "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit [ruach, the principle of life] shall return to God who gave it. "Vanity of vanities, saith the preacher all is vanity." Could the preacher mean that a deathless spirit returning to God was vanity? No, but the breath goes to God as it came from God, and the man himself is dead and returned to dust. It is nothing but vanity—as a vapor that passeth away.

What is the difference in the expressions, "the spirit returns to God," and "God gathers the spirit?" In Job 34:14, we read, "If God set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath, all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again to dust." Now where is the evidence that what returns to God is in a conscious state any more than it was when God gave it. It is God's spirit and God's breath by which men live, that is gathered to himself. "Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled; thou takest away their breath, they die and return to their dust." (Ps. 104:9.) "His breath goeth forth; he returneth to the earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." (Ps. 146:4.)

But it may be asked, Does the spirit of the beast return to God? "Thou takest away their breath [ruach, spirit]; they die, and return to their dust." Now I inquire who "they" are. In this Psalm we find mentioned the beast, fowl and the man; all are included in the above language.

Forgive.

"O thou wicked servant, I forgave thee all that debt, because thou desiredst me; shouldest thou not also have had compassion on thy fellow servant even as I had pity on thee" (Mat. 18: 34, 33.)

If there is one thing we are commanded by Christ to do, it is to forgive our enemies, and cherish a feeling of love to all mankind, friend or foe. Hence, the prayer he taught his disciples: "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those that trespass against us." If there is one thing that grieves the heart of the true Christian, it is to see one Christian hold hardness against another. No matter what may have been the wrong done, or how bitter or grevious the injury. No fellow man can possibly insult or wrong or injure us, more than we have wronged God, and crucified afresh his Son, and put his wounds to an open shame. Jesus commands us to love our enemies, bless them that curse us, and pray for those that despitefully use us. Not only are we to forgive our enemies, but more, love them. If a brother or sister is grieved, or troubled, or hath aught against us, we are not to seek to injure them because they don't see things just as we do much less in a harsh way speak unkindly to or against them. Nor yet are we allowed to do what is still worse, in a sanctimonious way, slur them, and by insinuations seek to mar their usefulness. But the Christian's duty is to "lay aside all malice, and all guile, and all evil-speaking." Yea, more; we are to seek a reconciliation. "Therefore, if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, then come and offer thy gift." After the reconciliation is made, then bring thy gift; and, oh, how pleasant in the ear of God will then be thy prayer. How thou wilt then enjoy the fullness of thy communion with him. For, "God is love, and they that dwell in God dwell in love, and God dwells in them." "Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercy, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, and long-suffering." (Col. 3:12, 13.)

One says, "I can't suffer this." Yes my brother; yes my sister; God helping, you can suffer, and rejoice that you are found worthy to suffer for him, and his cause. Yea, if need be, made of no reputation among those who ought to love and cherish you. Oh! we can endure and suffer very much for Jesus and his precious cause.

Paul says, "Charity suffereth long and is kind." How long can we suffer and bear? Ought we not be willing to suffer and bear as long as Jesus bore with us? How many crooked paths have we made since we promised to love and serve him. Instead of resenting coldness, unkindness, and unfaithfulness, he forgives us and intercedes with his Father for pardon for sinning you and me. How careful we should be to test our own hearts, and see that we love not in word only, but in deed and in truth. "Forbearing one another and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any, even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye." "And above all things, put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness;" which "beareth all things, endureth all things." "With all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love." "Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

I know it is hard to forgive those who have deeply wronged, and who have perhaps said bitter and cutting things against us. But here the cross comes in. "If any man will come after me," said Christ, "let him take up his cross and follow me." It is very hard sometimes to take up this cross. It sometimes drives us to our knees, in hard wrestling with God in prayer. But his grace will be sufficient; through Christ we can overcome.

It is natural to human nature to resent injuries. Like Christ's disciples, (Lk. 9:57,) "Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down out of heaven and consume them, as Elias did?" How they would have enjoyed doing this, and then justified themselves! The revengeful spirit was predominant in their hearts. Well do we read, "he that hateth his brother is a murderer."

God seeth not as man seeth. God looketh at the heart. His calm, unprejudiced eye sees lurking in the heart that exterminating feeling that pants for revenge, and would give no quarter; like Cain who slew his brother. And why did he slay him? His brother's works were righteous, and his own evil. Ah! malice, jealousy, revenge; more cruel than the grave. How different was Christ; though he received the insult from the Samaritans, he cherished no malice. He turned and rebuked them, and said: "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of!" [illegible] he rebuked them, he apologized for them. He felt they did not realize the wickedness of the spirit they were indulging. Even when hanging upon the cross, he prayed for his murderers, saying: "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." Especially should those who are under-shepherds follow the example of the great Shepherd.

RUTH M. ROWELL.

XIII. Bishop Horsley, a first-rate Hebrew scholar, and a man of strong intellectual ability, does not hesitate to give on this point the following decided opinion: "None," he says, "who compares the two passages, (viz: Gen. 2:7, and Eccl. 12:7,) can doubt that 'the breath of life' which 'God breathes into the nostrils of man' in the book of Genesis is the very same thing which the 'spirit of God gave' in the book of Ecclesiastes." (Bishop Horsley's Sermons. Sermon 39.)

There can be, we also think, no doubt of this. Where Horsley is here in error is in identifying the soul of man with the spirit; but of this, more hereafter. We are now dealing with the question of the identity of "the breath of life" with the "spirit given by God to man;" and here we thoroughly agree with Horsley's dictum, and for this reason. We doubt if any man of sense could compare together Gen. 3:7 with Eccl. 12:7, without allowing that "the breath of life" in the former, is identical with the "spirit" in the latter. They are evidently but different names for one and the same principle of life which God gave to man when he made him a living soul. We will, however, proceed to give full proof from Scripture that they are but different symbols for one and the same thing.

XIV. The parallelism of Hebrew poetry is a feature which has been frequently remarked by Hebrew scholars. The parallelism to which we are now alluding, is the frequent occurrence of verses composed of two clauses in which the second clause is the repetition of the sentiment of the first in different language. Now in the single book of Job we find such a number of verses of this kind, in which the breath of life in one clause is plainly used for spirit in the other clause, that we can have no hesitation in accepting them as synonymous terms. We will mention some of them. "All the while," says Job in one passage, "my breath is in me, and the spirit of God is in my nostrils." In another place he says, speaking of death, "If God gather unto himself his spirit and his breath." (Job 27:3, 34:14.) We do not see that it is possible to doubt that in passages such as these, the breath of life is said to be identical with his spirit.

XV. What we have seen from these passages in the Book of Job, we also see from the writings of Isaiah, composed on the same principle of poetical parallelism. Thus we read in one place: "Thus saith God the Lord . . . . He that giveth breath unto the people upon it [the earth] and spirit to them that walk therein." And in another place he introduces God as saying, "I will not contend forever, neither will I be always wroth; for the spirit should fail before me, and the souls which I have made." (Is. 42:5, 57:16.) From the latter passage indeed, we might suppose that it is the soul of man which Isaiah identifies with his spirit; but the word here translated souls is not the usual Hebrew word for soul, but is the identical word translated breath in Gen. 2:7, and elsewhere. Between the soul and the spirit of man (Hebrew: nephesh and ruach) there is a clearly marked distinction in the Hebrew Scriptures. We challenge any scholar to bring forth from the entire range of the Old Testament a single case of parallelism, such as we have brought forward between "breath" and "spirit." This is the more remarkable when we consider that for once the "breath" (nichma) is spoken of, the Hebrew term nephesh, translated most frequently by "soul," occurs twenty times or more.

XVI. We have then, we consider, established the identity of the "breath of life," breathed into man by God with "the spirit" given to him by God. The words are but different names for one and the same principle. With this established, we have but to remark that from the parallelisms above advanced, we have confirmed some of the observations already made by us. We will merely remark, then, that the "breath of life," is indifferently spoken of as belonging to man and as belonging to God. Job calls it both his own breath and God's breath. It is both in this way; it is man's as given to him by his Maker; it is God's as proceeding from God, an emanation from the Divine nature, going forth from it when God pleases, returning to it when God pleases; not the essential property of man but the essential property of God, and as such deathless and immortal.—Henry Constable, in Rainbow.

Our Dependency.

There is no subject or doctrine more prominent in God's word, than that of our dependency. We are created dependent creatures. In the creation, man was dependent upon God for animation, the breath of life. Then it was that God created living souls out of the dust of the ground. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." (Gen. 2:7.)

But our dependency does not stop here; the soul thus created is still dependent for prolonged animation; and God has provided the meat necessary to supply that dependency. "And God said, Behold I have given you every herb bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat. (Gen. 1:29.)

I might go on to enumerate many more dependencies, but to be brief, the retaining of that breath of life was conditional. Upon a strict obedience to the commands of the Creator. Was that strict obedience faithfully adhered to by the created living souls? It was not. What was the consequence? [illegible] the living soul, created an animated being, loses its animation, the breath of life," and returns to the dust of the ground. "For dust thou art, and unto dust shall thou return." (Gen. 3:19.) Hence, the living soul becomes exterminated, loses its vitality; and thus we see in Adam's posterity the development and decay of the great human family of living souls, one following after the other down into their silent abode, there to mingle dust with dust, and ever to remain thus, at least, as far as those souls have in themselves, the ability to extricate themselves. How helpless our condition! How great our dependency!

And must we forever remain silent and forgotten? Has the great Creator forgotten his love, his mercies, his will? Has he willed that we should remain forever lost? Spirit of Man and Beast.

The question has been asked, Does the beast possess body, soul and spirit, the same that man does. I take the position that the brute creation are composed of the same elements that the human family are. The difference is in their organization, intelligence and accountability. Their origin by creation, and their dependence for life is the same. The element which sustains the life of man, sustains also the life of the beast. But with regard to their creation, although we do not find spirit, soul and body, in one verse attributed to the beast, as we do to man, as in 1 Thes. 5:3; and this is only to the Christian, yet we find it abundantly recorded in the Scriptures. It is admitted by all Bible students, that the origin of both man and beast are the same. The Lord formed man of the ground (Gen. 2:7); and every beast out of the ground. (Gen. 2:19). So much for their bodies. Now soul, from the word nephesh, is applied to the beast as well as man. "One soul of five hundred, both of persons and of beeves, and of asses, and of sheep." (Num. 31:28.)

The word soul never means anything that can live after the body is dead, in man, any more than in the beast. But there seems to be a claim that the spirit is something more in man than the in beast. This may be true in a certain sense, when the term is applied to the mind or its qualities. But that is according to their organization; for if the spirit is the conscious part, it can be proved that some of the human family (idiots, etc.,) are not possessed of as much intelligence as the circus rider's horse, or the hunter's dog; they cannot be made to learn as much. But when we come to the word spirit, we find it put for the same original words, and applied to both man and beast alike. In the Hebrew the word is "n'shamah chayim;" breath of lives. Man possessed the breath of all lives. The animals, fowls and creeping things were created first, and man, when created, was animated with the same principle of life contained in the breath. "All flesh died, every beast, fowl and creeping thing, and every man, all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, n'shamah chayim; and every living substance was destroyed. (Gen. 7.) Now if the spirit could be a distinct, conscious entity, it was just the same in the beast as in man, for they were possessed of the same element. But the record says "every living thing was destroyed," therefore if the spirit was a living thing, it was destroyed in man as well as in beast.

In Eccl. 3:19, we have the word ruach, breath. "Yea, they have all one breath." The Douay Bible reads—"Yea, they have all one spirit." It is too late in the day for men to try to make out that this means in beast the breath, but in man it means a living conscious being. This spirit is the principle of life, which all created beings had in common at their creation. Man's superiority consists in his superior organization. In Eccl. 12:7, we read, "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit [ruach, the principle of life] shall return to God who gave it. "Vanity of vanities, saith the preacher all is vanity." Could the preacher mean that a deathless spirit returning to God was vanity? No, but the breath goes to God as it came from God, and the man himself is dead and returned to dust. It is nothing but vanity—as a vapor that passeth away.

What is the difference in the expressions, "the spirit returns to God," and "God gathers the spirit?" In Job 34:14, we read, "If God set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath, all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again to dust." Now where is the evidence that what returns to God is in a conscious state any more than it was when God gave it. It is God's spirit and God's breath by which men live, that is gathered to himself. "Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled; thou takest away their breath, they die and return to their dust." (Ps. 104:9.) "His breath goeth forth; he returneth to the earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." (Ps. 146:4.)

But it may be asked, Does the spirit of the beast return to God? "Thou takest away their breath [ruach, spirit]; they die, and return to their dust." Now I inquire who "they" are. In this Psalm we find mentioned the beast, fowl and the man; all are included in the above language.

Forgive.

"O thou wicked servant, I forgave thee all that debt, because thou desiredst me; shouldest thou not also have had compassion on thy fellow servant even as I had pity on thee?" (Mat. 18:32, 33.)

If there is one thing we are commanded by Christ to do, it is to forgive our enemies, and cherish a feeling of love to all mankind, friend or foe. Hence, the prayer he taught his disciples: "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those that trespass against us." If there is one thing that grieves the heart of the true Christian, it is to see the Christian hold hardness against another. No matter what may have been the wrong done, or how bitter or grevious the injury. No fellow man can possibly insult or wrong or injure us, more than we have wronged God, and crucified afresh his Son, and put his wounds to an open shame. Jesus commands us to love our enemies, bless them that curse us, and pray for those that despitefully use us. Not only are we to forgive our enemies, but more, love them. If a brother or sister is grieved, or troubled, or hath aught against us, we are not to seek to injure them because they don't see things just as we do much less in a harsh way speak unkindly to or against them. Nor yet are we allowed to do what is still worse, in a sanctimonious way, slur them, and by insinuations seek to mar their usefulness. But the Christian's duty is to "lay aside all malice, and all guile, and all evil-speaking." Yea, more; we are to seek a reconciliation. "Therefore, if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, then come and offer thy gift." After the reconciliation is made, then bring thy gift; and, oh, how pleasant in the ear of God will then be thy prayer. How thou wilt then enjoy the fullness of thy communion with him. For, "God is love, and they that dwell in God dwell in love, and God dwells in them." "Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercy, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, and long-suffering." (Col. 3:12, 13.)

One says, "I can't suffer this." Yes my brother; yes my sister; God helping, you can suffer, and rejoice that you are found worthy to suffer for him, and his cause. Yea, if need be, made of no reputation among those who ought to love and cherish you. Oh! we can endure and suffer very much for Jesus and his precious cause.

Paul says, "Charity suffereth long and is kind." How long can we suffer and bear? Ought we not be willing to suffer and bear as long as Jesus bore with us? How many crooked paths have we made since we promised to love and serve him. Instead of resenting coldness, unkindness, and unfaithfulness, he forgives us and intercedes with his Father for pardon for sinning you and me. How careful we should be to test our own hearts, and see that we love not in word only, but in deed and in truth. "Forbearing one another and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any, even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye." "And above all things, put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness;" which "beareth all things, endureth all things." "With all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love." "Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

I know it is hard to forgive those who have deeply wronged, and who have perhaps said bitter and cutting things against us. But here the cross comes in. "If any man will come after me," said Christ, "let him take up his cross and follow me." It is very hard sometimes to take up this cross. It sometimes drives us to our knees, in hard wrestling with God in prayer. But his grace will be sufficient; through Christ we can overcome.

It is natural to human nature to resent injuries. Like Christ's disciples, (Lk. 9:57,) "Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down out of heaven and consume them, as Elias did?" How they would have enjoyed doing this, and then justified themselves! The revengeful spirit was predominant in their hearts. Well do we read, "he that hateth his brother is a murderer."

His brother's works were righteous, and his own evil. Ah! malice, jealousy, revenge; more cruel than the grave. How different was Christ; though he received the insult from the Samaritans, he cherished no malice. He turned and rebuked the [illegible], and said: "Ye know [illegible] manner of spirit ye are of!" [illegible] he rebuked them, he apologized for them. He felt they did not realize the wickedness of the spirit they were indulging. Even when hanging upon the cross, he prayed for his murderers, saying: "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." Especially should those who are under-shepherds follow the example of the great Shepherd.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, May 21, 1872.

Too little 'doctrinal' preaching is as injurious to the church as an over dose of the same. A wisely varied reiteration of the fundamental ideas of the gospel tends to fasten them in the mind, and establish the heart of the hearer in a stronger faith.

"T. T." says that a Darwinian has suggested the following reading of Ps. 139: 15, 16:

"My protoplasm was not hidden from thee when, far back in the Silurian epoch, I floated on the sea a frilled and flounced Medusa. Yea, in ages still more remote, before the differentiation had begun, thine eyes did see my sarcode, and in thy thought my limbs took form before they were evolved."

'STUDYING the word of God,' says Cuyler, 'is the most blessed symptom of the revival. And what better grounding for new converts than to build them up on the Bible? Brother H., I sometimes fancy that the devil likes to see a Christian stack his table so full, even of religious literature, that he covers up and hides his copy of God's Word! What this age wants is more Bible, and more Christ!" True enough.

THIS is certainly a day of curious notions; but we remember of seeing none more delicately absurd than this:

When the worst comes to the worst, true religion and goodness have least to fear. When evil shall have become fully educated in the progress of science, and fully emancipated in the progress of liberty, it will have become its own perfect avenger and destroyer.

—Evil is to destroy itself by indulgence to very surfeit! Would not hell work its own cure on that principle?

AT the anniversary of the American Congregational Union, in the presence of a brilliant assemblage of orthodox divines, Mr. Geo. Hepworth dropped the following mot: "It is the peculiarity of the American Church that you can go to heaven on Sunday, and to hell every other day in the week." [Laughter.] The saying was apt enough, and only too true: but the question is whether a believer, seriously, in a hell of eternal conscious misery and wo could jest upon such a matter, or whether an audience of the like faith would indulge roars of laughter over the joke. Evidently the church is wearing its precious dogma very lightly. It is practically taking up Mr. Birk's theory of gehenna—that it is a place good, though not altogether honorable. In any event, if orthodoxy makes a joke of its fiercest teaching, it need but expect that the masses will in turn treat it as a laughing matter.

AT the same meeting Mr. Talmage denounced those who wanted to die and go to heaven. They had better stay here. "When he heard a young man or middle-aged man talk of wanting to go to glory, he always set it down to a torpid liver, and advised him to take a blue pill." [Laughter.] Have a care, gentlemen. This making heaven a less desirable place than earth; this setting forth life as more desirable than death—as not "gain;" this using "hell" to point a joke upon the unfaithfulness of the latter-day church, may bring the thoughtful to their senses, and your favorite dogmas into danger of rejection. Such inconsistencies must sooner or later set the people to thinking.

THE Tribune (N. Y.) reviews the reports certain ministers have made, in which visits to their mothers, and reading the papers are set down among their labors, and remarks: "The cry of ministerial overwork rises from the bodily and spiritual feebleness induced by a sanctified neglect of every rule that is necessary to health, together with the enforced adoption of an unnatural tone of feeling—that gravity which is still considered the chief Christian virtue by many good people." There is a heavy percentage of truth in the first part of the above sentence: the gravity we are not so certain about. A little more would do no harm—sometimes, at least. Instance—when jokes are made about a hell of ceaseless, measureless wo for unnumerable sentient beings; or the coming of Christ to judgment is made a subject of scoffing or ridicule.

"L. D. H." says in the Journal and Messenger:

One Sabbath morning an avowed Universalist read these words: 'He who converts a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death.' 'Wife,' said he, 'what does this mean? What death does this refer to? It can't be the death of the body; for people die after they are converted. It must be the death of the soul.' That knock knocked all of his Universalism out of him, and he was soon rejoicing in Christ.

—And now the brother needs one more knock—to read the passage and accept its literal sense. That will knock out of him all the excuse he ever had for being a Universalist, and establish him in the Bible truth: make an Adventist of him, in sentiment if not in name.

J. HYATT SMITH, pastor of a Brooklyn Baptist church' preaches open communion, to the great disgust of many a brother Baptist. He thinks the Deacons should not be a "detective police," to see that none but our own or members of sister churches partake of the Lord's table; they should, rather, serve those who, having examined themselves, claim seats there. This is sound doctrine; and the following remarks of his are equally good, if only lived up to:

I recognize all churches, worshiping Christ as the divine Savior, as branches of the vine planted on Calvary, and climbing one cross. Errors of doctrine they may have—the glorious church of my adoption is not herself perfect. Christ, formed within a man the hope of glory constitutes that man my brother, whatever his creed, color, country or condition. There is, too, a fellowship of Gospel labor, and I rejoice in the glorious brotherhood of men, anywhere and everywhere, working for the benefit of mankind, and the glory of God. Each is my brother, by whatever doctrinal sign he may be known.

'EVANGELIST' writes upon the interpretation of Scripture. He says:

Some are not satisfied with the plain and obvious sense of Scripture, but are always looking for some deep, mystical and hidden meaning, which common minds cannot discover. They wish to spiritualize it all.... That system is certainly right, and that alone, which will allow all the Bible to mean as it says.

—Here is sound principle surely; but, alas for consistency! behold the application:

I believe that some men will be doomed to suffer endless misery as the just demerit of their sins. Another denies it. I quote those passages in the Bible which, according to their plain, obvious import, do assert it. He says they must not so be understood; they must be parables, or figures of speech, or riental idioms, or have some mystical meaning, or everlasting and eternal must only mean a very long, limited duration.

—A list of Bible texts in "their plain obvious import" asserting the endless misery of lost men is just what we would like to see. However we quoted this passage to ask in the connection, what is the "obvious, plain" meaning of these passages? "The wages of sin is death." "The soul that sinneth it shall die." "Evangelist" must give up his theory or else resort to the spiritualizing he so vehemently deprecates.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

WEDNESDAY, May 8. At 7 p. m. In company with my two daughters-in-law and their children, I left Buchanan for the East. These faithful children, after spending a term of years in the West, now return with their little ones, to visit parents and friends, and get rest and health. Mrs. Edwin Himes returns in sadness, bereaved of her husband. How sad to have our family relations thus broken up by death. All the bright hopes of youth cut off; the head of the family gone, and little ones clinging to the mother for protection and guidance and support. But God has provided for these exigencies of life. He says: "Leave thy fatherless children and let thy widows trust me." So Edwin, after devoting his time and talents wholly to the Lord's cause could leave his family in the hands of him, who has said "I am the widow's God, and a father to the fatherless."

I stopped at Detroit. The waiting ones here are anxious for help. They think the time to favor Zion has now come. And I confess, that things appear different, and look more favorable than at any time since I came West.

Visited Sr. Alley, and Br. E. Cheney, late of Shelbyville, Ill. He gives his sympathy to the few waiting ones in Detroit, but at present with his family attends the church to which the late Dr. Duffield ministered. The Doctor was a millenarian and left in the church many truths which we hold in common. Br. Cheney does not put his light under a bushel, and when the time comes, will take his stand for the Adventist cause.

Here I met Br. J. M. Snook. He is not well but takes a deep interest in the welfare of the cause in this State. Arrangements have been made for the State Conference and Camp-meeting, at Jackson, about the middle of June. I also met Eld. Linn, of the Christian church here, where I attended meeting at night. The leader read from the first chapter of Acts, as the lesson for the evening, which naturally called up the subject of the resurrection, ascension, mediation and return of Christ at the end of this dispensation. I was cordially greeted by many lovers of the Lord.

The Christian church here is of the old fashioned stamp, and repudiates the "modern improvements," so called of the fashionable world. They fear that some of the wealthy Christian churches are mixing up too much with the world.

Taking the steamer at night I sailed up Lake Huron for Lexington, the county seat of Sanilac County, the residence of Eld. Geo. Wright. It is now eight years since our first acquaintance at Lapeer, Mich. He was then in the meshes of the Seventh day dogmas, and struggling for emancipation from the bondage of Judaism, and also, from the domination of the professed inspired leader of this movement, by which he had been oppressed. The spell was broken, and he gave the whole system to the winds. From that time Br. W. has been prospered in the Lord, with his family, and he as a minister has been greatly blessed of the Lord. The visions of the leaders who sought to crush him, and at the same time elect, and place an unworthy man as it proved, over the Seventh-day church at Lapeer, have had this result.

I have now come to spend some weeks with Br. W. in his new fields of labor. I hope to be able to help him in the Lord. I am glad to find Br. W. in the possession of a comfortable home for his family. Would that all our ministers could have the same. The chapel is about three miles from the village, on the Lake shore. It is neat and commodious, and I found it well filled, and the people gave me a cordial reception. I spoke to them of the evidences that Jesus was the Christ, the Savior of men. I liked the appearance of the people. They are intelligent, and, I am informed, industrious, though many of them are poor in this world but rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom.

SATURDAY, May 11. Met with the church at Lexington Ridge. It was a monthly covenant meeting. The attendance was quite general, as the members make a point of being present, and taking part in this important service at the stated times. I addressed them on the objects of the passover, and the Lord's Supper. Then all spoke one by one, to much edification, while at "the Lord's table."

This is the first church raised by Br. Wright in this vicinity. When he began meetings here there was not a praying man in all the region. Now prayers ascend from almost every family. The change has been great and glorious.

At night met again in the New Adventist chapel on the Lake shore. Full attendance, and blessed time. At the close I put up with Mr. Arthur Clark, of Landaff, N. H. He is one of the leading merchants here and an old friend. He and his family attend the Methodist church. I enjoyed a bountiful hospitality. The subject of the condition of the dead came up, and was very freely discussed, with other topics, till a late hour.

Fires are raging in the neighborhood to night, and many are on the watch. But they are not extensive, nor can they now be, as the fires of the last year swept all through this region.

SABBATH, May 12. Though so far from the village, our chapel was thronged, which I am told is usually the case whenever Br. Wright preaches. The Methodist pastors here-about have made special efforts to turn the tide of popular feelings; but thus far they have been like the owl, that perched on the side of the dish to drink, and tipped it over. They have used ridicule largely, as a means to put down the Adventist. But Br. Wright has simply minded his own business, treated them with candor, said nothing against them and has been prospered in the Lord, as might be expected.

One of their ablest preachers was appointed to give a sermon in Lexington on Materialism. It was aimed at the Adventists. He compared them to beasts. Said if man had no immortal soul, then he was like the beasts, and no better. And now said he, let us see how this will work. We will take a class of horses, and preach to them. And so, he began. "Hear O horses! The Lord our God is one Lord." and so he went on in this style exciting much mirth among his brother ministers. Br. Wright with some of his people were present, bearing it meekly, and praying for men that were left to make a mock of the truth of God.

In the p. m. we came to Port Sanilac eleven miles up the Lake, a new field. Brn. Wright and Mackie last year commenced meetings without a soul to sympathize. They pitched the tent and the work of God was revived, and did not cease till they had organized a church, which has been growing ever since. Having no place of worship they resolved to build and have done so. I spoke in the new chapel to a crowd, at night. Surely we could say, "What hath God wrought." But this work has not gone on without hinderance. Almost every form of opposition has been waged to stop the progress of the work. But it has only operated like pouring oil on the fire. The work goes on.

At the close of the sermon, a Mormon Elder, asked me a question on hades and sheol. His object was to show that there was consciousness there. In my reply I showed that although the translators had translated it hell, in many instances, it meant the grave in all. And that there was "no knowledge or wisdom, or device in sheol." This young man belongs to the new branch of the Mormon School who repudiate Brigham Young, and follows young Joseph Smith whose head quarters are at Piano, Ill. They repudiate polygamy, but maintain the same doctrines in general with other Mormons.

Ottawa, Ill.

It came in my way to visit Ottawa, a few days since, and spend a Sabbath with the church there. I enjoyed my visit very much, and the Spirit of the Lord was with us in our meetings. It was good to be there. One man rose in the congregation and covenanted to serve Jesus. The little pilgrim band there have had many trials, but their love for Jesus and the truth still abides. They hold meetings every Sabbath in a hall, and any of our preaching brethren will be welcomed by them. They are few in number, but I was rejoiced to find them so firm in the hope, and I know their perseverance will be rewarded at last. I think they must have heard something about the promise to those who endure unto the end.

FRANK BURR.

A DISCUSSION

BETWEEN

Eld. Clark Braden, of the Christian Church, and Eld. Himes, of the Advent Christian Times.

Upon Four Propositions, Involving the Nature of Man, the State of the Dead, and Future Rewards and Punishments.

ELD. HIMES' NINTH RESPONSE.

My brother says "analuo does not properly mean return." He admits then that it does sometimes, though improperly, bear that sense. And I venture the assertion that the only impropriety in such sense is the rudeness with which it removes one of the chief props of a popular dogma. Analuo is compounded of luo—to loose, untie, undo, dissolve, dismiss; and ana—equivalent to our prefix re. McKnight says: "Luo signifies to loose from a port; and the compound word ana-luo to return to port." Liddell & Scott sustain McKnight, as do others. In twenty-six MSS. of the Septuagint, the term occurs in Josh. 22:8 for a Hebrew verb that always signifies return. In Wisdom, 2:1 we read—"returned [analusas] from the grave." In ch. 5:13—"An arrow parteth the air, which immediately cometh together [aneluthe, returneth] again." "Man cannot bring back [analusai] the soul received" into hades. (ch. 16:14.) "Lacking time they returned" [anelusan]. (2 Mac. 8:25.) My brother will have us read Lk. 12:36 that the servants were waiting for their Master to depart from the wedding. But whoever reads the verse will see that it was his knock at his own door they were waiting and listening for. "Be ye like men waiting for their master when he will return from the wedding; that when he comes and knocks they may instantly open to him."

On 2 Tim. 5:6 my brother asks, "Does he mean return?" Indisputably he does. Paul is speaking of his death, which he calls dissolution, or analusis, something like the English analysis. "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." This was the return Paul anticipated. But I have no objections to the term departure. When used of death it signifies no more than end of life, or departure from life. Webster says—"a friendly taking leave of life," not the exit of an immortal soul. My brother must, then, impeach the Seventy, Liddell & Scott, McKnight, and every translator of the N. T. I know if, or else confess that he, and not myself, is the writhing sufferer from impalement.

But my brother is likely to become the champion self immolater. Not satisfied with being thrust through and through by the Greek authorities, he next rushes upon Webster's lance. Reading his fine distinction between parable and fable, I took down my "Unabridged," and found—"PARABLE. A fable, or allegorical representation," etc. True, Webster draws a distinction between parable and apologue: but the effect of that distinction is to make the narrative in dispute a fable. Bp. Lowth says: "Parable is a kind of allegory which consists in a continued narration of fictitious or accommodated events applied to the illustration of some important truth." My brother used the right phrase—"impaled beyond release." Bewildered persons frequently attribute their own conditions to others.

But I need not spend words upon the parable of Lk. 16. My brother has fairly, however unconsciously, evacuated his position. I never supposed he believed there was literal fire in hades. I knew he denied this flatly. But he must believe it to be logical. He risked everything upon the assertion that Christ's use of Pharisaic ideas without expression of dissent from them, sealed those ideas as truth. Now one of those ideas was that there is literal flame in hades. My brother will hardly be equal to the hardihood of denying that the Pharisees believed this, although he can save his labored "cumulative argument" in no other way. If my brother's position is true, when Christ used the words "tormented in this flame," they understood him to mean literal flame. He expressed no dissent from the Hellenistic-Pharisaic notion; hence, on my brother's premises, he endorsed the literal fire theory, "or he was a deceiver!"

But my brother flatly asserts there was and is no fire in hades!

He is, consequently, reduced to the dilemma of charging Christ with endorsing an error, or, on the other hand, acknowledging the utter worthlessness of his argument from this parable. He can choose his own seat. Either horn of the dilemma will impale him "beyond release."

My brother disputes some of my statements of the Pharisaic faith. Mr. Alger is my authority. Probably his assertion is as good as my opponent's.

My brother agrees to attend to Eccl. 3 and 9 when we reach those passages "legitimately, which will be in discussing the second proposition." As he has not yet discussed any other, I am glad to record his admission that his neglect of his own proposition and assumption of mine has been illegitimate. I have thought so all the time.

I do specifically deny that Jude says the Sodomites are confined with the wicked spirits or angels. On the contrary they are "suffering the vengeance of an eternal fire," which, Peter says, "turned them to ashes." (2 Pet. 2:6.) The wicked dead are not in Tartarus—except in heathen fable. If calling a thing weak makes it so, then my objection to "Jedburgh justice"—penalty first and judgment afterwards—may be weak. Certainly none of my remarks were any weaker than this of his: "Are not criminals confined until trial? Is not such confinement a punishment?" Not exactly! Often criminals are not confined at all. It is only required that they be produced at the judgment. When detention is necessary to secure their attendance, they are detained: but this detention is never reckoned a part of the penalty that may be due. The wicked are detained in hades unto the judgment. I know a few scholars give 2 Pet. 2:9 the same exegesis he adopts but others are against him; and the general testimony of the Scriptures cannot be set aside by a doubtful rendering of a disputed text.

I freely admit that we are but attorneys in this case; but why my brother should be so jealous of any utterance on my part as to the merits of his logic when he spends so much of his own time in the judge's seat or the jury box, is not so clear. His reminder that we are only attorneys in the case, coupled almost in the same breath with such expressions as—"Br. Himes, every unprejudiced reader concedes that on that argument you are utterly overthrown," can hardly fail to call to mind old proverbs about physician's healing their own diseases, and the care that should be exercised in throwing stones by people who reside in mansions of glass. A neatly stated point is a fine thing, provided it is not blunted by such inconsistency as my brother indulges. His assumption of knowing the mind of "every unprejudiced reader," is certainly not over modest in one who has just reminded himself that he is only an "attorney, and not judge and jury."

But unwarranted assertions will not make his position on Ex. 3:6 any stronger. It is useless for him to attempt to evade the issue by crying misrepresentation. I have not misrepresented him. His fine distinction between an assertion and an implication absolutely essential to an assertion, is more absurd than "splitting a hair twixt west and northwest side," "I am teaching a Normal Class" does not assert the existence of a Normal Class! Oh! no! It only asserts the fact of teaching. And Moses' mind was of that idiotic obtuseness, that if Br. Braden could have said to him—"I am teaching a Normal Class," it is doubtful whether Moses would have comprehended that the class was actually in existence while the Elder was teaching it. Just what idea he would have got is not so clear. Could bare-faced assertion go further than to declare that "I am the God of Abraham" asserts the conscious existence of a dead Abraham as clearly as "I am teaching a Normal Class" asserts the existence of a class; and then add—"Mark! I do not say this was the intended meaning of the passage, nor even that Moses so understood it. This is no part of the argument." What a "primitive innocent" Moses must have been.

We have nothing new on this subject. "Non-entity is up again." The Elder says God cannot speak of non existent things as if they were in existence. Paul, however, says he can. (Rom. 4:17.) Our readers will take their choice of authorities.

I am ashamed of my brother that he should descend to the weakness of a third rate debater in an attempt to make capital out of the arbitrary substitution of the definitions of a generic term. It is not even funny to any intelligent mind. He defined spirit to mean breath before I defined the term at all. The refined allusion to the probability that Paul suffered from wind colic is, then, as much against his position as my own. The meaning of a generic term is always decided by the context, the scope of the subject and the author's usage. Spirit sometimes means wind or breath; sometimes a being, an influence, mind, disposition. The context in any case determines which of its various meanings is the one intended. If my brother thinks to continue this vulgar chop-logic, I would advise him to first carefully consider whether it will not subject him to that loss of respect he has predicted for me.

Wont my brother please give us in his next letter, chapter and verse where we can find the account of those schools attended by the "primitive innocents," where the angels taught alphabets, agriculture and tailoring. I can't find it.

My brother has an excessive horror of any "attempt to array other Scriptures" against his expositions of Scripture. Really, he should consider that I am bound to make the Scriptures the standard of appeal, and that, in "reasoning out the Scriptures" I am following a strictly apostolic example. He would do well to take the same course, and throw the Talmud and the human traditions and fables overboard. "Reasoning out of the Scriptures" was the Pauline fashion. But my brother reasons out of the Scriptures in quite a different way. He settles the question according to tradition, and then warps the Scriptures to his theory.

On Lk. 24:43 we have one of his habitual assertions as to what common sense will allow. Fortunately he is not the arbiter of the public common sense. The thief prayed to be remembered when Christ should come in his kingdom. Christ said "Amen" to the petition, and "at his appearing and kingdom" the prayer will be answered.

As to 1 Pet. 3:18, my brother jumped from the frying pan to the fire. Was Christ "quickened—made alive—in his spirit?" If so, then his spirit was dead. This passage, as is admitted by all candid students, is obscure. Those commentators who indulge a leaning to restorationism, will of course make the most of it, for "preaching to spirits," can be easily forced to sustain the idea of probation after death. Indeed, if the preaching was to the spirits of dead men, the restorationist must be right. My brother is prudently silent on this point. Does he endorse probation after death? He is good at asking questions. Let us see if he will answer this one, and give light on the subject.

But while it is true that eminent scholars give to this passage the turn my brother has adopted, others assert the sense of the common reading to be correct. In consulting eight translators, I found six in favor of the common version. It is a pity that when my brother finds a passage that seems to help him, it should be of so doubtful a nature that even immaterialists are hopelessly divided concerning its sense. Many of them sustain my argument: the rest are usually committed to restorationism.

But "if quickened in spirit" be the true rendering, which I doubt, then it is clear that Christ's resurrection is referred to. "It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." It is the same that died that was made alive. Anything already alive cannot be quickened, or made alive. If Christ was "made alive in spirit," then he died in spirit.

My brother makes another singular admission—that although the spirit is the "moral, conscious, intelligent part of man," nevertheless the personality does not inhere in it. "He preached not to persons, but to spirits." So disembodied spirits are not persons! We may expect next to find him declaring they are not entities, even. I think myself that he will find it hard to discover any personality without the body.

Then we have a new wrinkle in Christology. Christ had or was—which is it?—two spirits. He was made up of the pre-existent Logos; a perfect human spirit—a second distinct, moral, conscious entity; an animal soul, and a material body. Did both these spirits go to hades? We must have a new reading in Acts 2. "Thou wilt not leave my souls in hades." Which soul did the preaching? Or did one preach in Tartarus and the other in Paradise, thus enabling Christ to visit both departments of "hell" without passing the impassable gulf?

To the question, Does Christ save men from natural death, I reply, if he does not, "if the dead rise not, then those who fell asleep in Jesus perished," when they died. So Paul affirms. In regard to the term day, will my brother tell me if it always has the sense, even in Genesis, of a period of twenty-four hours?

I have carefully perused my brother's repetition of Pharisaic traditions and his attempts to adapt to them certain Scriptures. I am reminded of a remark once made after the citation of the familiar quotation commencing—"The mountain labored," etc. "Yes," said one, "and the mouse was dead!" I am tempted at times to think that my brother is trifling with us. Who believes that if he had conceived himself in possession of an argument that would give "an eternal death blow," and "an eternal quietus to soul-sleeping;" an argument that alone would settle this whole question, he would have passed it unnoticed until now? The fact is the argument has not a leg to stand on. My brother's sanction by-use theory went by the board when he declared there is no fire in hades. The Pharisees believed there was. Christ expressed the idea without dissent. Then, in Eld. Braden's nearly blasphemous language, he either believed the Pharisaic idea, or was a hypocrite, or deceived. But my brother has himself overturned the structure he raised with so much pains. Let us see how he "marched up the hill and then marched down again." His positions are these:

By using Pharisaic terms without dissent, Christ necessarily endorsed the Pharisaic sense of those terms.

Literal flame in hades was a Pharisaic idea. Jesus gave expression to that idea.

Consequently he endorsed their assertion that hades, at least in one department, contains literal fire.

Eld. Braden affirms lustily there neither is or ever was any fire in hades.

Now either Eld. Braden is wrong, or Christ was deceived, or the endorsement theory is a failure. As the first two propositions are inadmissible, of course we must accept the last as true. Every reader can see that if the theory is false in one instance, it cannot be depended upon in any. Hence I will not weary their patience.

If Paul, when before the council, had cried, "of the hope of the state of the dead I am called in question," there would be sufficient ground for my brother's argument. But the record does not so read. When Paul observed that his judges belonged to two opposing texts, he immediately perceived the advantage that would accrue to him if he could but raise a dissension among them. He succeeded by introducing that great bone of contention—the resurrection. He cried, "I am a Pharisee, and the son of a Pharisee: of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question." The question of the state of the dead was not introduced into this case. When Festus declared Paul's case unto Agrippa, he said it related to "one Jesus who was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive." And when he came before Agrippa, the same subject was continued. "Why should it be thought a thing incredible, with you, that God should raise the dead?" This is the iterated and reiterated point: disembodied spirits are not once alluded to by him. Paul appealed to his Pharisaism before the council, as he had previously made use of his claim of Roman citizenship. He held with them in common against the Sadducees the doctrine of the resurrection. Paul refers only to the resurrection. The expression in the eighth verse is not Paul's, but is thrown in by the historian for the benefit of those not acquainted with the faith of these warring sects, and explains the allusion in the following verse. He does not say that resurrection angel and spirit were a Christian confession of faith, but that this was the Pharisee's creed, or confession, or profession, as the word is often translated. Then, having explained those points of difference, he goes on to say that the Pharisees argued—"If an angel or a spirit spoke to him"—which so raised the ire of the Sadducees that they could not contain themselves longer; a great dissension arose, and Paul was withdrawn by the soldiers. His wisdom in dividing the counsels of his enemies by introducing his own faith in the resurrection was apparent. He said nothing of the Pharisaic spiritism; that was introduced by themselves in their zeal to confute the Sadducean tenets.

My brother is on the wrong tack entirely. The key to the Scriptures is Scripture, not turbid tradition. It is very easy to assert that the mass of the people believed so and so, and must have understood so and so; but not so easy to prove it. The Pharisees were not the "mass of the people." Christ warned the people against the doctrine of both sects; at the same time urging them to seek the true doctrine in what we now call the Old Testament. Manifestly, then, the warning was against those doctrines which were in conflict with that Testament. When Jesus and his disciples used sheol, hades, and similar terms, they used them in their Scriptural sense, and the people would so understand them. In parable or illustration they could use the terms of any school of teaching without endorsing an erroneous theology. In the O. T. we find in a parable consciousness attributed to dead and inanimate things. This is no contradiction of the inspired declaration that the dead know nothing, and in sheol there is no wisdom because the narrative is couched in terms that show that the animation is only in figure and not real. It is on the same principle that death is sometimes used figuratively; whenever it is so, the connection, or form of the statement is such that we know the literal sense cannot be intended.

The people of Christ's day had common sense—not of the kind my brother appeals to, however—and would interpret a teacher's language and use of terms in harmony with his own doctrine and usage, not those of a directly opposing sect. The key to Scripture is Scripture. Doubtful and difficult passages must invariably be explained by the simple and literal, or easily understood. The analogy of Scripture is the higher law of exegesis. If it be not so, then the principle of the "common people" is taken away, and the priests and the scholars have the "keys of the kingdom," in exactly the Romanist sense.

The subject of the future punishment can be attended to when we reach the proposition containing it. It must be a precious thought to my brother that the nearest direct evidence he can obtain of the immortality of his own soul is in the dogma of endless sin and wo! While I prefer to leave that topic until it occurs in its due order, I cannot but refer to one point here, that fully exposes the weakness and wickedness of my brother's system. Speaking of the figure of the undying worms and the quenchless fire, he says Jesus borrowed these phrases from the Pharisees, and brought the Pharisaic sense with them into the gospel. Whether ignorance or [illegible] is displayed in this reasoning, it is equally wicked. Every Bible reader knows that this imagery is from the Old Testament, which settles the meaning of the figure. What that meaning is will appear hereafter.

My brother's "endorsement" theory is in a ragged condition; it needs patching badly, particularly where the points that the Sadducees denied the resurrection as an impossibility because there was no surviving spirit; that Christ borrowed Old Testament terms from the rubbish of tradition; that there both is and is not fire in hades—these have pierced it through and through. And as we progress in this debate, the reader will find the true argument from the use of terms developed.

By some moral sleight of hand, these boys prove always in the right, their judgment surpassing that of parents, teachers, and the inferior class known as their elders generally. The value of this punishment may be understood when it is explained that the Swedes hold twenty-eight days of this regimen to be the nearest equivalent to the death penalty. Dissenters are punished there for holding services during the hours of the Lord's day, which are sacred to the Lutheran Church, and for actively promoting their views among the faithful of that church. So heavy was the fall of cinders that the sky seemed hidden by them, and they fell everywhere like rain. The plantations were covered with them, and people were walking with umbrellas to protect themselves from the down-pour. The terror of the people was intense. Women were to be seen going about in procession, praying St. Januarius to have mercy on them. The streets of Porticelli were crowded with peasants hurrying away. Others encamped in the fields, in fear of the earthquake. During the night the eruption assumed terrible proportions.

" " " Russia seems to be troubled with a class or rather a sect who are by profession of faith opposed to the dangers and turmoils of war. In the southern part of that Empire is a colony of about 40,000 people, calling themselves Mennonites, who, to escape the obligations of military service under the Czar, propose to come to the United States. This sect was founded in the early part of the sixteenth century by Simon Menno, and his followers for many years occupied the swamps in Eastern Prussia, which they converted into arable and cultivated fields. Upon the accession of Catherine in 1789 these people were invited to come to Russia, and received from her very favorable promises, among which were exemption from military service. This promise the present Czar is inclined to abrogate, hence the disaffection. These people are represented as being quiet, extremely inoffensive, honest, laborious and industrious and would be a valuable accession to our country.

" " " The London Spectator thinks that no war will be forced upon Europe at present inasmuch as Germany, even if victorious, would gain so very little. "She does not want," says that journal, "to hamper herself with a Poland; or to see the commune rise, as it would rise, to power;" or, in fact, to repudiate her debt in despair. She is willing to reflect that she has Russia on one side of her, ready, at any unguarded moment, to pounce down over the German frontier, and that she cannot make a second invasion of France as readily as she did the first. Her industries once checked again, would remain substantially checked for a long time; and she knows that she does not possess the elasticity of resources which has been the salvation of France. She has opened the war circuit of Europe and shut it again without receiving any severe reproof; but she cannot do it a second time. Thiers is by no means as peaceful at this moment as Bismarck is. Although he knows that he cannot afford to appear exactly in the role of an aggressor, he is unwilling to be contented until he has set Europe by the ears. He recognizes, with the shrewdness of a professional statesman, the weakness of Germany on account of the jealousies prevailing against her; and he intends to profit by them, and perhaps openly, but in an intriguing and Jesuitical manner. Every day and every fresh bit of really reliable intelligence seems to give a sound basis to the theory that Thiers desires a general war in Europe, after which he hopes that the old equilibrium may be restored.

The Glory Shines Before Me.

The glory shines before me!
I cannot linger here!
Though clouds may darken o'er me,
My Father's house is near.
If through this barren wilderness
A little while I roam,
The glory shines before me,
I am not far from home!

Beyond the storms I'm going,
Beyond this vale of tears.
Beyond the flood's o'erflowing,
Beyond the changing years.
I'm going to the better land,
By faith long since possess'd.
The glory shines before me,
For this is not my rest.

The Lamb is there the glory!
The Lamb is there the light!
Affliction's grasp but tore me
From phantoms of the night.
The voice of Jesus calleth me,
My race will soon be run.
The glory shines before me!
The prize will soon be won!

The glory shines before me!
I know that all is well!
His Father's care is o'er me,
His praises I would tell
The love of Christ constraineth me,
His blood hath wash'd me white,
Where Jesus is in glory—
'Tis home! and love! and light.

The Bible.

In the poem just published under the name of Miriam, Whittier pays the following tribute to the best of books:

"We search the world for truth; we cull
The good, the pure, the beautiful
From graven stone and written scroll,
From old flower fields of the soul;
And weary seekers of the best,
We come back laden with our quest,
To find that all the sages said
Is in the book our mothers read;
And all our treasures of old thought
In his harmonious fullness wrought,
Who scatters in one sheaf complete
The scattered blades of God's sown wheat,
The common growth that maketh good
His all-embracing Fatherhood."

The History of Opinions Concerning the State of the Dead. No. 4.

So general was the belief of a purgatory in this western part of the world, that Wicliffe could not entirely shake it off. But though he believed in a purgatory, 'he saw the absurdity of supposing that God intrusted any man with a power to release sinners from such a state: but whether the souls of the dead might be profited by the prayers of the living, he seems to have been in doubt.' The ancient Waldenses, however, who separated from the church of Rome before the doctrine of purgatory had got established, never admitted it; and presently after the Reformation by Luther, we find it abandoned by all who left the church of Rome, without exception, so that this doctrine is now peculiar to that church.

The doctrine of a soul, however, and its existence in a separate, conscious state, from the time of death to that of the resurrection, which was the foundation of the doctrine of purgotory, and many other abuses of Popery, was still retained by most. But Mosheim mentions some Anabaptists who held that the soul sleeps till the resurrection; and the Helvetic confession condemns all those who believed the sleep of the soul, which shows that a considerable number must have maintained it. Luther himself was of this opinion; though whether he died in it, has been doubted. It was, however, the firm belief of so many of the reformers of that age, that, had it not been for the authority of Calvin, who wrote expressly against it, the doctrine of an intermediate conscious state, would, in all probability, have been as effectually exploded as the doctrine of purgatory itself.

Several persons in this country, (England, F. H. B.) have in every period since the Reformation, appeared in favor of the sleep of the soul, and it always had a considerable number of followers. Of late this opinion has gained ground very much, especially since the writings of the present excellent bishop of Carlisle (Edmund Law, F. H. B.) and of archdeacon Blackburne on this subject. But I think the doctrine of an intermediate state can never be effectually extirpated, so long as the belief of a separate soul is retained. For while that is supposed to exist independently of the body, it will not be easily imagined to sleep along with it, but will be thought to enjoy more or less of a consciousness of its existence.

But when, agreeably to the dictates of reason, as well as the testimony of Scripture rightly understood, we shall acquiesce in the opinion that man is a homogeneous being; and that the powers of sensation and thought belong to the brain, as much as gravity and magnetism belong to other arrangements of matter, then the whole fabric of superstition, which had been built upon the doctrine of a soul, and of its separate conscious state must fall at once. And this persuasion will give a value to to the gospel, which it could not have before, as it will be found to supply the only satisfactory evidence of a future life. For, though a future state of retribution might appear sufficiently consonant to some appearances in nature, yet when the means of it, or the only method by which it could be brought about (viz. that of the resurrection of the very body that had putrefied in the grave, or had been reduced to ashes,) were so little visible (since, to all appearance, men die exactly like plants and brute animals, and no analogy drawn from them can lead us to expect a revival,) we must eagerly embrace that gospel in which alone this important truth is brought to light. It is in the gospel alone that we have an express assurance of a future life by a person fully authorized to give it, exemplified also in his own person: he having been actually put to death, and raised to life again, for the purpose of giving us that assurance.

To give this value to revelation by proving the proper and complete mortality of man, on the principle of reason and Scripture, is the object of my Disquisitions relating to Matter and Spirit, to which, and also what I have added to it, in my discussion of the subject with Dr. Price, I beg leave to refer my readers.

This concludes what Priestly says in that part of his Corruptions of Christianity devoted to this subject. If agreeable to the Editor and his patrons, I shall, ere long, present more interesting matter on this subject from his able pen.

What does it Prove?

Does Christ's refutation of the Sadducees recorded in Lk. 20: 37, 38 prove the consciousness of the dead, or their resurrection? That it cannot prove both points is certain: but that the Savior did not intend to teach the consciousness of the dead is evident from two considerations:

(1) The resurrection and not the consciousness of the dead was the disputed point; and it would not be reasonable to suppose that the Savior would adduce an argument in demonstration of a doctrine which instead of being relevant to the subject of dispute would render the resurrection an event of little or no consequence.

(2) The language of our Savior is too pointed to leave any room for such a conclusion. He does not say a word with reference to the state of the dead, but on the contrary he directs his whole argument to the resurrection. He reasons thus: "Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush when he called the Lord the God of Abraham and the God of Isaac and of Jacob." Paul speaks of God as he "who quickeneth the dead and calleth those things that be not as though they were." (Rom. 4: 17.) And I am inclined to believe that when God declared himself the God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, that he spoke with reference to the resurrection: else with what propriety could the Savior use the language attributed to him in Mat. 22: 31, 32—"As touching the resurrection of the dead, have ye not read that which was spoken unto you by God, saying, I am the God of Abraham and the God of Isaac and of Jacob? How could they read this language "as touching the resurrection" if it did not touch that point at all?

If my idea is legitimate—and I think it is—then the Lord is their God simply in prospect and our Savior's argument stands thus: (1) The Lord is—prospectively—the God of Abraham and the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob. (2) Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are dead, but (3) he is not a God of the dead but the living, hence, (4) Abraham, Isaac and Jacob will live again; or in other words are alive—in prospect—from the dead in the same sense that the Romans were to reckon themselves as "alive unto God" (Rom. 6: 11.) or otherwise expressed, "as those that are alive from the dead." (v. 13.)

Some tenaciously contend that our Savior intended to show the possibility of a resurrection by showing that a part of man survives the death of the body, thus leaving us to conclude that instead of all things being possible with God, his power is so limited that he cannot restore the dead to life unless a part survives in death. This is a just conclusion from the assumed premises; and those who disrelish the conclusion must abandon the premises.

One fact should not be overlooked, and that the Savior's argument was given to prove "that the dead are raised," not that they can be. If Christ attempted to prove the possibility of a resurrection by showing that a part of man survives in death, then his argument was directed to a "man of straw," unless the Sadducees denied that God could raise the dead. If nothing survives in death, and if they were correct in thus limiting God's power, why did Jesus falsely accuse them in saying "Ye do greatly err, not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God." C. M. Keach.

"God of the Dead."

God is not a God of the dead, but of the living. (Mat. 22: 32.)

In what sense is this true? Man is a subject of God's law; the penalty is death. Adam's disobedience brought death, and the whole race was doomed with him to death. Consequently there must be some scheme devised to reach fallen man. For God to release man, would be to abrogate his own law, and virtually say it was not just.

"But when the fullness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, ["the law of sin and death"] to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons." (Gal. 4: 4, 5.) Now we see that God's law, consigned man to the dust, and that would have been his final end, had not God sent forth his Son. "For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living." (Rom. 14: 9.) "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. For whether we live, we live unto the Lord: and whether we die, we die unto the Lord: whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's." (vv. 7, 8.) We see then, that God is not a God of the dead. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob must live again, before God will be their God. God is not a God of the dead, the Savior made use of this language for the express purpose of showing the Sadducees, that there must be a resurrection, for God is not the God of dead men, but dead men must live again, before God will be their God; which will be effected through Christ. "For all that are in their graves, shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and come forth;" "some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." God is not a God of the dead in any sense; for he consigned them to the dust. "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." (Gen. 3: 19.) The voice of the Son of God wakes them up. Then they are judged, and rewarded. "When the son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats. And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world....Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from me ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." (Mat. 25: 31–34, 41.) Then shall we hear the righteous, sing a new song, saying, [of Jesus] "Thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred and tongue, and people, and nation, and made us unto our God kings and priests and we shall reign on the earth:" "And God himself shall be with them and be their God."

Plainly Written.

It is generally conceded by all Advent believers that "it is not best to be wise above what is written," especially in matters of religious faith. Hence when they claim that the Lord Jesus Christ will return to earth, raise the dead, change the living, give reward to all, righteous and wicked, fit up this globe as the future home of the redeemed, and punish the wicked with everlasting destruction etc., they invariably appeal to the plainly written declarations of the sacred oracles: and thus it is, their faith is founded upon the immutable truths of God, of Christ, and his apostles. And by so doing they are a power in the land, felt and recognized in spite of the opposing force brought against them. Now, is the definite time of our Lord's return as plainly written in God's blessed book. Some good brethren think it is, and others equally as good, as humble, as self-sacrificing, as untiring in their efforts to publish the good tidings of the coming One—think it is not. Here then is an honest difference. Surely it ill-becomes those brethren who believe in definite time to claim infallibility in their conclusions, for the finger of experience points persistently to the history of the past. Where are those plainly written declarations of God's word upon which in the past the definite time was based. Were they not as plainly written then as now? and if then we were mistaken, may we not again be, even now?

The truth is that the prophetic measurements of Daniel and John are not "plainly written" declarations of the definite time of the final consummation. They are, however, God given numbers by which we shall be able to determine our approximate nearness to that day. This is their legitimate import, and every attempt to make them fix the "definite time" has proved a failure. Then why should such a course be persisted in? Surely it is not wise. I have no objection to a brother giving to the household of faith his view as to the probable terminus of the prophetic numbers. This is all right. But, when he fixes with unwarrantable precision the termination of those numbers, and the coming of Jesus, then, for one, I protest.

And in this, I am justified by the "plainly written" declarations of our blessed Lord: "Watch ye therefore, for ye know not when the Master of the house cometh." That this is said with reference to the "definite" time is clear from what follows: "at even, or at midnight, at cock-crowing or in the morning." (Mk. 13: 35:) Then (v. 33,) he says; "Take ye heed, watch and pray, for ye know not when the time is." But in v. 29 we are plainly told of the approximate nearness of that day: "So ye, in like manner, when ye shall see these things come to pass, know ye that, it is nigh even at the door." So, while it is true "ye know not at what hour your Lord doth come" (Mat. 24: 42), it is equally true that, we may "know his coming is nigh, even at the door."

This is enough to know; for in this knowledge lies the incentive to watchfulness and Christian fidelity. "In this" lies the truth that, "ye brethren are not in darkness that, that day should overtake you as a thief." (1 Thes. 5: 4.)

Here are "plainly written" declarations and I submit that it is both wise and safe to follow these rather than the ambiguous or the uncertain.

While thus I speak I would not be supposed to cry out against an earnest investigation of the "prophetic numbers." By no means. Let us have all the light and information possible; but let us remember that, in our conclusions we are at the best but short sighted beings. Therefore let us not appear presumptuous while giving to the world the results of our investigations of prophesy, "the sure word of prophecy" that shineth in a dark place" (2 Pet. 1: 19.) Let us stand by the "planly written" declarations of God's blessed book with humble trust and unshaken confidence, remembering the plain words of Jesus our Lord—"Watch, for ye know not at what hour your Lord doth come;" and, again, "Take heed to yourselves least at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life and so that day come upon you unawares." (Lk. 21: 34:)

Let not the conclusions of those brethren whose minds are stirred to an investigation of the prophetic numbers result in a dismemberment of the household of faith. Let us all cling to Jesus and his word, love each other for his sake, and like a faithful household, be ready to give a hearty welcome to our returning Lord. And who will not say amen. D. O. H.

Note: There is much good sense in our brother's advice. Still we should not overlook the fact that the tendency is to ignore the prophetic numbers. They are in the word of God, and for some purpose: and we have never felt satisfied they were designed for any other purpose than a revelation of definite time. We shall yet have the clear light. Meanwhile proscription and reading out of the body of Adventists all who refuse to accept this or that view of the periods may be honest, but, in spite of the old proverb, it is very poor policy. Ed.

The Promises of God.

First, will God do by the Jews as he said he would. I answer, he will; and he has done so already. Where is there a promise unconditionally to those people? Is there one? Not one. Read Deut. 28, and see what the prophet Moses said: "And all these blessings shall come on thee, and overtake thee, if thou shalt hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God. But it shall come to pass, if thou wilt not hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God." (vv. 2, 15.) Now read God's rule, in Jer. 18: 7–11. Did not he thus do in the case of Nineveh? They repented, consequently God repented of the evil he thought to do unto them. Have not the Jews rebelled against God? They have. Now in order for God to be good to his word, he will "repent of the good wherewith he said he would benefit them." And if he repents of what he thought to do unto them, would it not be as though he had not promised them at all? So Zech. 14; Jer. 30: 1–11; Dan. 7: 13, 14, and many other passages like unto them, are now to the Jews as though they were not there, and we should so read them.

See the parable in Mat. 25 : 33, and also Lk. 13; 34; Acts 13 : 46. In all this we see God has repented; and they are left without a promise as a nation. As individuals, they can be "grafted" in as the Gentiles are. (Rom. 11; 23.) Otherwise they are without hope. Now compare Deut. 28, with the Jews' present condition, and see how all has worked in harmony with God's announcements.

Ps. 110 was fulfilled at the resurrection and ascension of Christ, as I may more fully show in another article. Now if I promise to go to Boston on certain conditions, and those conditions are not complied with, and I repent of my promise, it is just the same in the result as though I had not promised. Thus it is with God to the Jews. Let us search the Scriptures for the truth as it is. God give us the spirit of understanding. GEO. A. STREETER.

Appreciation.

It is a good thing to appreciate one's friends. It is best not to wait until they are dead before this is done. Many a man has had more kind words spoken of him after he was dead, than he ever had spoken to him while living. When our friends die, we never regret the kind and appreciative words that we may have spoken to them. On the other hand, how many there are who very deeply regret the negligence that allowed favorable opportunities for speaking words of cheer to pass unimproved. It may be reckoned but a commonplace, a platitude, a trite remark, nevertheless I make it because I believe it important: The measure of our appreciation of others is the measure of our love for them. J. Correspondence.

From T. F. Miller.

I was brought up a Methodist. I was taught it from youth, and tried to live it the best I could. I was in the first place licensed to exhort, and then to preach the doctrine of the church. But I was blinded in reading the Bible. Still I have been the means in the hands of God of doing good in that way of preaching. But I thank God that my lot has been cast where I have found the truth, and I like it. I have read the TIMES, and have fallen in love with it. And the reason why is, it tells the truth: it corresponds with the Bible. I used to think that I was immortal, that is, I had an immortal soul inside of me. By searching the Bible I find it was a false notion. There is no such word in the Bible: and good reason would teach me I had been mistaken.

There is no man that has immortality; only God himself possesses it. And if when I die I go to heaven and get my reward, what use is there of a judgment day and the resurrection? Such doctrine cannot be crammed down by me any longer. I have got my eyes open. Men may preach it, but it is not the doctrine of the Bible. That tells us to seek for immortality. If we have got it, why does it tell us to seek after it? I am trying to live so that when Christ who is our life shall appear, I may appear with him in glory.

The first Advent sermon I ever heard was by Br. Ramsay. I did not think much of it then, but the more I hear, the better I liked it; and now my prejudice is all gone. I love the truth. It makes me free. The Bible is clearer to my mind, and I understand it better. There is now no fog or mist over it.

From J. August Smith.

A discussion between Eld. Hurless of the U. B. Church, and Eld. C. C. Marston, took place here. Subject, "Resolved, That the doctrine of the consciousness of the soul between the death of the body and the resurrection morn, is extra-Biblical."

Eld. Marston affirmed. The people here are yet in the dark as regards the position Adventists really hold, not only in one, but in almost every point in which we differ from other denominations; and especially so as to the nature of man, and of Jesus Christ the Son of God. Upon these two points Eld. Hurless and his co-thinkers claim the victory; especially so, as Eld Marston stated and acknowledged that man has a soul! And their first thoughts are that that soul must be and is immortal—a conscious personal entity. The other in regard to the death of Christ (because Eld Marston stated and acknowledged that, according to the Scriptures, "Christ died"), that during the three days of his death "we were without a God!" But the doctrine of the Trinity is so deeply rooted in the present popular theology, that the first application to restore their sight fails, and vision is obscure. (Mk. 8 : 22–25.) The Bible plainly states "to us there is one God and one Lord Jesus Christ." (1 Cor. 8 : 6.) And "that there is one God, and one mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus." (1 Tim. 2 : 5.) By their tradition they make the Scriptures of none effect, saying that Christ did not die; that it was only a human sacrifice. Let God be true and let us believe him when he saith that Christ died, was buried, and rose again.

The discussion was well conducted on both sides. A Christian spirit was manifest. Eld. Hurless stands at the head of his Conference as a debater, and to give every one his due, I must say that he made one point. His first two speeches were lame, bringing very little Scripture to bear against Eld. Marston's Bible arguments. In his closing speech, he brought all the Bible texts generally quoted to prove the doctrine of two men in one, from Genesis to Revelation, not even forgetting to bring up Samuel. And here is where Eld. Hurless' point was made: for at the close he said—"I defy any man to answer my questions in fifteen minutes!" Here he triumphed; as well he might, for no man could have done it in that time.

The truth as it is in Jesus did not suffer. I doubt not but that it will bring forth fruit to the glory of God.

From John Read, Burlington Co., N. Y.

I am very much attached to the paper, for I have gained more light in one year by reading THE TIMES, and other Second Advent publications, than by listening to orthodox sermons all my previous life; and I am now thirty-nine years old. It makes me feel sad to look back over my past life to find that I have been groping along, seeking light and finding none. I might have been so much happier years ago, and saved from many a snare, if the gospel of the blessed God had been presented to me in such a light as I now see it. I might have loved my Savior Jesus Christ long ago, if I could have understood the plan of redemption as I now understand it.

From my early life I have been told that Christ died for sinners, and that I must love him, or else be sent down to hell, into endless fire and pains, there to dwell forever and ever. And I have tried hard to believe this. But I never could comprehend the love of God in allowing his well-beloved Son to die for the sin of the world, until I read your publications, which led me to my neglected Bible, which has, indeed, become a new book to me. I love it, for I now understand that what we lost in Adam, we gain in Christ. That is why Christ died for sinners. But, oh! how few understand it! We have lost life in Adam! Condemnation and death are entailed to his children. But in Christ we have immortality. Oh! how beautiful! How worthy of our acceptance. We have now an inducement to love God. But I have been told, and I heard others told, that they must love God, without giving any reason why they "must." How I wish I could hear the blessed gospel preached in its purity everywhere. I think the world would be much better. Christians would be more numerous. They would have a complete faith, instead of a vague, indefinite idea of the future state. I love the Second Advent doctrine throughout, because I believe it to be sound and Scriptural. I can look at the character of God quite differently now, from what I could some time ago. I love him now.

When I meditate and reflect upon God and his Son, and what they have done and will do for poor fallen humanity, my eyes are ready to overflow with gratitude, and my whole being thrills with joy. I thank God, my dear Br. Himes. Is this conversion? I am not a member of any church, and it is owing to reading my Bible and your publications that I been led to seek after the truth as it is in Jesus.

From Geo. Wright, jr.

In Columbus, Clair Co. Mich., it was thought the Congregationalist chapel would be open for us, as the majority of the society were willing we should occupy it; but I found on arrival that the minister had objected, giving as a reason that as some of his members were weak-minded they might be led away by our pernicious doctrine. As might have been expected this only tended to increase the interest to hear. Several who had contributed largely toward erecting the chapel, with the express understanding that it should be free for all denominations when not used by the Congregationalists, offered to open it for me any way: but wishing to follow after things that make for peace, I concluded to occupy the school house. We went quietly on with our meeting which increased in numbers and interest to the close. Br. Snook made me a flying visit, and although he could not preach on account of ill-health, I felt blessed in having him near me. He is very much beloved by this people, who deeply sympathize with him in his affliction. Br. Paton of Almont, late pastor of the Baptist church there, was with me two evenings. He preached to good acceptance. I have formed a very strong attachment for this brother. I trust the Lord will open his way so that he may give his whole time to the work of preparing a people for the coming of the Lord.

Quite a large number arose for prayers during the meeting, backsliders were quickened to new life. Some were blessed. Among them Br. and Sr. Burke, for whom I felt the deepest interest, started in the "narrow way." Also Br. Ramsay, the only merchant of the place, desired to return to his heavenly Father's house, and spoke with much feeling. Father Young spoke with much trembling and tenderness, affecting all in the house. I trust he may prove to be a father in Israel. I regret that I had to leave, but felt it my duty to hasten home to care for father who would in all probability live but a short time. I am now writing by his bed-side, and while I see his life ebbing out, I ask with the poet—

> "How long shall death the tyrant reign,
> And triumph o'er the just?"

Mother sleeps in Jesus in the cemetery at Kingston P. Q. One brother sleeps in Norwich, England. A brother and sister rest in Quebec. The last awaits the trumpet's sound in the cemetery of Kalamazoo, Mich. Oh! for the land of everlasting habitations!

The friends at Columbus, feeling the necessity of a chapel for worship, formed themselves into a society to be known as the Advent Christian Society of Columbus, Mich. $500, was pledged and a beautiful site given. Trustees and a building committee were elected. A master-builder of large experience proposed to work for half price. All the enterprise needs is energetic action. This element they possess. God bless them, Amen.

Our Young Folks.

The number of letters in the alphabets varies widely. The English has 26; the Welsh, 31; the German, 26; the Chaldaic, Hebrew, Syriac, Samaritan, Italian, Dutch, each 21; Ancient and Modern Greek, and Anglo-Saxon, each 24; French and Portugese, 25; Spanish, 27; Arabic, Swedish, Danish, Norwegian, Old Norsk, 28; Egyptian and Persian, 32; Gaelic, 18; Russian, 36; Armenian, 37; Georgian, 35; Sanskrit, 51; Abyssinian, 202; Brahmanic, 141.

The Spider's Parlor.

There is a little spider in Australia that might, with great propriety, ask the little fly to walk into his parlor; for he has a very neat little parlor with a real door, that opens and shuts on a hinge. I think there is no other animal besides man, that can make a hinge. It seems wonderful that God has given this knowledge to a little insect we commonly look down upon as among the most insignificant. There are none of his works we can fully despise. "All thy works praise thee, O Lord." A gentleman discovered one of these little underground spider houses, and made the acquaintance of the owner, and came often to see him, so as to become acquainted with his habits. He brought him insects for his food every day, and made a certain tap on the door, which the spider soon learned to understand. Then he would come up and push open the door, which was much like the lid of a box, and come out to get his breakfast. After he had received it he walked back into his house and shut down the lid very carefully. The inside was made of web and earth, and was as smooth as satin. He leaves his little door ajar at times, and when some silly, peeping insect comes peering round it, for curiosity,

> "Up jumps the cunning spider,
> And fiercely holds him fast."

He does not take him up, but down "his winding stair," and, alas! "he never comes out again."

Make Your Own Sunshine.

"Oh, dear, it always does rain when I want to go anywhere!" cried little Jennie Moore. "It's too bad, now I've got to stay in-doors all day, and I know I shall have a wretched day."

"Perhaps so," said Uncle Jack; "but you need not have a bad day unless you choose."

"How can I help it? I wanted to go to the park and hear the band, and take Fido and play on the grass and have a good time, and pull wild flowers and eat sandwiches under the trees; and now there ain't going to be any sunshine at all; and I'll have just time to stand here and see it rain, and see the water run off the duck's back all day."

"Well, let's make a little sunshine," said Uncle Jack.

"Make sunshine!" said Jennie; "why, how you do talk;" and she smiled through her tears. "You haven't got a sunshine factory, have you?"

"Well, I am going to start one right off, if you'll be my partner," replied Uncle Jack. "Now let me give you these rules for making sunshine: First, Don't think of what might have been if the day had been better. Second, See how many pleasant things there are left to enjoy; and, lastly, Do all you can to make other people happy."

"Well, I'll try the last thing first," and she went to work to amuse her little brother, Willie, who was crying. By the time she had him riding a chair, and laughing, she was laughing too.

"Well," said Uncle Jack, "I see you are a good sunshine-maker, for you've got about all you or Willie can hold just now. But let's try what we can do with the second rule."

"But I haven't anything to enjoy, 'cause all my dolls are old, and my picture-books all torn, and"——

"Hold," said Uncle Jack; here's an old newspaper! why, how you talk!"

But Uncle Jack showed her how to make a mask by cutting holes in the paper, and how to cut a whole family of paper dolls, and how to make pretty things for Willie out of the paper. Then he got out the tea-tray, and showed her how to roll a marble round it.

And so she found many a pleasant amusement, and when bed-time came she kissed Uncle Jack, and said:

"Good-night, dear Uncle Jack."

"Good-night, little sunshine-maker," said Uncle Jack.

And she dreamed that night that Uncle Jack had built a great house, and put a sign over the door which read:

SUNSHINE FACTORY.

UNCLE JACK AND LITTLE JENNIE.

She made Uncle Jack laugh when she told him her dream; but she never forgot what you must remember: A CHEERFUL HEART MAKES ITS OWN SUNSHINE.—The Little Folks.

Book Notices, Etc.

THE RECORD.—The first number of this new magazine is on our table, a perfect gem of typographic beauty. Its illustrations are superb; its reading matter, all of interest. There are no love-sick tales, no parts of a long-drawn-out novel. Instead of these we have a sketch of Early Life in Illinois; Chicago as a Publishing Center; The Prover; An Inside View; A Chicago Enterprise, etc., etc.; and even the advertisements are interesting reading. Reed, Gardner & Co. are the publishers, 9 South Canal St., Chicago. We will send the TIMES and Record one year for $3.00, to either old or new subscribers.

Obituary.

DEYO.—In Strawberry Point, Iowa, Sept. 15, '71, J. B. infant son of H. and Helen M. Deyo: aged 3 months and 2 days.

Also, at same place, May 2, '72, of Cerebro-Spinal-Meningitis, Ruth Abbie: aged 6 years, 1 month and 27 days.

Ruth was a bright, promising child, beloved by all who knew her. Her sufferings were very great for about four weeks; but she bore them with the patience of a saint, till death robbed her of the vital spark, and she fell asleep. "Blessed sleep from which none ever wake to weep." This truly afflicted family, while they mourn their dead, are not without hope. Jesus died, and the little ones will come again from the land of the enemy. Praise the Lord. M. J. JAMES.

Michigan Conference.

I shall send out Blank Reports to each of the churches and ministers soon. Will all interested please fill them immediately after May 31, and return to me at Jackson at once, that I may have my report ready at the Campmeeting. Do not delay, or think it will do just as well to bring it with you.

J. M. SNOOK, Sec'y.

To the Advent Christians of Iowa:

Dear Brethren: We have bought a tent for our Conference use, and have paid for it except about FORTY DOLLARS. We had enough subscribed to pay for it entirely; but some of the subscribers proved delinquents, and do not even respond to my letters. What shall be done? Shall our tent lie unused all Summer? Who will take the trouble to look up those who promised to pay and have not done so? Who will collect the balance due, and then take the tent and go forth in the name of the Lord, to proclaim the gospel of the kingdom. It is time we began to wake up to this matter. D. A. DICKINSON.

The annual camp-meeting of Wisconsin will be held on the on the old camp-ground at Prairie du Sac, Sauk Co., beginning June 1, and holding over two Sundays. We shall make an effort to have Br. Let all come with hearts fired with heavenly zeal, and let us have the greatest rally from every point that Wisconsin has ever witnessed. We expect a glorious meeting, and a time of God's power. Let none fail to come because of a little sacrifice. If the Jews were required to leave home, and live in tents seven days in the year to worship God, we can also afford to, if we say to the world, "Get behind me, while I go up yonder to worship."

In accordance with a vote of our State Conference a State Campmeeting will be held in the beautiful grove called "Cheatham's Grove," in Utica, Winona Co., commencing Thursday, June 27, and holding over the ensuing Sunday, and as much longer as deemed practicable. The ground is well fitted up for meetings, with permanent stands and seats; also a good well of water and other conveniences for those wishing to camp on the ground.

Brethren and sisters of the Advent faith throughout Minnesota, to you a special appeal is made to come out to this feast of tabernacles and work for God. Come from every quarter; come with hearts burning with the love of God, to work for the salvation of perishing souls. The signs portend the speedy coming of the Master. Shall we not improve these general gatherings, as God requires us to do, to his glory, to our own growth in grace, and for the salvation of others?

Come Christians of every name, and unite with us in the worship of God for a few days in the tented grove.

Brethren and sisters in the ministry, all who can come, at home or abroad, you are invited to come and help sound the glorious message of a soon-coming King. Come endued with power from on high, with an unction from the holy One; with words that burn, that will reach the hearts of the perishing.

☞ Those coming to tarry on the ground will please come prepared with bedding and provisions (and tents if they have them.) Advertising alone does not produce success. The thing which is advertised must have intrinsic merit, or else large advertising will eventually do it more harm than good. If you have anything which you know to be good, advertise it thoroughly, and you will be sure to succeed; if it is poor, don't praise it, for people will soon discover you are lying.

Such is the policy of the Burlington Route, which runs to three great regions in the West: 1st, to Omaha, connecting with the great Pacific Roads. 2d, To Lincoln, the capital of Nebraska, and all that beautiful region south of the Platte, filled with R. E. H. WHEELER'S

IMPROVED

AXLE & THIMBLE SKEIN

PATENTED JAN. 12, 1872.

THE LIGHTEST, STRONGEST, AND BEST AXLE BEFORE THE PUBLIC.

Less liable to break, and cannot spring under any amount of weight that can be put upon it.

It takes a smaller sized axle and bolster or sand-board than the same sized skeins of common style; is more simple and easier to fit, the skein being of uniform taper, without shoulders upon the inside a better fit is secured. The axle can be turned in a common lathe to fit the thimble, by putting one end out of center.

The arm, or spindle, is so made as to secure the proper set of the wheels, when moderately dished, with the bottom line of the spindle on a parallel line to the bottom of the axle, an important principle never before attained. The set of the wheels is a perpendicular or right angle to the bottom line of the axle upon the face of the spokes, upon their lower half.

This cut shows the thimble and lug for the tension rod across the bottom of the axle, from thimble to thimble, and the socket for the bolster, or the sand-board, as the case may be. I also use a sand guard to keep the dirt out of the shoulder of the hub; but it is not shown in this cut.

RIGHTS FOR SALE.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, May 28, 1872.

MAURICE.

John Frederick Denison Maurice, recently deceased, has been for many years a leader among the revolters from dogmatic theology in the English church. He has been a remarkable sample of the fruit of the reaction from the doctrines of predestination, reprobation and, especially, endless conscious punishment for sin. He held few ideas in common with us. He was rather of 'the School of Origen' a restorationist, and, of course, a spiritualizer, "crushing" as one has said, "the letter of the Word, that he might obtain the pure wine of the Spirit:" a very beautiful, but also very deceptive figure: for, the spirit is not contained in the letter as the wine is held in the grape—to be expressed and taken away from it; but is, rather, held as the life or spirit is contained in the body: if the two are separated, neither will have an active existence.

Mr. Maurice stumbled over immaterialism. Believing the soul to be immaterial and immortal, logically he should have admitted the doctrine of eternal sin. But he could not do this. Not prepared to reject the Scriptures absolutely he carried a little further a principal already sanctioned by orthodoxy in order to sustain its philosophical dogmas of immortality; and as they had "crushed the letter" in their attempt to force it to the desired sense, he took up the same process, carried it further, and obtained the desired result. The Bible was Origenized; or, in plain English, reduced to an allegory; and every one is free to suggest or adopt the meaning most consonant to their own cast and habits of mind.

With these introductory remarks we lay before our readers a resume of Mr. Maurice's theory of the future life, which will interest all. It seems cruel that a mind so delicate should have been galled by the iron fetters of the immaterialist philosophy; that such mental powers should have been bound, like Sampson by the cords of heathen philosophy. A healthy literalist materialism would have cleared away the haze that obstructed his vision, and enabled him to see clearly the relation of "the spiritual truths he so powerfully grasped," and "to piece them together" in an intellectual system enlivened with all the vitality of the truth.

The Spectator (London) sets forth Mr. Maurice's ideas in the following terms:

When Mr. Maurice was asked what he meant by 'eternal' as distinguished from 'endless' or 'everlasting,' he always replied in effect that it was related to 'everlasting' as the spiritual source is related to the outward form; as, for instance, the depth and truth of a principle are related to its durability and influence on human society; as the vital germ of a tree that lives for centuries is related to its length of days; as the inward character of a great man is related to his age-long ascendancy over human thoughts,—in a word, as the constitution of anything is related to its outward duration. 'Eternal' he held was properly applied solely to God. 'Everlasting' is simply our translation of the divine essence into the language of time. It is impossible for us to conceive God, if we conceive him in time at all, as ever having had either beginning or end; he is at the heart of everything, so that nothing whatever is conceivable without him; hence, if we do translate 'eternal,' which is applicable only to him, into the language of time at all, we must translate it as 'everlasting,' as having neither beginning nor end. He preferred the word 'eternal,' because he did not think the time-view the original one, but a derivative one. 'Eternal' took you, he held, into the depths of the invisible life behind the world,—while 'everlasting' only bewildered the imagination with a futile attempt to strain back into the past beyond our reach, and forward into the future beyond our ken. Still, if time-language were to be used at all, 'everlasting' was the right translation for 'eternal.' He did not think it a very instructive translation, he thought we lost by not keeping to the qualitative essence of God, rather than insisting on the quantitive duration. But the word 'endless' he repudiated altogether, because it is applicable to things clearly not divine,—signifying duration which, though it has begun, will never cease,—and so losing the necessary reference to God which he regarded as embodied in the word 'eternal,' and not lost in 'everlasting,' since 'ever' goes back as infinitely as it goes forward, and is only applicable therefore to him without whom all existence is inconceivable. Such being Mr. Maurice's view of these three words, he maintained that 'eternal death' meant nothing more or less than 'life in him who is eternal,' and 'death from him who is etenal,'—life in God, ard death from God. His great Scriptural authority of course was St. John's report of our Lord's prayer, "This is life eternal, to know thee the only true God." If 'eternal life' were knowledge of God, 'eternal death,' he inferred, must be loss of the knowledge of God. It, therefore, any attempt were made to translate 'eternal life' and 'eternal death' into the language of time, we must remember that the everlastingness is only the attribute of God, not of the relation between the individual and God. A man may have 'eternal life' even in this world, and may again lose it, may fall from eternal death, may cease to live in the divine righteousness, and be immured again in the hell of self. Mr. Maurice's emphatic teaching was, that to be immured in self—is hell, the worst conceivable hell, the most terrible of all tortures. In this world indeed he would say this hell can never be quite complete; there is always the sensible world at least to draw one out of oneself; but if any one gives way to the tendencies which makes self supreme, the time may come when the self has not even this distraction, when, after death, it is immured wholly in its own ugly and impotent thoughts, when its perfect solitude becomes intolerable anguish.

This was his notion of 'eternal death.' It did not mean everlasting death, it meant the loss of life in God. So eternal life did not mean everlasting life, it meant life in the everlasting,—in God—but which might assuredly be severed from everlasting,—from God. As to the duration of this death, Mr. Maurice would never express any opinion, except that it must last till the evil will was overcome, and that as God had expressed his will that all men be saved, he would not dare to affirm that the will of God would fail to triumph over all the evil wills that resisted it. Still he felt no wish to measure the enormous power which might be contained in the evil will of man. He admitted that God himself could not triumph over that [illegible] the willingness of man [illegible] he did not "dare" mea[illegible] he[illegible] of resistance. His whole mind, however, revolted against the conception that God ever casts any man's soul into the hell of self imprisonment. He was horrified at that interpretation of our Lord's words in the sermon on the Mount, which supposes him to represent God as killing and casting into hell. "I say unto you, my friends, be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do; but I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear: Fear him which, after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell; yea I say unto you fear him." "We are come," said Mr. Maurice, "to such a pass as actually to suppose that Christ tells those whom he calls his friends not to be afraid of the poor and feeble enemies who can only kill the body, but of that greater enemy who can destroy their very selves, and that this enemy is—not the Devil, not the spirit who is going about seeking whom he may devour, not he who was a murderer from the beginning—but that God who cares for the sparrows; they are to be afraid lest he who numbers the hairs of their head should be plotting their ruin." This interpretation horrified Maurice. He always asserted that 'eternal' life—life in God—was never withheld from any one who would give up the evil will which his own sin, or a tempter more powerful than his own will, had corrupted; that eternal death was never God's decree, but the doing only of evil powers resisting God.

How far this teaching is, in an ecclesiastical sense, heretical, the present writer is hardly theologian enough to know, especially in relation to the very fluid and variable standards of the English Church. A great deal in very orthodox writers comes very near to it. Dr. Newman, for instance, in his beautiful story of the martyr "Callista," represents eternal death from very much the same point of view, as not inflicted by any decree of God, but simply the natural result of an immersion in self so habitual and complete that the vision of God, if it could be granted, would be more exquisite pain than even the loss of it. Only he does not recoil as Maurice did from the thought that God's will to save every man could ever be finally defeated by the powers of evil. If Maurice were an heresiarch, he was so from his inability to piece together the spiritual truths he had so powerfully grasped, by a tissue of intellectual system in which he could not feel any spiritual force; from his inability to let intellectual tradition dominate his direct spiritual apprehensions. It was a ground of heresy, if heresy it was, which he shared with Fenelon—the teacher of the past whose spirit was most like his, though in fire and force of personal conviction he was greatly Maurice's inferior.

—The simple English of the above extract is, everlasting means the longest duration the nature and conditions of the subject will allow; and that, eventually, sin will cease by a process of restoration. It is a roundabout way of coming at Universalism.

The misapprehension of Mat. 10: 28 is pitiful, but inseparable, in the thoughtful mind, from the popular view. The idea of destruction of marred or unfit vessels seems never to have obtained in Mr. Maurice's mind. But his work is done. The tendency of the church is away from the dogma of eternal misery. Mr. Maurice's writings will undoubtedly direct many who are hasting from the path of hideous errors, into the way of a more lovely but none the less fatal theological mistake. The pendulum is making its return stroke, and must swing to the opposite extreme. Happy those whose surroundings combine to lead them to the firm and safe, because Scriptural, middle ground, between those poles of religious error—The isms of Augustine and Origen.

Advent or Adventist, Which?

One man says, "I am an Advent." Another says, "I am an Adventist." Both the same. Which expression is correct? Allow me to venture an opinion. Let us notice the common use of these words. First as nouns, secondly as adjectives. Dr. Webster gives "Advent" only as a noun. It means 1. Coming to or approaching, and is specifically applied to the first or the second coming of Christ. 2. "A season of devotion including four Sundays before Christmas." Within a few years, however, the word Advent has had a third use as a noun. It has been used by man[illegible] denominational name. Such e[illegible]ns as the following are now ve[illegible]mon: "The Advents hold meetings here." "He is an Advent." "The Advents believe that man is mortal." "He and his wife are both Advents." Quite a large proportion of our people and not a few of our preachers speak thus. This use of the word in its singular and plural forms is either correct or incorrect. For my part I believe it to be incorrect. For an Adventist to say, I am an Advent, I hold to be as absurd as for a Methodist to say I am a Method. Method and Advent are both nouns, and are changed into denominational names by the use of the same suffix or termination,—ist.

2. As an adjective the word is frequently used thus: Advent preacher, Advent paper, Advent people &c., &c. Now I know of no rule of language that allows this word to be used as an adjective. To be sure we have the ADVENT TIMES and the Advent Herald, but the word here is an integral part of the next word to it and might appropriately be written as a compound word, thus, "Advent-herald," or paraphased thus, The Herald of the Advent. On the other hand, though I do not say that "Adventist" is an adjective, yet I claim the same authority for saying Adventist church that I have for saying Methodist church, for saying Adventist paper, people or preacher, as for saying Methodist paper, people or preacher. * * I do not write this as a criticism but for criticism from others. It is desirable that there should be uniformity in the use of our denominational name. If it is correct to speak of ourselves as "Advents," so be it. But if it is highly absurd thus to express ourselves, let us all avoid that use of the word. VERA NOMEN.

The Western Coast.

Tuesday morning last, (May 12) I was attracted by the following notice which appeared in all the daily papers of the city:

☞ Trinity Church, corner Post and Powell—Rev. T. B. LYMAN, D. D., Rector—Divine services at 11 A. M., and 7½ P. M. Lecture in the evening by the Rector, upon the doctrine of the intermediate state. Seats free at evening services.

I attended the advertised service. The capacious church—capable of seating 1,500 persons—was two-thirds full; an unusually large congregation for the evening, at that place. So I was informed. The Rev. Dr. combatted the idea, or "theory" that the good and wicked go immediately to their reward after death; but held to a conscious intermediate state—citing Paul's desire to depart, Christ's words to the thief and the parable of the rich man and Lazarus. The burden of the discourse was in opposition to what he called "the popular theory," of rewards and punishments following immediately after death. This theory, he said, made the doctrine of the resurrection of little or no importance. Dr. Lyman is a firm believer in the near approach of the literal Second Advent.

I heard Mrs. Fassett in the morning. She preached on the Scriptural uses of the word "Death." In her preparatory remarks, she spoke of the prosperity of the church at Vallejo—six converts to be baptised by her husband on that day.

In a recent article—just read by me—Dean Stanley (of Westminister,) declares his "utter disbelief" in the doctrine of eternal misery. And, as before noticed in his work on The Church, published two years ago, he confesses that a majority of clergymen in the establishment carefully refrain from preaching "any such doctrine." The truth is spreading among the high and low of this world. A.

SLAVERY.

We are pluming ourselves on having extirpated African slavery from the land. Wouldn't it be a good thing now to start an Abolition Society for the removal of spiritual bondage? A crusade would be of vast advantage which would overturn those who are lording it over God's heritage, and enable Christian people to study God's word for themselves, and decide as to the right, without first receiving direction from their denominational leaders. At present, people find it terribly difficult to go against the current; above all things they dread being in a minority. They should learn this hymn, and sing it frequently. Acts 4: 19, 20:

They are slaves who will not choose
Hatred, scoffing, and abuse,
Rather than, in silence, shrink
From the truth they needs must think.

They are slaves, who fear to speak
For the fallen and the weak;
They are slaves, who dare not be
In the right with two or three.

—Chr. Radical.

—There are others so fearful of becoming bondmen that they can never bear to have over two or three with them. If a few rally to their standard they take it as sure testimony that they are wrong, and seek some new position, where they can be isolated.

Warleigh's "Demonstration."

[Third Article.]

Our correspondent has a keen eye for effective logic and attractive ways of putting things, as will be seen in his selections from Mr. Warleigh's works, which he thus continues:

We add that it is as contrary to common sense and to reason, as it is to Scripture. Immortality is infinite duration; and this, or any other infinite quality, requires an infinite being to sustain it. A creature can have no infinite quality of any kind. We see the utter absurdity, not to say blasphemy, of any man arrogating to himself the Divine attribute of infallibility. But it is no more absurd, nor less blasphemous, to arrogate to ourself the Divine attribute of immortality. And if Protestants do not perceive this, the hindrance to it is the same as that which hinders the Romanists from perceiving their error; for certainly the one is not more monstrous than the other. But prejudice has neither eyes nor ears. A creature, from the very necessities of his nature, can live only moment by moment, and must be sustained and kept in being by his Maker. To say of such and such a one that he must necessarily live on and on to endless ages, argues great confusion of thought. That he is immortal like God, is a contradiction; or as we were to say, a finite infinite man; a square round figure. According to the inspired teaching of Isaiah (57: 15, 16), it is the quality of the immortal Jehovah to live an eternity at once; but man lives only a moment at once; and that which is not self-sustained, but is sustained by another, may come to an end at any moment. Who can say, "I AM," except Jehovah himself, in whom we all live, and move, and have our being? He who made man what he is, and gave him his life and being, can prolong it ad infinitum if he pleases; and this he has promised to do in a certain way, and on certain conditions. Man has not and cannot possess intrinsic, innate immortality, and he can only obtain it by a vital faith in Christ, producing love and holiness; but if he remain in unbelief and sin, extinction or death must be his position. (p. 75.)

That God only is the possessor of immortality, is, without doubt, taught in the Bible. The teaching of the Spirit by St. Paul, is as explicit as words can make it, that God only hath immortality. Our friends who contend for the innate immortality of the soul, could never have written that God alone possesses it. If they had guided the apostle's hand in writing this text, they would have dictated the sense they now endeavor to put upon it; that he only is the author of immortality, and that he only originally possessed it; but that he is not the only one who has it now, for that all angels and men, and even devils have it, as well as he, and must have it as long as he, and in this respect be equal with him. So awful and manifest a distortion of God's word would never have been resorted to by them, but for a preconceived theological scheme. Our opponents have received Plato's heathen dogma of the innate immortality of the soul, and this necessitates them to twist every passage which is inconsistent with it; as if, forsooth, Plato's teaching was to be received in preference to the teaching of the Spirit of God; and that therefore the latter must yield to the former. We earnestly entreat all who wish to see the real truth, to read the whole passage (1 Tim. 6: 15, 16) for themselves, and judge whether it is possible, with any fairness, to get out of it the sense given by our opponents. We hesitate not to say it is impossible, if any dependence is to be placed upon words; and if there is not, then no one can be certain of any sentence he may read, whether in the Bible or in any other book. (pp. 76–77.)

The nephesh, psuche, or soul, is life, animal life; and it is by this life alone that man can show what he is, and what he can do; and, therefore, by this alone that he can show the power and practice of religion. But this is not what persons mean by the phrases they use in their prayers and teachings. They appear to make the soul some kind of personaltiy; then they make religion to work upon the soul, and then the soul to work upon the life. There is not, however the least warrant in the Bible to thus think and speak of the Lord. It is equally incorrect to speak of death as the separation of soul and body, unless persons mean that at death life leaves the body. This is Scriptural, but it is far from what is usually meant. The language of which we complain is perpetually found in modern theology, but it does not occur once in the Bible, nor anything that warrants it, though we do often meet with instances where the spirit is separated from the body. Moreover, lastly, it is Scripturally incorrect also to confound the soul with the spirit, though this, too, is perpetually done. They are, however, as widely different as cause and effect, and the identification of the two has been a fruitful cause, not only of loose thinking, but of much erroneous theology. (p. 79.)

But we are asked if it is not very degrading to man, to represent that his soul or life is the same as the life or soul of the beast? We think not. It may be humbling to his acquired pride, but nothing is degraded by being in the place where the great Creator has put it. On the contrary, it is its highest dignity to fill its own niche, and fulfill the design of its Maker. How do we degrade man by looking at him in the niche ordained for him? But, "whether we pipe or harp," we are alike blamed. We are among those who maintain that man is next to God in his original status and ultimate destiny; and in the absence of any argument or text in disproof we were ridiculed and misrepresented for this, and put down as ignoramuses and as exalting man too highly. And now (though this exaltation was a department of this theory), when we say that, as far as the soul or animal life of man is concerned, he is not superior to the lower animals we are blamed for degrading him. But exalting or degrading, it is none of ours; we borrow from the Bible. "Man, though in honor, abideth not; he is like the beasts that perish. Like sheep he is laid in the grave. [sheol.] Man that is in honor, and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish." (Ps. 49: 12; 14: 20.) "For that which befalleth the sons of men, befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath (ruach); so that a man hath no pre-eminence over a beast; for all is vanity. All go to one place; all are of dust, and all turn to dust again." (Eccl. ch. 3.)

We say nothing stronger than this. These passages are part of God's inspired word, written for our learning. Why do teachers ignore them; or noticing, pervert them? Our scheme receives them as they are, without giving them a non-natural twist. Not so that of the counter one. But as an inclination sometimes shows itself to lower the authority of Solomon, let us hear St. Peter: "But these, as natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things they understand not; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption." (2 Pet. 2: 12.) It is convenient to our friends to overlook these texts; but there they are in the Bible, and they can never with honesty, be made to agree with their theory. (pp. 96–7.) California Items.

Last week I had the privilege of participating in the exercises of the "Methodist Ministerial District Association," which held its meetings in Vallejo, commencing May 7, and held its session for three days. Among the subjects for Essays, were the following:

"State of the righteous dead before the resurrection."

"State of the unrighteous dead before the resurrection."

"State of the unrighteous after the resurrection."

"Identity of the resurrection body."

These Essays were for mere criticism, for which the rule limited each speaker to three minutes, and then ten minutes was allowed for general discussion. This "rule" excluded all argument, as will be perceived, upon the questions. I was favored with more time than was allowed others in the criticisms, as I stood alone in the faith we maintain, and the fullest liberty was given me to express our views on the occasion. The season will not soon be forgotten. The truth is working. The members of this Association are reading and thinking. One of the oldest ministers present preached on the resurrection of the dead: Job 19 being his text. He neither advocated nor alluded to a conscious intermediate state. The discourse was one of the best I ever heard upon that subject, and to which myself and others responded hearty Amens.

VALLEJO CHURCH.

Five were baptised, and eight joined the church. One was a distinguished Editor of this coast, and edits two of the city papers. Not long since he requested me to meet him at his office, when he took occasion to say: "I am thankful you ever came to this coast; your lectures on the prophecies, and discourses on the doctrines you hold, have been the means of my conversion from infidelity." This statement, and the privilege of baptising him yesterday, was enough to satisfy me for coming to this coast. But the Lord has greatly blest the labors of myself and companion in many other instances. And he shall have the glory. Oh, the unspeakable honor of bearing his gospel to the ends of the earth.

O. R. Fassett.

FROM BR. D. D. REED.

I left home with my wife and Br. Fassett, the last of March, for Lake county, and have been holding meetings at three different places. This is the first Advent preaching in the county, and the truth is doing its work, shaking all the region round about. Some have embraced the truth. There are some six or eight ministers in this region, and they all raise up against the truth and are trying to put it down. But they will find it hard to "kick against the goads." Thanks be to God, we have the Bible and its truth on our side, and we have no fears as long as we are on the side of Jesus and truth.

We organized a church of sixteen members at Pleasant Grove. A number of them before conversion were hardened sinners. And the good work is still going on. In the morning we start for Bartlett Springs, about eighteen miles over the mountains, a very steep and rough road. Hundreds of people resort thither, and some truly wonderful views are reported. We expect from one to two thousand people there this summer. They camp out or live in shanties. Br. Wilson is to spend the summer there for his health, and also to labor for the Lord. People will be there from all parts of the State. A good place to preach Jesus' coming. The people will have nothing to do but to go to meeting. I will write you again how the battle goes.

Christ's Love for Sinners.

"And the Spirit and the Bride say come. And let him that heareth say come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him come and take of the water of life freely." (Heb. 22: 12.)

Dear reader: Is it not delightful to notice that the revelation of Jesus Christ closes with such a free, full and unlimited offer of salvation, in which the Holy Spirit and the Church unite and all are charged to circulate the glorious news? Is it not sufficient, my unconverted friends, to convince you that Jesus bears for you a wondrous, inconceivable love? And do you not see how very much he desires you to come unto him that you may escape the awful doom of the impenitent, and live? Consider the circumstances of the case. He has procured salvation for you by leaving the courts of glory, taking upon himself our nature, and thus subjecting himself to temptation and suffering. Much of his suffering was inflicted by those whom he was seeking to save; and finally they put him to death in a most cruel and ignominious manner. Notwithstanding his rejection and persecution of men, he urges them to come and accept the salvation that was thus procured for them.

Dear Sinner, you are one of the number for whom he thus suffered, and to you he addresses the language above quoted. How are you repaying his love? Are you not going on day by day, sinning against him, trampling his requirements and mercies beneath your feet, and saying by your acts, if not by words—"I will not have this man to rule over me?" Oh! what base ingratitude! How blind to your best interests.

Sinner, advance no farther in this perilous course. Jesus will not always bear these insults. Soon, he who is now your best friend will be your judge; and he to whom you now refuse to submit will then dash you "to pieces like a potter's vessel." Then your proud knees will bow in humble prayer, but too late. Do not then carelessly waste the time now given you to prepare for that terrible day. Fly at once to those outstretched arms. Accept with thankfulness the salvation he would so gladly bestow upon you, and soon you will "see him as he is, and be made like him."

"Good Tidings."

This book needs only to be known to be appreciated. Every Adventist should have a copy, to read and circulate. Often a treatise on a part of our faith is to the reader like a piece of new cloth in an old garment, and is rejected because it will not work in with other parts of an old system. This work covers all the ground—offers an entire new ground, and not merely a new patch for an old one. Thus, in many cases, it will be just the thing for a "Campaign Document." It is written in a clear, concise, yet not offensive style—contains 425 pages, and is well printed.

The subjects of its thirteen chapters have before been given in the Times; the following is a sketch of subjects noticed in ch. 1. The Destiny of the Earth. Science—general hypothesis—desire to know futurity—Scripture information—God the creator—the usurper's reign—the promise to Abram, God's oath—the two Abrahamic covenants—views of the Rabbies—the typical people—Egyptian bondage—the failing generation—the children's entrance—one covenant fulfilled. The antitype—Christ and the children of faith —Prophetic testimony—the inheritance of the righteous—Is. 65: New Testament testimony—the treasure in the field—the conflagration—the New Earth—times of restitution—reign on earth.

The above is only a thirteenth part of the book. Get it and use it.

Skulkers.

Every army has its skulkers; always burdensome to the true fighters, always missed when most needed. Just at the critical moment there is a mysterious alibi. Around the camp fire they achieve glorious victories. Scale the parapet, spike the gun, and humble their foeman in an instant! Yet at the first salute from the enemy's advancing hosts, and their courage fails; all their fighting qualities flee. They are unwell, entirely unfit for duty, fit subjects only for the hospital; or, failing in this, their more courageous comrades have the pleasure of knowing that in all probability every tree and stump outside of common range is the lurking place of one of these bold adventurers.

The army of Christ has its skulkers behind many of the trees and stumps of Satan's forest. One brave old veteran is discovered surrounded by an evening party, taking a little wine (of course for the stomach's sake). Another is seen surrounded by broad acres of hops, almost exclusively raised for malt purposes. Yes, he is a soldier of Christ, yet raising the material for Satan's beverage for a thousand of mouths. Still another is skulking behind that old stub "stingy." Yes, and his name is "Many." To be sure he speaks well, and prays long and beautifully, and would do much more (is amply able to); but must keep on good terms at home [wife won't allow it]. Still another wishes to be a Christian, means to walk right up to the line of Christian duty, and live a consistent life; yet ever forgets that the golden rule is a part of Christianity. And we find him taking up scandals and reproaches against his neighbor. Br. A. has done wrong, and Br. B. ain't just right. And there is the minister, to be sure he is a good man; but then he is getting old and stale. He preaches good, I know, but I do believe our church is on the decline, etc., etc.

With such a state of affairs who can wonder. The only wonder is how a church can live at all with such a host of skulkers within its pale, yet just out of reach of its discipline and order. I pray God that none of the above class will be found looking for the blessed hope at Christ's appearing, having the appearance but not the power of holiness. While the last tokens of the dawn of eternity flit away, let us be up and doing; oil in our vessels, and our lamps trimmed and burning, ready to meet the Bridegroom at a moment's warning. For then our metal will be tried. If found genuine, we may shout glory forever more. But if bogus, Oh how terrible! We can then only moan out our lives with a dying world, and sleep in eternal death. May God forbid that any of us should meet a skulker's fate.

M. D. Peavy.

That "Quarterly."

I was glad to notice that you had moved the office to Chicago, and had thus become centrally established. Your efforts for the cause are appreciated, as is your devotion, with that of all your co-laborers in the West. God bless them all with courage to stand boldly for unpopular truth. And, by the by, is it not encouraging, and cheering, and inspiring, and thrilling, and all else that is good, to feel deeply that we have the truth! One can face a thousand undauntedly, with the assurance the truth gives, and not hold the head down like one ashamed. I pray that you may all have grace and strength to battle on and wage successful warfare against Egyptian theology, and every other "ology" that is falsely so called.

But I took my pen to say just a word about that Quarterly. A hint in The Times that it might be published again thrilled me. I do believe I can do something for it. I will be, at all events a paying subscriber; and think I can sell a dozen every quarter, beside getting subscribers regularly. Each number being complete, single numbers might be disposed of, and so stir up an interest to subscribe. I hope a general rally will be made to publish it. We need just such a publication of high literary merit; something containing articles that are the very cream of truth and good literature, which can thus be preserved, in book form, as such things in a paper cannot be. Shall we not have it? I confess I am hungry for it. Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, Universalists, and I do not know how many others, have their Quarterlies, and they are high toned, too, whatever their theology. But we want both high tone and true tone, and we must have it.

Two Classes.

All needless intercourse with the wicked should be avoided. Association tends to make us more and more like them. Supreme devotion to God is the way not only of duty but of safety, prosperity and happiness. Whatever may be the condition here of those who regard not God they are in his sight worthless, and their blessings being abused, will soon all be taken away. The righteous and the wicked here live together, and are often connected in bonds of social intercourse and affection. But the Lord is perfectly acquainted with their different ways, and in the future world will make an everlasting separation between them.

It is natural for rulers and people, when left by God to themselves, to be opposed to his reigning in and over them and to refuse to submit to him as their rightful Lord and King. But their opposition will injure themselves only. The decree which constituted Christ mediator and gave him the ownership of all the earth as a reward for his sufferings unto death, secures the relation of all who submit to and trust in him, and renders certain the destruction of all who continue to oppose and rebel against him. The enemies of the righteous may be numerous, malignant and powerful, but the Lord will take care of his people and in due time deliver them from all their troubles.

The grand means of deliverance and safety to the righteous is prayer; and having committed themselves and their cause in humble believing supplication to God, they may rest in quietness knowing that he and he only can make them dwell in peace. The people of God know that the Author of their salvation is the Lord, they acknowledge him as the source of all their blessings and to him give all the glory.—Sel. by C. B. L.

The Telescope of Faith.

The telescope is an instrument of vision, by which remote objects are brought near, and laid open to the natural eye. Various kinds are known by various names; but three radical principles are common to all, viz:

1. A small eye glass.
2. A large object glass.
3. A rectifying medium, through which the image made by the object glass may be presented to the eye of the beholder at the eye glass in an up right position. For with two lenses only, a telescope presents every object to the eye inverted; the world is seen turned upside down, and men running along the way like flies on the ceiling. Whether, therefore, the telescope be refractive or reflective, it is important in its construction to combine three things in one, at suitable distances asunder: a small glass for the eye; rectifying glasses; and a large object glass.

To illustrate my conception of divine truth, I present you the gospel plan of salvation, revealed in the Holy Scriptures, as a telescope, and the eye for it, Faith. The Promise made of God unto the fathers is the eye glass, small and of apparently little power. The Prophecies are the rectifying lenses, or the proper medium through which the eye of faith obtains a correct vision, in place of one inverted, and all things turned in it upside down. The Gospel is the capacious object glass, formed with skill divine; and the whole is an instrument of miraculous power.

HISTORY OF THE DOCTRINE.

When Adam fell in Eden, faith saw, through the promise of the seed of the woman, the bright vision of Paradise and immortality regained. The subsequent promises to the patriarchs, and to David, added precision to the magnifying power of the eye-glass of faith's telescope, without enlarging or changing the field of vision, except by bringing into correct view things obscure, or inverted, or not discernible before. The Psalms and the prophets give through their rectifying media no other country and landscape to the eye of faith than that which Adam forfeited and lost, of which Abraham has the promise, and into which the Joshua of heaven will lead the chosen people. However, they bring into view and clearly illustrate a multitude of interesting particulars, which assist to fill up the outline, and to beautify the scene. The gospel lens for the object glass completes the instrument, and brings the vision of glory so near, that one may seem to reach it with the hand.

The divine telescope is perfect, and able with a steady eye to look out of this world upon the boundless expanse of heaven, and to search its mysterious clouds, its magnificent orbs, its ample revolutions, in one glorious kingdom of God, and to bring that realm very near. The telescope belongs to this world, and faith looks through the glass darkly; but turn the instrument toward any part of the skies, and it unfolds to the admiring view of the enraptured beholder the same glory, immortality, innocence and honor, dominion and power, of which Satan beguiled and robbed man, and Jesus is the triumphant restorer. This is the vision; and the gospel brings it very near.

Thus the Lord framed the spy-glass of faith, and put it into his disciples' hands, charging them at his departure to watch for his return; because he will come suddenly, and those whom he finds watching will he take with him into the beatific vision. So the apostles received it, and delivered it to their successors. The kingdom of heaven was their millennium, on which their eye rested and their hope fastened. They knew not any other. Their writings incontestably show that they used to look steadfastly for the coming of the Lord in the end of the world, to introduce in the renovated earth that kingdom which he preached in the gospel, and to make restitution of all things in the times of anapsyxis, resuscitation, and resurrection of the dead. The earliest creeds, and all creeds of all denominations in Christendom from the apostles to this day, recognize no other millennium, whether Greek or Roman, Apostate or Apostate Reformed, Lutheran, Episcopal, Presbyterian, Independent, Congregational, or whatsoever name any church may be called.—*From the Hope of the Church. The Brooklyn Pronunciamento.

The Presbytery of Brooklyn have cried havoc! and let slip the dogs of war now upon the women with a vengeance. Their address to the General Assembly to which, as is expressly stated, half a dozen gray-headed old doctor's gave the essence of their wisdom and knowledge, is calculated not only to fire with wrath the noble souls of the leaders in the women's camp, but to enrage the whole sex to the mildest matron and Dolly Varden of them all. The meekest sparrow would chirp defiance at the wholesale ignominy conveyed by this Presbyterian bull. We wait with impatience the return fire from the army of the Advanced Females. The dullest woman is sharp-sighted enough to see and have her joke at the mistake of the reverend sages in calling their assertions "reasons," upon which they demand the utter routing out of every petticoated preacher from the pulpit, the grave Quaker, Miss Smiley at their head. The Presbytery begin their pronunciamento by the declaration that "the function of women is not to govern officially." (The last word being thrown in as a bit of hedging probably by some sage who bears the yoke at home.) "She is only a help-meet for man." Now this, although we think we have heard it before, is all very well until we look at the facts of the case. Everybody knows the history of the taking out of Adam's rib, and the place assigned to it, when once fairly alive as a "help-meet," over whom Adam was to rule, just as our theological brethren propose to do now; but everybody knows, also, that no sooner had her inferiority been proved to her in a way which ought to have satisfied any woman, than she proceeded to take matters into her own hands, and ate the apple, that she might be as a god, knowing good and evil, while her husband submissively followed her example, simply because she ordered him to do so, and because the apple tickled his palate. The difference of motive betweeen the man and woman is a point which we are surprised the fair belligerents have not improved before now.

The Brooklyn logicians proceed to argue that there should be no woman in the pulpit now because "there were no female apostles, pastors or teachers in the early church, founded by the Savior. There were no female Bishops and the 'angels' of the churches were all men." Now this must be admitted by our sisters as an indubitable fact, and would be what in Western speech is called "a deadener" to their cause, if they could not plead that other means of grace quite unknown to the apostles beside female preachers which have appeared in modern times have been sanctioned by the reverend clergy who have just pronounced Anathema upon their feeble efforts to serve the Lord. When Peter and Paul set out upon their mission, did they devote the contributions of the faithful to the purchase of palatial churches, costly pictures, carved images, and choirs of singing women, costlier than all? Which of the "angels" of the chuches preached Christ for the twelve or twenty thousand dollars salaries of to-day? If the church has made progress in these innovations, why shut out the others? Why do not the theological seminaries, who wish to keep their doors barred on the all-encroaching woman, consult the Tribune of a few weeks since for the true logical reason for so doing? There the nail was hit on the head. We set forth the danger that vanity and ambition might creep into the pulpit through some of our sisters' sermons; and that the profession of preaching might be adopted by many women in search of a career, tempted by its sure remuneration and respectable social position. Is it possible that any male student of divinity would avoid such an argument from the fear of being hoisted by his own petard?

A third class of Christians in this country, quite distinct from either men or women-ministers, are beginning to question whether there is not too much instead of too little set and formal preaching; whether the worship of God, instead of being narrowed into two or three deliverances of opinion, too often stale and meaningless, which one man weekly wrings out of a tired brain for a thousand others on consideration of a salary, ought not to partake more of a general, hearty working together for God, not only in Sunday prayers and praise, but in every system of reform for their fellow men. If the money and the zeal devoted now to the paying for costly churches, preachers and music, were given by every congregation in this city to the establishment of church hospitals, inebriate asylums, and training schools, the reformation of Magdalenes and drunkards, in ten years New York would be deserved to be called a Christian city. If every man and woman in the church were leagued together not simply to pay pew rent, but to work actively in giving their brothers for whom Christ died, a chance for salvation in this world by fair work and wages, and in the next by a knowledge of him, their own spiritual health would be stronger than if nourished by any sermons from either male or female teachers. This is the opinion of the third party; but we, of course, as mere secular reasoners can only sit apart and hope that truth may win.—N. Y. Tribune.

Man and His Abiding Place.

With all the boasted triumphs of our so-called science, even the wisest among us know comparatively nothing. Newton compared himself to a little child picking up pebbles along the sea shore and Humboldt confessed that the further we advance the more clearly we discover how circumscribed is all our knowledge. Of the stars, their size, distance and motion are known, but that is about all. It still remains a noted question whether the sun is a compact or a vaporous body, whether cold or in a glowing heat. Only recently the spectral analysis has ascertained the earthly substances which are represented in the sun, but none can tell how it came about. Of our nearest associate and most faithful companion, the moon but little is known. For thousands of years she has been observed with the naked eye, and since the discovery of the telescope we have incessantly examined her. Our whole scientific apparatus has been called into requisition to discover her secrets. But thus far she has revealed nothing. We are not even yet assured whether she has an atmosphere, whether the spots on her disk are mountains or valleys, whether she has a vegetation or an organic life. There exist many theories, but none have been hardened into facts. Science is as little capable of explaining the phenomena of our globe as those which surround it. The nature of the meteors which incessantly traverse our atmosphere, and partly disolve in it, cannot be acurately ascertained Are they telluric or cosmic in their origin? We may assume, but cannot affirm which. Year after year the skies present the same magnificent phenomenon of the northern lights. The spectacle is admired by laymen and studied by scientists. How does it originate? What forms the fiery clouds, pillars and waves? Even the most learned are unable to answer this question with certainty. The same is true in relation to earthquakes which have so intimate a connection with the formation of the crust, the division of land and water, which raise mountains, fill up valleys make abysses, and destroy cities. Man confronts the forces of nature in perfect helplessness. Where is their seat? In the interior of the earth, or near the crust? Is the center of our planet a fiery mass, which breaks through here and there? Do the fires originate by some means only a few miles under our feet? Are they the result of a continual development, or of a gradual decomposition of the place which we inhabit? None know. Hypotheses conflict; but not one of them is capable of proof. The series of shocks which we have lately experienced has seriously lessened our sense of security and confidence in "terra firma." In various parts of Europe the soil heaves under foot. Antioch, the great, beautiful and powerful of ancient days, has sunk in consequence of earthquakes, which have visited her for centuries, to the condition of a petty trading post. Centuries passed between the visitations, but their memory could not be obliterated; the tradition could not die. After hundreds of years of quiet, the half of what was once the pearl of the East has again been destroyed. instead of the 250,000 inhabitants destroyed on a previous occasion, the demon of destruction contented itself this time with 1,500, but only because there were no more victims. simultaneously with Syria, the southern part of California was the scene of a series of violent shocks which have desolated whole regions.

There is no visitation more awful and fearful than an earthquake. All other chastisements of providence, such as war, pestilence, famine, drought, may be borne in comparison with this. Like a flash of lightning from a clear sky, it surprises its victims. No definite premonitory symptoms indicate its dread approach. No human foresight or care can avert the deadly danger. Whenever it comes whether in broad day light or in the silent darkness of night there is no safety, no escape. Those who escape from the falling roof and tottering wall of the building only run the risk of being swallowed up in the gulfs opening in every direction before their terror stricken eyes. When the earth houses and yawns, man fully realizes his impotence. He can do nothing but turn his eye heavenward, and submit to his fate.

Hardly had the earth ceased to sway and tremble on the Pacific when we hear from Italy that Vesuvius is belching forth pillars of fire and cataracts of lava. Who can say what next the mysterious subteranean powers may not have in store for us? Shocks and volcanic eruptions may occur at any moment where they have never been seen before, and the largest and most populous cities may be blotted out. Science is uterly helpless in view of these perils. Since ages past the wisest minds have studied our planet and the universe beyond, but the knowledge of our wisest, who have inherited the intellectual treasures of past generations, is like a drop in the ocean. They all feel like Newton and Humboldt, that there are bounds beyond which no mortal eye can ever hope to pass.—Inter-Ocean.

China and India.

From a humanitarian stand-point, all thought of eternity excluded, the field was further considered. China is the third empire in the world, and has actually twice the productive power of either Russia or Great Britan. It is about one-tenth of the earth's surface, is nearly one-third larger than the United States and Territories, and is nearly three times as large as the inhabited portion of our country. It is the finest belt of the world; it has every variety of climate, soil, scenery and products. Yet there is not a railroad, telegraph or spring-wagon in all China. Her roads have not been repaired in 2,000 years. Her streets are six feet wide, the avenues twelve. In the middle of the broad street is the sewer, heaped up with filth six or ten feet high. In the narrow streets it is piled up to the eaves of their one-story houses; they have no other save the government buildings. They have no pavements. At night they water their streets with the filth-water of their filth-houses. A glue factory would be a deoderizer in any heathen city. There is no public enterprise, no forward movement in all China. Her cities swarm, and her people fester and rot. India is in the same condition except as it is modified by English enterprise.

Here, then, in these two countries, China and India, is a prison where are 600,000,000 human beings, who barely exist. They are tortured by superstitions, robbed by priests, murdered by magistrates, enslaved by monsters, starved by prohibitions, and are fairly decomposing by the diseases begotten of the filth and vileness in which they are submerged.

Buddhism, Brahmanism, Mohammedism, are their morals and fruits just what might be expected from their tenets. There is no literature in India fit for a woman to read. Travelers say that it is to their credit that the women go their temples at night, their service is so vile and revolting. And they go veiled by day. Prostitution is the general practice. There are more prostitutes in India than there are women in the United States. Thuggism and assassination are protected and consecrated. Infanticide is commended in both China and India. The natural charities of the human heart are turned aside from legitimate objects. They will stop an army to save an insect, wear out men in building hospitals for sick dogs, and hire beggars to lie quiet that vermin on them may have a good meal. Yet they trample their sisters and wives to death, burn their own mothers alive, strangle their own daughters, assassinate their own fathers and pray to devils.—West. Ch. Advocate.

Mind in Nature.

The whole question between the Atheist and the Theist is, Is there Mind in Nature? Is there anything in the order of the universe corresponding to the order of thought? Is there anything outside of our own brains, in the heavens above or the earth beneath, upon which we may fix our eyes and say, This is cosmic, not chaotic; this is wise, not blind? If there be mind in the universe, if there be anywhere in it benevolent purpose, these are manifested to us by natural supreme laws. And if there be any of these laws which to our partial and dim knowledge work evil and pain to man, what can the Theist say, except that this is one of the many regions where his knowledge cannot penetrate! This ignorance at one point does not invalidate his knowledge at another. It does not impair my knowledge of gravitation that I do not also understand the variations of the compass. Neither does it weaken my perception of the benevolence expressed in a flower, that I cannot yet see the benevolence expressed in a pestilence. I see mind in nature; I see love in it. How that mind is related to the material combinations around me, I do not know: I do not doubt the existence of my own mind, though I cannot tell how it blends with my visible body as to be able to lift my arm. How that love which I see in nature can co-exist with human suffering or animal pain, may be a puzzle to me. Yet it is not a puzzle of which the solution is inconceivable; for all of us know that we sometimes ourselves inflict pain on those we love, and because we love them. And if we wonder that supreme love includes what we call pain and evil, our little children no less wonder that our love can permit them to be checked in any of their desires.—Moncure Conway.

The Bible Class.

The Paradox.

Solomon said, in one breath: "Answer not a fool according to his folly," and "Answer a fool according to his folly." The advice is good in both cases. All depends upon the object one has in view, and the peculiar circumstances. Do not answer a fool in a spirit as bad as his own; or at a time when neither he nor others will be likely to profit by it; or in a way which has no particular relevancy to the matter in hand. But answer him, if at all, in a spirit which will put his temper to shame, and with an adroitness and completeness which will not leave him even a temptation to repeat his folly.

Vain Repetitions.

What is forbidden in this verse is not much praying, for our Lord himself passed whole nights in prayer; nor praying in the same words, for this he did in the very intensity of his agony in Gethsemane; but the making number and length a point of observance, and imagining that prayer will be heard, not because it is the genuine expression of the desire of faith, but because it is of such a length, has been such a number of times repeated. The repetitions of Paternosters and Ave Marias in the Romish Church, as practised by them, are in direct violation of this precept; the number of repetitions being prescribed, and the efficacy of the performance being made to depend upon it.—Alford.

CHICAGO, - - - - - - ILLINOIS.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, May 28, 1872.

'YOU cannot afford to shut you eyes to the truths of human nature. Every Christian minister is bound to fairly look at these things,' says Beecher. But what will become of immaterialism when they do it?

"LET them destroy MY works; I desire nothing better: for all I wanted was to lead Christians to the Bible, that they might afterwards throw away MY writings. Great God! if we had but a right understanding of the Holy Scriptures, what need would there be of my books?"—Luther.

The London Milk Journal says: "That cows have memory, language, signs, and the means of enjoying pleasant associations has been recognized, but scarcely to the extent the subject merits."

—According to immaterialism, these—memory, etc.—are all signs of an immortal soul. Question: Are cows immortal? This is bringing the beast up to the level of man with a vengeance!

A GROVE Meeting is a good way to celebrate Independence Day. Br. Cole, and the friends at Oneida, Ill., are already moving in this matter. Let others make their arrangements, secure a speaker or speakers, advertise widely, and have a Fourth of July celebration worthy of Christian citizens. Get ready early.

IN his Manual of English Authors, Hart says of Bp. Law: "His works were the occasion of much discussion and earnest controversy, and are often referred to in the history of those times." He taught the sleep of the dead and destruction of the wicked, denying of course the immortality of the soul. The seed sown by him is still bearing fruit, and his ideas have been incorporated into tracts and widely scattered, with no inconsiderable results, during the past fifteen years. "Being dead he yet speaketh."

IN a letter from London, England, dated April 5, 1872, published in Beecher's Christian Union of May 1, there is the following concerning the late Frederick Denison Maurice:

"It is difficult to tell how much of the change that has passed upon theological opinion in England, and the tolerance that is now felt for differences of opinion, is owing to Maurice. It is safe to say that no one has contributed to them so much as he, whether for good or for evil. Mr. Maurice lives to see the doctrine of eternal punishment, for the denial of which he was expelled his fellowship, renounced by hundreds of the clergy, and subscription [to the XXXIX articles] so far relaxed in terms that it might be made to square with an uneasy conscience."

And so it is that the doctrines of Origen are prevailing in England, as against the awful and God dishonoring doctrine of eternal misery. In other words the honest ministry are coming out and avowing that which nearly all the society secretly cherish: the doctrines of reclamation to purity after death and after a purgatorial process. From one grave error are they tossed into another; and the truth escapes their recognition in the passage. But some faithful and discerning souls, like Minton and Warleigh, observe the truth, and proclaim it; having great liberty so to do in the English Church because of the freedom giving efforts of Maurice and Stanley—as well as from their own defiance.

THE people formerly sitting in darkness are beginning to see—if not the light, at least this much: that what they supposed was light was not light after all. Some champions of the popular dogma of the soul, feign that it is a matter of no consequence that "immortal soul" is an unscriptural term and in that sense at least an unscriptural idea. But some of their pupils begin to imagine if the words are not there, the idea may be missing also. If the doctrine is not directly asserted, how is it asserted? and where? Such is the drift of an article we copy in another place from the Journal and Messenger. We hope the "Professors" will come forward with their "light."

IT is a very popular notion that the earth has all the elements of practically eternal stability. Occasionally, however, this common faith is shaken by a round of natural convulsions, which seem to indicate that its foundations are not as solid as could be desired; and indeed, that such a doom as the Bible predicts for it is not as unlikely as some would fain make it appear. But while so many signs indicate that as once it was destroyed by water, so it will sometime undergo a baptism by fire, let us never forget the promise extending beyond the ken of science, that this fiery deluge will not be a scene of annihilation, but a regenesis. We look for new heavens and new earth. But we will not here enlarge. We commenced this paragraph to call attention to the article from Inter Ocean upon Man and his Abiding Place, which will well repay perusal.

SOME D. D. discusses in the Independent, the question whether we shall laugh in heaven. He says:

Christ our Lord, contrasting the condition of his disciples with the joy that was to come, said: 'Blessed are ye that weep now, for ye shall laugh.' Where? Evidently in heaven.

—We are not so sure about that evidently. We don't doubt the laugh, but the idea of its being in heaven. What kind of work would an immaterial spirit make of laughing? "The meek shall inherit the earth." Put the laugh on earth beyond the resurrection, and we can believe it; for where the captivity of Zion shall have been turned, we can say with the Psalmist—'Our mouth is filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing.'

POSSIBLY Adventists may learn something from this story told by Mr. Beecher in response to a question, how one should preach 'disagreeable truths.'

In the early abolition days, two men went out preaching, one an old Quaker and the other a young man full of fire. When the Quaker lectured, everything ran along very smoothly, and he carried the audience along with him. When the young man lectured there was a row, and stones, and eggs. It became so noticable, that the young man spoke to the Quaker about it. He said, "Friend, you and I are on the same mission, and preach the same things; and how is it that while you are received cordially I get nothing but abuse?" The Quaker replied, "I will tell thee. Thee says, 'If you do so and so, you shall be punished,' and I say, 'My friends, if you will not do so and so, you shall not be punished.'" They both said the same things, but there was a great deal of difference in the way they said it.

THE Spectator (London) says:

Dr. Wordsworth, Bishop of Lincoln, is much alarmed at the prospect of losing the Athanasian Creed and eloquently compares his feelings of old in listening to the public chanting of the creed in Westminster Abbey to those of the hosts who heard Miriam's chant over the destruction of the Egyptians in the Red Sea, or Deborah's over the defeat of Sisera; and he calls on his clergy to remember those confessors who endured the rack "rather than disobey God and forsake the faith of their fathers." But does not the good Bishop quite mistake the emergency? No one is asking him to forsake the faith of his fathers. If he likes to recite the Athanasian Creed every day and all day, no one will put him on the rack, or wish to do so. But what he is so anxious for, is liberty to put other people on the rack of false confession—to make them say they believe in the eternal perdition of friends of whose salvation they feel at least as hopeful as they do of their own—liberty to embarrass the worship and falsify the words of others. There is too much of this extraordinary confusion between freedom to say your own creed and freedom to put your creed into the mouth of those who don't believe it. Bishop Wordsworth's perverted idea of a confessor is a man who, at some cost to himself, insists on making other people confess his own creed, at much greater cost to them.

THE ATHANASIAN CREED.

As the efforts to remove this creed from the litany of the English church are attracting considerable attention, our readers may be glad of a chance to peruse the document. We give it below. It is commonly affirmed to have been the work of Athanasius, but he undoubtedly had no hand in its construction. It is a fit production of the later and darker ages—the growth of conventual dungeons, of the monk's cell.

THE CREED OF ATHANASIUS.

Whoever will be saved: before all things it is necessary that he hold the Catholic faith.

Which faith, except one do keep whole and undefiled, without doubt he shall perish everlastingly.

And the Catholic faith is this: that we worship one God in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity,

Neither confounding the persons, nor dividing the substance. For there is one person of the Father, another of the Son, and another of the Holy Ghost.

But the Godhead of the Father, of the Son, of the Holy Ghost is all one: the majesty co-eternal.

Such as the Father is, such is the Son, and such is the Holy Ghost.

The Father incarnate, the Son incarnate, the Holy Ghost incarnate.

The Father incomprehensible, the Son incomprehensible, the Holy Ghost incomprehensible.

The Father eternal, the Son eternal, and the Holy Ghost eternal.

And yet they are not three eternals but one eternal.

As also they are not three incomprehensibles, nor three uncreated, but one uncreated, and one incomprehensible.

So likewise the Father is Almighty, the Son Almighty, the Holy Ghost Almighty.

And yet they are not three Almighties, but one Almighty.

So the Father is God, the Son is God, the Holy Ghost is God.

And yet there are not three Gods, but only one God.

So likewise the Father is Lord, the Son is Lord, and the Holy Ghost is Lord.

And yet, not three Lords, but one Lord.

For like as we are compelled by Christian verity to acknowledge every person by himself to be God and Lord,

So are we forbidden by the Catholic Religion, to say, There be three Gods, or three Lords.

The Father is made of none, neither created nor begotten.

The Son of the Father alone, not made, nor created, but begotten.

The Holy Ghost is of the Father and of the Son; neither made, created, nor begotten; but proceeding.

So there is one Father, not three Fathers; one Son, not three Sons: one Holy Ghost, not three Holy Ghosts.

And in this Trinity none is afore or after other; none is greater or less than other; but the whole three persons are co eternal together, and coequal.

So that in all things as aforesaid, the Trinity in unity, and unity in Trinity is to be worshipped.

He therefore that will be saved MUST THUS THINK OF THE TRINITY.

Futhermore it is necessary to everlasting salvation that he also believe rightly the incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ.

For the right faith is that we believe and confess, that our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is God and Man.

God of the substance of the Father, begotten before the world; and Man, of the substance of his mother, born in the world; perfect God and perfect Man; of a reasonable soul and human flesh subsisting.

Equal to the Father as touching his Godhead; and inferior to the Father as touching his manhood.

Who, although he be God and Man, yet he is not two, but one Christ.

One; not by the conversion of the Godhead into flesh, but by taking of the manhood into God.

One altogether; not by the confusion of substance, but by unity of person.

For as the reasonable soul and flesh is one in man, so God and Man is one Christ.

Who suffered for our salvation, descended into hell, rose again the third day from the dead.

He ascended into heaven, he sitteth on the right hand of the Father, God Almighty: from whence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead.

At whose coming all men shall rise again with their bodies, and shall give an account for their own works.

And they that have done good shall go unto life everlasting, and they that have done evil into everlasting fire.

This is the Catholic faith; which, except a man believe fully he cannot be saved!

—Such is this famous—we nearly wrote infamous—document. No wonder sensible men in the Church of England wish it expunged from the Prayer Book.

The following bit of keen irony, a communication published in the London Inquirer, must express the feelings of all candid minds, and will be fully appreciated by our readers fresh from a reading of the creed referred to:

To the Editor of the Inquirer: Would you kindly suggest to the Revisers of our State Prayer Book the opportune addition of the following prayer:

"Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, who by the Archbishop of Canterbury has recently taught us that without doubt we shall perish, everlastingly perish unless we thus think of the Trinity, except we be heathens or othwise among those 'who by circumstances of birth or education, have been debarred from examining into the evidence on which the doctrine and the creed are grounded,' we earnestly implore thee, as thou well knowest how difficult it is to thus think of the Trinity, and that no possible benefit can arise from our doing it to ourselves any more than to thee, that thou will of thy great mercy place us at least on a par with the heathen, and by keeping us and all whom we love and all professing Christians in ignorance and debarred of opportunity, preserve us from this awful risk of so terrible a doom."

BRAIN ACTION.

What the phrenologists call faculties and associate with definite and limited parts of the brain, is now better explained on the theory of different modes of action in which the whole cerebral system is implicated. This doctrine is of practical importance, for when there is injury by over-exertion, it is not merely some "organ" that is damaged but the whole structure. All agree that thoughts too long and too intently fixed on one object weary the part of the brain so employed, and if we did not get relief by changing our occupation there is danger that this weariness will end in disease. There is a case of an English student who determined to commit to memory a certain number of Greek primitives every day. After persisting some time he found that, though competent to other study, this wearied him. Being a metaphysician, despising "materialism," ignoring the brain, and believing in the omnipotence of "will," he resolved not to be thus mastered, and persevered in spite of weariness; but in a short time delirium came on. He took the hint, laid aside the Greek, and recovered. In this case it was not merely the "organ" of memory for Greek words that failed from over-action, but there was derangement affecting the whole mental constitution. It was not that memory lost its grasp of certain lingual signs, but that all voluntary control of the intellectual operations was suspended, and the whole mental fabric overthrown.—"Scientific Miscellany, in May Galaxy.

If orthodox journals don't stop sowing materialism by publishing such facts as these, they will have a crop for harvesting by and by, which will astonish them. The record of facts belong to materialism. The opposing system dwells in the sphere of speculative metaphysics.

DO FISHES THINK.

It is a novel question, but not beneath the consideration of a philosopher. It is a common way of disposing of difficult problems in regard to the manifestations of intelligence in animals which are departures from the ordinary routine of their acts, to call them extraordinary deviations from their natural instincts.

The monkey that smoked at the Zoological Gardens last season for the pleasure of it, and the dogs which are met on Broadway carrying home a basket of provisions, threading their way through crowds of busy humanity, both perform acts above the law of simple instinct, which makes no progress, but repeats the same thing in each succeeding generation.

The first associated a sensation of pleasure from charging a pipe with tobacco, and the latter has in mind the approbation of his master in faithfully delivering the marketing to the cook.

If there is no reasoning here, what is it? And next, how are such mental phenomena to be explained.

Fishes have a peculiarly nice sense of smell, and their ears are curiously constructed with reference to appreciating the slightest concussions at a very considerable distance. When waves wash against rocks, or a belligerant contest is raging between aquatic enemies, they appear to have exact knowledge of what is transpiring, through their delicate acoustic organs.

Fishes also receive impulses from the air, even slight as may be the force of aerial undulations in the denser mediums in which they float. It is positively certain that they may be taught to gather for feeding at the ring of a bell. That is a demonstration.

If when they hear the bell, they rush to the place where the food is given them, is it an indication of memory? A particular sound is associated with the idea of satisfying hunger; can there be memory without reflection?

What property of mind is it by which they are instructed, so that by repetition a certain amount of actual knowledge is acquired, if they do not think?

—In this article which we find floating about in the papers of the day, the thoughtful immaterialist will find food for reflection. "Matter cannot think," by which he means a material organism cannot think, is the corner stone of his creed—at least when he is talking of man. In order to think, man must have an immaterial entity added to his material organization. And being immaterial, this entity is also immortal. But as it seems positively certain that fishes "think," it follows, that they also possess an immaterial, immortal soul or spirit. Don't dodge, brethren, but own up, if your theory is true, that every sentient being has an immortal soul. You will be rapidly and vigorously pressed to this conclusion, or else into materialism by the stern logic of facts.

SATAN THE MORE POTENT GOD.

The Contemporary Review (British) for April, contains an article already referred to in THE TIMES, entitled, "Is Eternal Punishment an Open Question in the Church of England?" The three opening, powerful paragraphs of the article read as follows:

"If this question had been demanded of the last generation of Anglican divines, it is easy to surmise what kind of answer would have been returned—an indignant denial, coupled with an expression of surprise that any doubt on the point could be entertained. The certainty of the truth of this doctrine was almost universally received as an axiom. So little critical were those times—so glibly did the most awful terms, "eternity" combined with "torment," fall from the lips of grave and reverend divines and scholars—so unexamined and unscrutinized did the most frightful ideas and images that the human intellect can concieve, or human imagination portray, establish themselves in innumerable minds! He who would shrink from giving a moment's unnecessary pain or annoyance to a fellow creature in this world would speak in loud tones and without question of the hopeless and eternal misery of the vast majority of mankind. A vengeance pursued without spirit, unexhausted by the lapse of millions of ages, and still to burn unconsumed in immortal vigor—all this attributed to a GOD whose name is LOVE, and whom we address as Our Father, would seem an almost impossible presumption to be arrived at by any rational being.

"But this is, in truth, only half the difficulty. Endless sin is always supposed to be the concomitant of endless suffering. The lost one—and we must bear in mind that the lost are not a few of the worst and most outrageous specimens of humanity, a few monsters who have appalled the world by their crimes, but in truth the moral average of Christians—the "many," as compared with "the few"—the lost one, we say, is always represented as no longer in a state of possible amendment, but as given over finally to the empire of Sin and Darkness. He will sin and suffer, suffer and sin, in an endless cycle. In other words, God will be dethroned from all regulation and government of more than half his Moral Universe. He parts with all control over it. Satan is thus represented as the more potent and prevailing god of the unseen world. In truth, he is the veritable god of both worlds, while the true God—the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ—only succeeds in securing to himself—to goodness and to happiness—a minority of his creatures, a remnant of his flock.

"Here, then is a double difficulty of the most staggering kind. To survey suffering must be as repugnant to the love of God—we may say to the heart of God—as sin is repugnant to his holiness. Yet, according to the current and accepted theory of the universe, sin and torment are its predominant and eternal characteristics!"

—Since the above article was written, the House of Bishops have, by an overwhelming majority, voted to retain this creed in the service of the Church of England. They amply deserve the contempt poured upon them. How much better than the non possums of the Papacy is that of Protestantism?

FOR THE TRUTH'S SAKE.

Fourteen years ago D. Wardlaw Scott of Hackney, London, England, established a Home for Aged Christians in Destitute Circumstances, and has recently issued his fourteenth report. Owing to a publication of a work by him entitled God misunderstood; or is eternal evil compatible with God? many friends have been alienated, and he fears that he will have to close his charitable establishment. In his "Report" for the past year he says:

"I have had a number of letters but not so many as usual. My differing from some correspondents in believing man not to be immortal, but only receiving immortality through faith in the Lord Jesus, in accordance with Rom. 6: 23, seems to have estranged them completely. Since the publication of my Letter to Christian Friends, of which about 1,200 copies have been already sold, I have conversed or corresponded with many who have read it, and have had good opportunities of forming a tolerably correct judgment of the various opinions on the subject. I have found very few who boldly declare their belief in the doctrine of Eternal Torment as propounded by Edwards, Wesley, Spurgeon, and most of the Romish priests. Many hold it as a church dogma, while they are comparatively indifferent as regards its reality; that is, they accept it as a part of the religious system in which they have been brought up, without having examined whether it is true or not. And when shown that it is unscriptural and contradictory to the character of God, they shelter themselves under the plea, "Shall not the judge of all the earth do right?" This is the text that is almost invariably dragged in on such occasions; nor do I blame those who so quote it, as it doubtless gives the holders of the doctrine some secret hope that God is not so merciless as their creed supposes him to be. If they only considered a little more attentively the truth contained in that beautiful text, hope would be soon exchanged for certainty, and their ideas of the eternity of evil utterly abandoned, for they would then see that, from the very righteousness of his nature, God, being just, could not punish the finite sins of time with the infinite torments of eternity, as there is no proportion whatever between these two states. Like an inverted cone the doctrine falls from its own gravity.... I have met with some who after being convinced that it is untrue, have the courage openly to reject the doctrine of Eternal Torment; but such are comparatively few. For one Luther there are ten Erasmuses. This confession involves the cross, and from that men naturally shrink. The reproach of Christ has not yet ceased. To know the truth theoretically is one thing; to be willing to suffer for it as a Christian is quite another. The professing church is in a state of great uncertainty as to the future of the lost, and while the orthodox dogma of Eternal Evil is for the most part outwardly held, it is very frequently rejected. This necessarily gives rise to a great deal of hypocrisy, which is the more to be deplored, as in some gatherings, Christians are excommunicated for openly avowing what some in the same community secretly believe themselves, but are afraid to avow."

What Say the Scriptures?

New tranlations, new readings of the Scriptures, and extended criticisms are undermining the faith of many, and unsettling them in what they have hitherto received as truth.

One of the points of controversy is that of the immortality of the soul, and we would suggest to some biblical scholar that an effort at "Bible Mining" in that direction would be carefully read by many readers of the Journal and Messenger.

The term "Immortal soul" is of so common parlance, that many are surprised to learn that it is not in the Bible.

It is expressly declared, 1 Tim. 6: 16, that "God only hath immortality."

Immortal is used but once, 1 Tim. 1: 17. "Now unto the King eternal, immortal," etc.

Immortality is used five times, viz: Rom. 2: 7, "To those who seek for glory and honor and immortality." 1 Cor. 15: 53, "This mortal must put on immortality." 1 Tim. 6: 16, "Who only hath immortality." 2 Tim. 1: 10, "Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought immortality to light through the gospel."

Rom. 2: 7. To those who seek for glory and honor and immortality is to be rendered eternal life. That immortality is to be sought for here, and to issue in eternal life hereafter.

1 Cor. 15: 53. It is said that "this mortal must put on immortality." When? When the dead are raised incorruptible, and (54) "When this mortal shall have put on immortality, then will be brought to pass the saying: Death is swallowed up in victory."

In 2 Tim. 1: 10, the language is in the past tense, "hath brought immortality to light" —in all the others it is future.

Upon what Scripture, then, can we base the doctrine of an "immortal soul?" Where is it taught? The theory with some is, that when man dies, all dies, body, soul, spirit—the whole man; that all his powers become as lifeless as was the body when God had formed man of the dust, but had not yet breathed into him the breath of life, and that he goes to the grave there to wait that resurrection which shall precede the putting on of immortality. That there is nothing about man that is immortal, and that his immortality begins with his resurrection.

A Christian brother writes me that "Spiritualism is one of the legitimate fruits of the immortal soul doctrine, and thanks God that he has been led to renounce the anti scriptural doctrine, the results of which are only evil."

The term soul is used in the Bible with various meanings. It is used for the life, for the whole man, for the heart or affections, for the part of man that sins, and for the imperishable, never-dying part—that which man can not kill, though he destroy the body.

What, then, is that which we call the immortal soul? What part of man? What becomes of it at death? Where, if it survives the body, does it exist between death and the resurrection? Is there any such thing as a disembodied spirit? What was taken into Paradise on the promise of Christ to the crucified thief? What did Stephen ask to have received by Jesus when he died? We only ask, What do the Scriptures teach?

The people need instruction on these points. Will not Professors Talbot, Stone or Clarke, or some one qualified to do so, give the readers of the Journal and Messenger some light on the subject?—Cor. of Journal and Messenger.

Dr. Cumming.

A correspondent of the Christian Register after a considerable amount of preliminary scoffing—or perhaps we shall be more accurate if we use the vulgarism, chaffing—continues a notice of Dr. Cumming and his preaching in the following strain:

Now for the seventh vial. It was poured out upon the air, that is it was made to pervade the spirit of the age. It breathes in all our literature, permeates the general sentiment of the time and is making the distance between God and man wider every day. It is the spirit of irreligion. See it in France, in America, here in England, everywhere. It was poured out upon the world but a few years ago. And see, immediately after it was poured, there was a great earthquake "such as was not since men were upon the earth." Has it not been so? Even the Pall Mall Gazette admits that never in the recorded history of the globe have there been such frequent and mighty earthquakes as during the last decade. The whole rocky structure of the planet groans, and is shattered by upheaval. The sea is troubled in its bed. But more. An earthquake is a physical fact to which a profounder spiritual one corresponds. Everything is upheaved in our human affairs. War blows his alarming trumpet in every breeze, from every quarter. Dynasties and kingdoms are shaken. Destruction threatens monarchy here, and republicanism there. The most sacred institutions are buried under the rash demoralization of men. The church of England is torn and rent by her own children. It is all earthquake, everywhere earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth. But Dr. Cumming takes great satisfaction in this, that the rending of strata, geological, political, and theological, is giving unto Great Babylon the cup of wine of the fierceness of God's wrath. Great Babylon is Rome, and I wish I would reproduce the graphic and telling picture which our apocalyptic interpreter gave, with a sort of enthusiastic joy, of the way in which, under his seventh vial dispensation, God has been calling her in remembrance, and pressing the wine of his wrath to her lips. Revelation tells us that "the great city was divided into three parts." Dr. Cumming indicates how, as is written, it came to pass. When His Holiness held his last council to make himself equal with God that tri-partition occurred. In the first place, there were those who were in favor of the dogma of infallibility; then those who were opposed to it; and then those who were undecided; ex ctly three parts. "A great voice came out of the temple of heaven." That also was literally fulfilled, and on this wise: After the majority vote declared him infallible, the Pope had a grand throne erected in front of the eastern window in St. Peter's and arrayed himself in perfect blaze of precious stones, surrounded himself with cardinals and patriarchs and bishops in gorgeous apparel for a magnificent spectacular scene. The great decree of infallibility was to be read. He had chosen the early morning hour and the eastern window that the rising sun should flash its beams full upon his magnificence, and by his diamonds, rubies, emeralds, be so refracted and reflected that he should appear to be not a man, but what the the decree proclaimed him, one having all the glory of God. In all this fullness of splendor, with his illustrious dignitaries about him, and a vast throng assembled to witness the pageant, the Pope posed himself at an early hour before the eastern window, and awaited the essential effulgence of the great king of day. But the great king did not appear. the sun refused to rise or shine. The dismal dawn darkened rapidly to a deeper and deeper gloom. The dazzle of glory could not be produced. The aged eyes of the would be God could not see to read by daylight, and had to send for a candle. Candlelight strained his nerves of vision too much, and he handed the reading over to a cardinal. The cardinal began to read amid an ever blackening gloom, but had not read many lines before such a glare of lurid fire, and such a crash burst forth from the inky heavens as never was equalled at Rome before. Terror fell upon all. The reading ceased. One cardinal jumped trembling from his chair, and exclaimed, "It is the voice of God speaking the thunders of Sinai." And here was fulfilled the seventh vial saying that is written, "There came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done." Since that hour Dr. Cumming notices that he whom the Pope blesses, as Napoleon, is surely cursed; and whom he curses, as Victor Emanuel, is surely blessed. The Papacy is done.

Seldom, or never have I listened for an hour and a half to any one with less fatigue, or greater interest, than to this very earnest, very singular-minded man. He is a study most unique. This skeleton and substance of what he said was wonderfully padded with wit, with pathos, with the most genuine religious strength and beauty. He is the last man in the world for whom any man should feel contempt, or desire to turn into ridicule. However we may regard the theory upon which he strings all events, past, present and to come, the man is as true as St. Paul, as Dr. Hopkins, as Theodore Parker himself. He as thoroughly believes that he has the clue to the mystery of the human world, the way of God therein, and clings to it with an equal fidelity. It is fidelity, rather than that to which the individual is conscientiously committed, which we must chiefly regard. Infidelity is the only contemptible and unpardonable thing. My excellent brother Crosskey, of Birmington, has just well said and published to the world, that "the skeptic will be saved by faithfulness to his skepticism, as the believer to his belief." It is a principle which works both ways; and we must say of men like Dr. Cumming that "the credulous man will be, yes, is, saved by faithfulness to his credulity, however great or seemingly absurd it may be. God tries the heart, not the lumber or the emptiness of the head."

In conclusion, Dr Cumming gave us to understand that all things are going forward just as they were ordained to go; as God inspired his servant John to foretell that they would go so as long since as at Patmos. He also expressed his personal conviction that the "large majority of mankind would be saved;" that though infants die by their relation to the first Adam, they are invariably redeemed by their relation to the second Adam, even though they be the offspring of Turks, Jews, Socinians or Papists; though baptised or unbaptised. He also thinks that now, after the outpouring of the seventh vial, and the effectual doing of Great Babylon, and a certain season of great demoralization of all people, during which wars unprecedented will ravage the earth, and the chief cities of the nation will fall—the Sun of Righteousness will arise in heavenly splendor, and a true day of God begin.

Thus, this famous tribulationist is quite an optimist after all, and sees the kingdom of heaven nearer at hand, and with far greater distinctness than some of us who see, along with the dying out of old traditions and end of religious vista, an end, and nothing but a cold, utter, outer darkness beyond. Blessed is he whose vision can pierce through earth's blackest clouds, and who all the night holds firmly to the sure coming of God's sweetest light.

ABROAD.

* * * The town of Antioch, in Asia Minor, of historic memory, is now a heap of ruins from the effect of earthquake-shocks. News came sometime ago of its partial overthrow, but a continuance of the shocks has completed its destruction. The soil in the vicinity is reported as still quivering with volcanic movements, and the people are afraid to approach the site to take care of and remove the unburied dead.

* * * Under the present government of France, trade is reviving, business of all kinds is growing more active, money is abundant, in spite of the heavy taxes, and circulates freely. There is a general disposition among the French people to permit, for the present, the existing rule to continue. In fact, they recognize the necessity of it, and know that they cannot afford to risk a change. But it is conceded that sooner or later there must be a change. Thiers is virtually an autocrat. The nation dares not trust itself without his guidance. The Assembly has more than once crossed his wishes, but the threats of his resignation have brought it again and again at his feet. The career of this man is a remarkable one. The son of a blacksmith who worked his way to a prominent place in journalism, then into politics, now finds himself as the only man to whom his nation instinctively looks for support in its weakened condition. Underneath this there is an unmistakable feeling that the present state of affairs cannot continue. The death of Thiers, now a very old man, would throw France into anarchy, as far as the Assembly itself is concerned. What the future of France may be it is difficult to conjecture. With her large peasantry, rich soil, her sources of self support, her feeling of nationality, she can not be otherwise than a powerful nation. Just now the government is turning its whole attention to freeing the country from foreign occupation, paying off the war idemnity and meanwhile nursing a standing army in view of future difficulty. The events that are to come are necessarily matters of curiosity, expectation and doubt.

If you have anything which you know to be good, advertise it thoroughly, and you will be sure to succeed; if it is poor, don't praise it, for people will soon discover you are lying.

Such is the policy of the Burlington Route, which runs to three great regions in the West: 1st, to Omaha, connecting with the great Pacific Roads. 2d, To Lincoln, the capital of Nebraska, and all that beautiful region south of the Platte, filled with R. The roads are splendidly built, have the best bridges, finest cars, the Miller platform and coupler, and the safety air brake (to prevent the loss of life that is everywhere else happening); Pullman's sleepers, Pullman dining cars, large and powerful engines (to make quick time and good connections), and are in a word the best equipped roads in the West. E. H. WHEELER'S

IMPROVED

AXLE & THIMBLE SKEIN

PATENTED JAN. 12, 1872.

THE LIGHTEST, STRONGEST, AND BEST AXLE BEFORE THE PUBLIC.

Less liable to break, and cannot spring under any amount of weight that can be put upon it.

It takes a smaller sized axle and bolster or sand-board than the same sized skeins of common style; is more simple and easier to fit, the skein being of uniform taper, without shoulders upon the inside a better fit is secured. The axle can be turned in a common lathe to fit the thimble, by putting one end out of center.

The arm, or spindle, is so made as to secure the proper set of the wheels, when moderately dished, with the bottom line of the spindle on a parallel line to the bottom of the axle, an important principle never before attained. The set of the wheels is a perpendicular or right angle to the bottom line of the axle upon the face of the spokes, upon their lower half.

This cut shows the thimble and lug for the tension rod across the bottom of the axle, from thimble to thimble, and the socket for the bolster, or the sand board, as the case may be. I also use a sand guard to keep the dirt out of the shoulder of the hub; but it is not shown in this cut.

RIGHTS FOR SALE.

Sample thimble skeins furnished to purchasers of rights, at actual cost. For further information address

The Christian Life.

Men are fighting about dogmas and ceremonies and modes of worship; men are ready to burn their fellow-men for differing from them in their theories of government and atonement; men will take their brethren by the throat and say, "Pay me what thou owest, or I will choke thee to death;" and yet the Sufferer, who is the grand Landmark of time toward which we are all steering, stands saying: "I gave my life for my enemies." While we were yet in our sins, Christ died for us.—Beecher.

The Social Element in Religion.

Some seem so afraid of the social element, and Christian love in the church below, that it is doubtful what they will think of heaven, and of themselves, when there. What does our Lord think of members of the same church who scarcely know or speak to each other? It looks like a kind of private excommunication. The 'I don't care far any body' air and spirit does not become any one of the redeemed "family on earth and in heaven," for his command is "see that ye love one another fervently." There is a meaning in this which some have not discovered.

"Not of Works."

A man is rowing a boat on a river, just above a dreadful cataract; the current begins to bear him downward; the spectators give him up for lost. "He is gone," they exclaim; but in another moment a rope is thrown toward the wretched man—it strikes the water near the boat: now how does the case stand? Do all the spectators call upon him to row? to try harder to reach the shore? when with every stroke of his arm the boat is evidently nearing the falls? O no! give up your desperate attempt; take hold of the rope! But he choses to row, and in a few moments he disappears and perishes. All his hope lay, not in rowing, but in laying hold of the rope; for while he was rowing he could not grasp the rope. So the sinner's hope lies not in struggling to save himself, but in ceasing to struggle; for while he expects to accomplish the work of salvation himself, he will not look to Christ to do it for him.

Our Own Errors.

I can't bring myself to like the man who will not own a fault. If we had to reason ourselves into the duty of doing so, there might be a shadow of defence, but the heart is a sound theologian in such matters, and summarily dismisses all pleas for the refusal. We cannot hoodwink or talk over conscience, No side issues, veils, special pleadings, or equivocations avail us. We never can persuade ourselves that it is right, after doing wrong, to stick to it. It is one of the hardest things to put ourselves in the wrong, and yet there are times when self-accusation becomes epidemic. A great public danger or calamity fills the churches for a time, and melts all but the hardest. An earnest preacher, in special cases, sends a thrill of penitence through multitudes, as in the revival services of different dates, or under such a ministry as that of Whitfield. Great numbers forget their timidity, discard their self-justifications, and confess their sins, like the crowds round John at Jordan, or round Peter at Pentecost. God often uses such agencies for lasting good, but they are to be watched carefully. Excitement may pass into abiding conviction; it often does; but it is too often only a splash on the top, when the tide all the time runs the other way.—Quiver.

"Remind Me of the King."

La Fontaine, chaplain of the Prussian army, once preached a very earnest and eloquent sermon on the sin and folly of yielding to a hasty temper. The next day he was accosted by a major of the regiment with the words:—

"Well, sir! I think you made use of the prerogatives of your office to give me some very sharp hits, yesterday."

"I certainly thought of you while I was preparing the sermon," was the answer; "but I had no intention of being either personal or sharp."

"Well, it is of no use," said the major, "I have a hasty temper, and I cannot control it. It is impossible."

And still adhering to this opinion, after some further conversation he went his way.

The next Sabbath La Fontaine preached upon self-deception, and the vain excuses which men are wont to make. "Why," said he, "a man will declare that it is impossible for him to control his temper, when he very well knows that were the same provocation to happen in the presence of his sovereign, he not only could but would control himself entirely. And yet he dares to say that the continual presence of the King of kings and Lord of lords imposes upon him neither restraint nor fear!"

The next day, his friend, the major, again accosted him:

"You were right yesterday chaplain," he said humbly. "Hereafter, whenever you see me failing, remind me of the king!"—Good News.

Love, like light, transfigures what it looks upon. It has its own perspective, softening and blending rough outlines, and its own matchless colors to hide, or to adorn. To awaken, and glorify this dormant faculty—to bring us to the creative power that can look upon the chaotic world, and behold it fair again, and pronounce it "good"—that can look upon the sick, the prisoner, the deformed, the vulgar, the hateful, and find them transformed as we look, and precious to our desire—for this Christ came "without form or comeliness."

Faith makes men "seers"—it is the "vision of the invisible," the "evidence of things not seen." But love is the faith of the affections; no longer a habit only, but changed to an instinct —a nature; not timorous, or slow; but glad, and free. Faith forges the link that binds us to Christ; the fires of love hardens it to steel. Faith believes Christ true: Love sees him beautiful; the one brings safety, the other power; the one saves us, the other impels us to save others.—Jesse B. Thomas, in Chicago Pulpit.

Christ's Coming and Reign.

OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

Objection. This is not our first and natural thought about the future.

Reply. What right has one to have a first and natural thought? Must not God have a thought before we have one? What can we know of the future in any way, except as we are taught by the word of revelation; and is it not written that God's thoughts are not our thoughts, neither are his ways our ways?

Objection. The church is the pillar and ground of the truth. Is not the truth mighty, and will it not prevail? May we not hope then to see a millennium brought in by the universal dissemination of the truth?

Reply. It is the doctrine of the devil, that men by knowledge shall become as gods. It is the delusion of humanity that speculative knowledge will save the world. Against this stands Satan himself, all history, and the word of God. Satan stands against his own doctrine; for surely Satan's attainments in knowledge of every sort surpass those of any savant or school of savants upon earth, and yet he remains a liar and the prince of darkness still. All history stands against the doctrine; for what shall we say of places once thoroughly evangelized? What of the seven Asian churches? What of Geneva? What of Rome itself? Is it not true that the spiritual church of Jesus Christ has wended her way across the continents more like a forlorn pilgrim than like a conqueror moving on to fields of fresher glory? Is it not true that as the elect have been gathered, the candlesticks have been carried forward, and that darkness, gross darkness, has closed in upon the gospel's radiant track?

Objection. This doctrine destroys earnestness.

Reply. It destroys the energy of self-will, but not earnestness; besides, earnestness is not necessarily the activity of the new creature; a man may be as earnest as Saul of Tarsus was when he "made havoc of the church;" or as the Jews were when the went about "to establish their own righteousness," and yet be as unsaved as they. The fact is, that the more of a certain kind of religion men have, the worse it is for them.

The Scripture tells us "to occupy" till Jesus comes. It tells us that he wh[illegible] says in his heart, My Lord de[illegible] his coming, and makes this an [illegible] for slothfulness and wanton [illegible] is a wicked servant, and that he [illegible] be cut asunder, and have his portion appointed with the hypocrites." [illegible] tells us, "that it is required [illegible]rds that a man be found faith[illegible] says also, "Behold, I come [illegible]: and my reward is with me to [illegible] to every man according as his [illegible] shall be."

[illegible] will not answer to affirm that this [illegible]trine dampens earnestness so long as men are surrounded by living witnesses, that this is not the case.

Objection. It is not a practical doctrine.

Reply. It is impossible to judge of a doctrine until men have heartily received it and felt its power. There are those who would tell us that the doctrine of election is not practical, and that the doctrine of justification without works of the law is licentious. The truth is, as may be proved by innumerable citations, that the doctrine of our Lord's immediate appearing is the grand instrument in apostolic hands of awakening and urging sluggish Christians to practical holiness of life. "Every man that hath this hope in him," says John, "purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

Objection. Death is the coming of the Lord.

Reply. To make death the coming, is to make our going to Christ identical with his return "in like manner as he went away," which is absurd.

To make death the coming is to make Christ the death instead of the life and resurrection.

If death be the coming, then when Jesus said of John, "If I will that he tarry till I come," why did the disciples understand it just the other way, namely, that John was not to die?

Objection. Christ said that his kingdom was not of this world; that is, his kingdom should not be worldly, it should have nothing to do with earth.

Reply. It is also written in the Revelation, "And the seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign." It is written again in the Revelation, "Thou hast made us kings, and we shall reign over the earth."

Our Savior, in the same passage, adds an explanation, "If my kingdom were of this world," that is, if it were a kingdom having a like origin, and belonging to the same class and order with the world-systems, "then would my servants fight." But now, during the present dispensation, while the kosmos or external and visible order of things remains unchanged, I as a king, have nothing to do with it. I am the rival of no Cæsar, my kingdom is not of this world.

We are expressly taught in Heb. ch. 2, that the "habitable world to come," is to be put in subjection unto Jesus, and that although "we see not yet all things put under him," we have, in his resurrection and exaltation, the pledge of it—the perfect literal fulfillment of the 8th Psalm, "Thou hast put all things under his feet: all sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field; the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas."

It is for an introduction into his liberty consequent upon the glorious manifestations of the sons of God that, we are told, creation waits and groans.

Objection. Our Savior says that this gospel must first be preached as a witness to all nations; that is, that the world must first be evangelized.

Reply. This does not mean that the gospel must first be preached to each individual among the nations; for millions are already dead who never heard it.

What gospel is to be preached? The gospel of the kingdom.

Probably there is no nation, people, or tribe on earth which has not had, during the past eighteen centuries, full and ample opportunity not only to hear the gospel, but to witness its practical effects and power. To what extent evangelization shall be further carried, if to any, we do not know. Our duty is not measured by the divine decree, but by the imperative command, "Go preach my gospel." So long as a solitary unconverted soul remains amid the dying millions, our duty is most urgent. Each individual Christian is responsible for preaching the gospel to every creature. "Go or send!" is what God says to us in prospect of the vast uncomprehending darkness of this world. Into the darkness, some way or other, we must plunge, with the expectation never to emerge again, until the tremulous effulgence of the Morning Star which now falls upon our rapid feet shall break to actual disclosure in the quick and glorious coming of the Lord.

Objection. The whole idea of a personal coming and literal reign is a carnal one.

Reply. It cannot be questioned that in a scheme of redemption, in which the body as well as soul has been included, some things must be, in a sense, carnal; the birth of Jesus was carnal; his eating and drinking were carnal; his bloody cross was carnal; and the very flesh and bones which he claimed to have after his resurrection, and by which he was then, and is forever, distinguished from a disembodied spirit, are carnal. As carnal, no more, and thanks be to God, no less, will be his reappearing in that glorious body to whose similitude we also shall be changed.

If Christ ever comes again, he must come in the flesh; for, as has been rightly remarked, "There is no more sense in the spiritual coming of a man than there is in the bodily coming of a spirit." But if Christ is to come in the flesh, why may he not reign in it?

"Of the fruit of David's loins according to the flesh," God has sworn to raise up Christ to sit upon his throne. To say that David ever sat at the right hand of the Majesty on high, is to utter blasphemy. The true explanation, therefore, is, that the proper humanity of Jesus is yet to sit and reign where David sat and reigned. If this be carnal, then the carnality, whatever there be of it, is in God's thought, and not in ours.

The saints in resurrection bodies are to sit and reign with Jesus on his throne. Does any one interpret this, as if the saints were to share the spiritual dominion of Jehovah? As if, in participation of the attributes of Deity, men were to reign in one another's hearts? How much easier of belief is this than the doctrine that a redeeming Man surrounded by redeemed men is to exercise immediate dominion over redeemed creation?

Objection. Why not avoid all perplexity by spiritualizing the prophecies?

Reply. We cannot spiritualize them. Much which they contain has already passed into the commonplace of fact. Messiah has been born of the lineage of David and of a virgin. He has ridden into Jerusalem on an ass's colt. He has been led as a lamb to the slaughter. He has risen from the dead. All these things are as true as are any other of the ordinary events of history. Again, the dispersion and degradation of the Jew cannot be spiritualized. These are as patent as they are painful to universal observation. But the same prophecies which foretell the sufferings foretell the future glories. Unless, therefore, we are presumptuous enough to break the Scripture, we must consent to take it as it stands.

If we begin to spiritualize the Scripture—that is, to deny the real facts, events and persons described, and to translate the language to the sphere of merely personal experiences—where shall we stop? One man explains away Jerusalem; there is no such city. Another explains away Abraham; there was no such person. By and by, all is explained away. Not a bone of the skeleton of those facts on which Christianity is built—for it is built on facts —remains.

Great heresies have sprung from spiritualizing the word, that is, by denying its literal, while giving to it another and perhaps transcendental, meaning. This is the main reliance of Rationalists, Unitarians, and Spiritists. Such men twist a text like a nose of wax, and make it mean anything. On the contrary, it cannot be shown in a solitary instance since the world began, that the soul has been led astray through interpreting God in the preciseness of the ideas conveyed in his literal word. More than such a soul had hoped for may be contained in the inspired language—less than he hoped for, never.

Objection. But is every word of Scripture to be taken in its strict and literal import? When, for example, Daniel sees a he-goat coming from the west on the face of the whole earth, and having a notable horn between his eyes, are we to expect that such a goat will actually be seen hereafter? Again, when John sees a great harlot sitting upon many waters, does this indicate that such a person will hereafter be found occupying such a place?

Reply. The things referred to are expressly said to be in vision. The beast which Daniel saw is afterward explained to be "the king of Greece." And the woman of the Revelation is said to represent "Mystery, Babylon the great," &c., while the waters are interpreted as meaning "peoples, multitudes, and nations, and tongues."

We do not assert that there are no figures in the Bible. We only refuse to admit a figure unless it can be shown to be a figure. Plain language stands for plain language, unless qualification, modification, trope, or interpretation can be proved from the book itself. And, in general, our position is, that the Bible is its own interpreter; that a comparison of spiritual things with spiritual is the simple and only work of a disciple; and that the Holy Spirit, unassisted by philosophy, is competent to guide regenerated men into the knowledge of the truth. As for all others, they, of course, are ever learning and never coming to such knowledge.

Objection. The study of prophecy is connected with fanaticism.

Reply. The study of prophecy ought not to be confounded with the thought of making one's self a prophet.

No great truth has ever been earnestly vindicated without giving rise to the devil's hue and cry of "Fanaticism!" "These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also."

Each man must settle the question concerning his reputation before God. It is a poor choice to ignore God's truth in order to secure the favorable judgment of a worldly church or Christless world.

A special blessing is pronounced not only upon him who reads, but upon those who listen to, the words of prophecy. And it must never be forgotten that the "greatly beloved" Daniel and the disciple "whom Jesus loved" are in these things our divinely approved examples.—Sel.

Correspondence.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

Monday, May 13. Returned from Port Sanilac to Lexington. Visited Br. Arnot, who takes a great interest in the cause in general, and in my present visit. We talked over things that related to the best means of building up the churches, in this part of the State. Br. A. not only talks, but does: words and deeds go together, which is not always the case. After dinner we continued our journey to where Br. Mackie supplies part of the time. Here I found a large Schoolhouse crowded with anxious hearers. My subject was—What it is to be a Christian. We had a sweet and heavenly time. The people here are in sympathy with the Adventists, and give support to this kind of preaching. It was in this place Eld. Wright met five Methodist preachers in a conflict for the truth and a position here. The truth triumphed gloriously and the opposition retired in confusion. Opposers do not gain anything when they descend so low as to call the Adventists "hell-hounds of damnation," and other like names.

The responsibility of keeping up religious interest now rests chiefly upon the Adventists; and they will be held accountable. The Lord help them to do their whole duty. And in order to keep this people supplied here, and elsewhere in this wide field, we have need of more preachers. We must have more preachers. We want young men to enter the field. Who will go? Br. W. could give work and help to several young men in his circuit. Who will help him!

Eld. S. Sisco, who has the charge of the church here in the absence of Br. Mackie, their preacher, gave us a warm welcome. We also enjoyed the hospitalities of the family of Br. Barnum who is now absent, at work at Norwood Park, Ill. They are a dear Christian family, and made us welcome.

Tuesday, May 14. We took up our journey at an early hour for Marlette. On the way we called on Brn. Marin and Beals in Elk. Here, there has been a good work done. A large church was gathered, and subscriptions were raised by Br. Wright to build a chapel a year or more ago. But as he could not remain the project of building fell through. But they have a place of worship and Sabbath school and mean to live. We counseled with them, gave them words of cheer and came on to Br. Smaifield's, where we dined and reste[illegible]hile. He is a man of much int[illegible]igion a believer in the d[illegible]dvent, and is "not far [illegible]m the kingdom;" while his wife is [illegible]ne of the whole-hearted believer[illegible] the speedy coming of Christ.

This whole region of country is wild and before the desolating fires swepted through it, was heavily wooded, with the best of pine and often timber. Much of it is now a blackened desolate woods. The fires of the last year spread devastation and ruin through a large portion of the country through which we have passed to-day. But the people are energetic, and are clearing up the land, and here and there making fine homes and farms, which makes the wilderness blossom again. There is no limit to the indomitable energy of the people, God bless them! Fires, floods, and disasters in all countries develope the resources of the human mind. As in Chicago, so here, the late calamities have brought out the entire energies of the people. At Marlette we were welcomed by many old and new friends. Br. Marsh, formerly of Lapeer, greeted us warmly. He is now fully saved from the Seventh-day delusion. Here I also found Br. Richard Albertson, formerly of Kingston, and others from Ontario, who are happily settled here, in this new and wild country.

Marlette, is a village of about one hundred and fifty inhabitants who are engaged in lumbering. They largely manufacture shingles, of which they make the best in the country.

They have Presbyterian and Methodist chapels and churches, and also some Baptist people here. Br. Wright pitched the Tent last year and raised a large Advent church, who have also built a chapel, which is now finished except ceiling. It is commodious, neat and substantial, after the design of Br. Wright.

We meet in the new chapel for worship for the first time to-night. It was filled with anxious and interested hearers, to whom I spoke from Is. 44: 1–5, showing that God was the author of revivals of religion, and that in this series of meetings, our hope of doing good, preparing souls for the judgment rested on the out pouring of God's Spirit. Br. Wright followed in interesting remarks. Br. Paton of Almont, late of the Baptist church was present to help. He is heartily with us, and is doing all that his health will allow. If he can have good health to work, a wide door is open to him. God give him health and strength for the cause' sake.

Our object in this protracted meeting is to build up the church and increase their strength and numbers, and help them about their chapel. For a young church they have done nobly. Truly the Lord is with them. While we preach and maintain that we stand on the eve of the Advent, and prepare ourselves and others for that event, we believe in "occupying till Jesus comes." We do not and cannot withhold our hands from any good work. Not often allowed to enter places of worship owned by other denominations, we have to build chapels, organize churches, and attend to all the duties of life in a way that when the Master comes, he may find us industrious, and faithful in all the relations of life. And the nearer the Advent may be, the more work is to be done. Now, indeed, as never before, what our hands find to do, we should do with our might.

Cincinnati.

I write to tell the readers of the TIMES what a feast of Bible truths we have had in South Pendleton, by the coming of Br. J. V. Himes in our midst. We were favored with nine sermons, plain, clear, truthful, what we just have been hungering, thirsting, famishing for. They conveyed the Bible knowledge we needed. Our ministers have fed us on husks, but now our souls have been refreshed. Thank God that he has blessed us.

The pastors whose churches were used by the elder while here are preparing themselves to fight the enemy—now that he is gone!

Next Sunday one minister speaks on the "Soul, as a separate, conscious entity." But the truth will shine in spite of all this. And we can afford to be patient until our friends get out of the dark. We have not much to boast of. The scales only of late fell off our own eyes. But when they do get into the light of the blessed Book, may they rejoice as we do, and thank God and their Advent friends for it.

JOSIE LOWRY.

From Wm. R. Howe, Xenia, Kas.

We still love the doctrine that Christ is soon coming again, and are trying to live to be ready to meet him at his appearing, when those loved ones who have fallen asleep in Jesus will meet us again, and we shall part no more. We should be glad, so glad we should be to see some of the Advent pilgrims in these parts, and to hear the word preached as we have heard it in other days.

From John Scarce, Clermont, Mo.

Brn. Dugger and McClure came to help us last winter, and we had a good season. Four were added to the church. We are trying to walk worthy of the vocation to which we have been called "seeking for" that we have not yet obtained, "glory honor and immortality." When Jesus comes we expect to receive eternal life.

From Caroline E. Fosdick, Marshall Co. Ill.

To-day is our preaching day; but [illegible] good pastor is sick. Were it not [illegible]e TIMES we should be lonesome inde[illegible]. But we hope Br. Hoge will yet b[illegible]ble to meet his appointments again. He has been a good soldier for Christ. We can praise the Lord that a few faithful ones are left, and we live in hope of better days. But it is a trying time. Satan is trying to lead all astray. It is glorious to think Jesus will come soon, and place us where we shall be safe from all sin and evil. Safe from the persecutor. Safe from the backbiter. Safe in the eternal kingdom.

From Sr. M. G. Cook.

It is about three years since I first heard an Adventist preacher. I overcame prejudice enough to attend church and if I ever listened with attention I did at that time, trying to find something that was not in the good word of God. I have listened to many Advent sermons since, and by careful study of the scriptures am led to believe it is the true light. And why it is that so many eyes are blinded I know not. The Bible has become a new book to me; and it gives me much joy to read THE TIMES. I pray daily that I may be ready and waiting when Jesus comes.

From E. H. Wheeler.

I recently had a controversy with a minister, who said the devil told Eve the truth in the garden, and that it was not possible for God to so organize matter as to produce mind. That mind had always existed, and would continue to exist forever; and was not dependent upon the body for the exercise of its powers. What nonsense men will believe, and not only believe, but preach as the truth; and at the same time denounce others as "worse than atheists," if they call their vain imaginings in question, or dare to assert with Paul that "man is of the earth earthy."

From A. Fadden, Sibley Co. Minn.

It is with us as it is with many in other parts: truly "the harvest is great and laborers are few." All we need is some good reaper to thrust in the sickle, and the grain would be gathered in. There are some fourteen Adventists in the neighborhood. Could not you come and help us.

[We wish we could, but it is impossible for us to do so at present. ED.

From S. Baldwin, Wayne Co. Iowa.

There is a great interest in the doctrine of the Advent all over this country. I am, as it were all alone to go from place to place, and tell the people as best I can that Jesus loves them, and how he longs to save them; and, besides that he will soon come to see us personally, and heal forever all sickness and sorrow in our heavenly Father's family. And he will not only come, but will stay with us. But I am one of the little ones and can do but little. Pray for me.

From W. J. Custar, Gallia Co. O.

The little band at Chambersburg are still striving to be faithful. A few, it is true seem indifferent, but we are praying for revival in our midst, that the church may be built up, and many others be brought to a saving kowledge of the truth.

Through the instrumentality of the TIMES and the labors of Br. Fletcher, I have become fully established in the doctrine of the speedy coming of Jesus: that instead of going off to heaven at death, we fall asleep in Jesus; our life being hid with Christ in God, to be received by us at his coming. And, thank God, I am rid of the idea that the Bible teaches eternal torments for any class. The question is simply, Life or death? not Misery or happiness.

From T. J. Morgan, Brond Co, Ill.

Brethren and sisters one and all be faithful. Now is our time to do our work. The night cometh when no man can work. Yet a little while and he that shall come, will come and will not tarry. Then God's will shall be done in earth as it is done in heaven. Let us show ourselves faithful in every good work. Showing by our lives that we are children of God. How thankful I am that I was ever brought to knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. I am trying to spread it wide in this region. Some say they are reading their Bibles more than ever before in their lives. Others ridicule us. But we can bear this burden and rejoice that we are counted worthy thus to suffer.

From M. E. Osterhout.

With a heart full of love and gratitude to our heavenly Father, I take my pen. I read of Br. Marston's success, in his visit to Elida, Ill. My heart rejoices in that success. I have some very dear friends there, for whom I have prayed earnestly that they might be brought to the truth. I tried to explain our glorious advent faith to them and was rewarded by hearing them profess their faith in it. And now Br. Marston and others have been there, awakening the sleeping ones. Praise the Lord for his goodness. I hope they will not let the fire die out, but continue to sow the good seed, and I have faith to believe that they will reap a golden harvest in the end.

Elida is but six miles from Byron, where you sent me those tracts. I have loved ones sleeping there, and my interests are there and it is my desire that some one may visit that place to proclaim the glad news to them.

From A Sister, Hennepin Co. Minn.

Through reading the TIMES I have been led to embrace the Adventist faith, and I thank God my eyes have been opened to believe the truth as it is in Jesus. I was formerly a Baptist, in Illinois, but had not united with them. The nearest Advent church is twenty miles away, and I am seldom able to attend, which makes the paper and its letters from brethren and sisters more precious to me.

Brethren and sisters who meet around the table of the Lord, my heart is sad that I have been detained from the privilege so long. When I read of our Editor meeting with families in their log cabins, and having communion seasons there, I think I should love to have one of them in mine. Pray for me that I may be submissive and reconciled to all the righteous will of God.

From Sarah C. Conner, Forest Bay, Mich.

I praise the Lord for his answers to prayer. He has proved himself my best friend: and he is a friend to all that trust in him. But how few have any faith in the teachings of his word. And of those who profess to believe it, how few will take it as it reads. Tell them Jesus, the same Jesus, is coming again, and they will tell you he comes whenever a man dies. Tell them that the goodness of God leads men to repentance; and, as a lady told me recently, they will say—"If she believed the wicked would be burned up, and that would be an end of her, she should not fear God half as much as now, nor care what she did." No such motive moved me. For years I led a life of folly, supposing it the happiest life one could live: but I have learned a more excellent way. It is to live for Jesus, and spend my time in his service. Pray for the little band here that we may be found watching and waiting when Jesus appears.

From C. E. Blackman.

The papers are all the preaching we have here in Nebraska, and we appreciate their weekly visits very much. Husband and I are alone in regard to the precious truths we love so well. We are doing what we can by lending Whitmore's work, and scattering papers and tracts, to sow the seed and prepare the minds of the people to receive the truth, if in the providence of God one of his servants should come this way. We felt very sad to hear of the death of Br. Edwin. He was, we believe, a true and faithful servant of God, and that it can truly be said of him, He has done what he could, and like the faithful sentinel, has fallen at his post. We believe the time is soon coming when we shall meet the good of all ages, in that blessed world of light and glory, where the inhabitants never will say they are sick. Pray for us that we prove faithful, and have our lamps trimmed and burning, with oil in our vessels, when Jesus comes.

From Thomas Church.

The Adventist preachers and publications are doing a noble work in the spread of the gospel. In the little village of Bethlehem are several churches. One tells us that the kingdom of God was established in the days of John the Baptist. Another that Christ's kingdom is the church, but was set up at Pentecost. And another tells us the kingdom of God is in the heart. But the doctrine of the kingdom to come, and nigh at hand, even at the door, though so precious and Scriptural a truth, is but little thought of. But we have still an interest in the Lord's prayer, and cry "Thy Kingdom come," which our brethren, to be consistent, should cease to do so. If the kingdom has come, it is of no use to pray for it to come. There are but few Adventists here, and the paper is our chief preacher.

From J. G. Baughman, Rockbridge, Ohio.

The seed sown by Br. A. E. Babcock, is still springing up and bearing fruit in this region. God is honoring the efforts of his people in the good work of love. I have the honor of being a member of the humble band of believers. When I reflect from whence I came, and how much God's people have been interested in me, so great a sinner, I cannot but feel grateful for the way I have been led. I have consecrated all to God and his church.

"For her my tears shall fall:
For her my prayers ascend."

"His people shall be my people; their God shall be my God." If I have one talent it shall be devoted to the promulgation of God's truth. Doors are opening on every hand for its reception, and the Lord being my helper I'll proclaim it until Jesus comes.

A brother writes:

I write at your request to write if we have nothing to send but a kind word. I have not the money to pay for THE TIMES at present, for which I am sorry. Myself and wife, and some of our neighbors esteem the paper very highly, on account of the truths we find in it. I was a soldier in the late war, and received a wound that has disabled me ever since from hard labor; hence I get little money to purchase the paper or tracts, and books I should like to read. THE TIMES is all the paper I get. Sometimes I think you had better stop it until I can pay; and then what a loss it would be to miss our kind paper, with its word of comfort and Bible explanation every week. So I can only say, do as seems best to you.

From J. C. Smith, Arvonia, Kas.

For six weeks now as I have been able, I have been laboring from place to place, as the Lord directed, and to his glory I trust. Many doors have opened before me, far more than I can enter. Many denonominations come to hear the word, and are becoming interested. Some are willing to acknowledge the truth. Others are shy, and talk among themselves, not accepting the Bible truth relative to the resurrection of the dead, kingdom of God, etc.

The people are very anxious to hear something besides sophistry, and vain philosophy. This State demands more workers. Br. Munson is the only man that I have heard from who is publishing the Bible hope in Kansas. Thus you see the cause demands more helpers.

The Lord has blessed my efforts in spreading his truth. Many have decided to live different lives, and seek an interest in the kingdom of God.

At our place more than forty arose desiring to be remembered in the kingdom. Last Sunday Br. Gardiner went forward in baptism, and as he came out of the water, his wife received him with a kiss, and led him up from the shore. Others are to go forward next Sunday, the Lord willing. Oh! that many would engage in this blessed work of saving men.

I trust the cause in Kansas will be remembered by all the the praying children of the East and West. We would be glad to hear from you, and see you here in Kansas. The Lord bless you in the work of publishing the gospel.

[We are glad that Br. Smith, who came West in feeble health, is now able to labor in the gospel vineyard. The Lord bless him.

A New Letter Tract.

We have just prepared a new letter tract, designed for Business Men and others, for short communications. Three pages contain, in print, Prof. Ives' tersely written tract—Scripture versus Popular Misconceptions.

One page is ruled, commercial note size. It is on fine paper, nicely printed, and will be a quiet but most effective way of introducing Bible doctrine.

On orders of not less than one Ream (480 sheets), we will print the writer's name and address at the head of the ruled page. $5 a ream, postal or express charges pre-paid. Without the printed name and P. O. address, $4 a ream; $3 for a half ream; $1.35 for quarter ream; 35 sheets, 50c.

A NOBLE MONUMENT.—There are few who realize the wealth of information contained in the later editions of Webster's dictionary. Its cuts, each worth a page of description, its dictionary of noted names of fiction, familiarity with which is as indispensable to a man of any pretentions to cultivation as a knowledge of history, and its numberless other advantages, conspire to mark it to-day as the noblest monument to patient literary labor and enterprise of this age, if not of any. To possess and habitually use it, will alone almost compensate for the want of a liberal education.—Missouri Journal of Education.

ANSWERS TO PRAYER; or Dorothea Trudel. Henry Hoyt, 9 Cornhill, Boston, Mass. [The publisher failed to inform us of the price—a common fault in forwarding books for review.]

Our readers who have heard of the story of Dorothea Trudel, will be glad to learn that it is now published in this country. The record of the results of faith in her case is marvelous in this age of faithlessness. Yet her experience proves that God is the same in every age. Wherever the conditions exist for the work of faith, the results will follow. Some will read the book with scoffing incredulity; others will feel their trust in God strengthened, and be led to indulge their hope in him more freely than ever before.

We will fill orders for $1—the probable price of the volume.

A MANUAL OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. By John S Hart, L. L. D. Eldredge & Bro., 17 No. 7th Street, Philadelphia. [Publishers omitted to inform us of the price.]

This work is a sort of Dictionary of English Authors from the earliest times to the present century. Date of death and birth of each, and a list of their works are given, with other matters of interest. The authors are also classified as Poets, Historians, Theologians, etc. In this volume Dr. Hart has embodied the matured fruits of his studies in this department of letters. In the comprehensiveness of its plan, the freshness of much of the materials, the sound judgment shown in its critical opinions, the clearness with which the several topics are presented, and the beauty as well as the convenience of its mechanical execution, we think places this work in advance of any other text-book on the subject.

THE AMERICAN TUNE BOOK. A complete collection of the tunes which are widely known in America, with the most popular Anthems and Set Pieces, preceded by a new course of instruction for singing schools. By Dr Lowell Mason. The Tunes and Anthems selected from all sources, by five hundred teachers and choir leaders.

Specimen copies mailed to any address for $1.50. $13.50 a dozen. Boston: Oliver Ditson & Co. 277 Washington St.

This is the title page of a new Tune Book. The editing of Lowell Mason, and the imprimatur of Oliver Ditson & Co., are as high commendation as any singer could ask. We feel safe in commending the collection. Remember this is a collection of tried and proved tunes—old favorites scattered through a dozen or more books, but here gathered into one.

MAN NOT IMMORTAL. We have not intentionally omitted to notice this work. It was received just before our removal, and mislaid. We have conned its pages with interest. If N. D. George did not believe in the annihilation theory before, he should accept it now; for Br. Thorne has annihilated both his theory and his reasoning. We dare say, however, Mr. George will be like the Irishman's turtle, that was "dead, but not sensible of it." Immaterialist prejudices are above all other prejudices so blinding, that its victims seem incapable of appreciating logic. Confuted and refuted, they press on urging the same stock arguments, ignoring logical objections in a manner that can but excite our special wonder.

Published by the author, Leonard C. Thorne, Editor of the Herald of Life.

CHRISTIANITY DEFENDED. Col. R. G. Ingersoll's attack upon revealed religion received more attention than it really deserved, from the fact that a sketch of it, doubtless paid for by the speaker, was telegraphed to the daily press of the country. We have received a vigorous review of the Colonel's oration, with the above title, from the pen of Eld. Clark Braden, who is now located near Peoria, which is the Colonel's home. Br. Braden deals vigorously with the subject, and does as well, perhaps, as any immaterialist could do. But we cannot help thinking that it is a school of interpreters that have led just such men as Ingersoll to reject the Bible. Perhaps nine times in ten it will be found that the infidel's objection to the Bible is founded not upon the sacred text, but some exposition of it: not upon what is really in the Bible, but on what he supposes to be there. However many of Br. Braden's points are excellently taken and put with pertinence and force that go far to justify the title of "their leading debater," given him by the Disciple church.

The pamphlet can be obtained of Eld. Braden, at Illiopolis, Ill.

Obituary.

THOMSON.—At Arena, Wis., after an illness of a few days, of inflammation of the lungs, Mary Ann, wife of Eld. Geo. Thomson: aged 40 years, 1 month and 6 days.

She gave her heart to the Lord in early life, and was for many years a consistent member of the Methodist church, until she heard the blessed truth of the soon-coming of Jesus to give life and immortality to the obedient, in that ever-memorable campaign of Br. Grant, in Montreal. She became a firm believer in those precious truths which are so dear to every Christian heart, and her hope was centered in the coming of Jesus and the resurrection.

She fell asleep in the spring time,
Calmly on Jesus' breast,
And she carried its * tokens with her
Down to her bed of rest.
But she will not sleep forever,
Because the Savior has said
He will call aloud in the morning,
And awaken the sainted dead.

Oh! that waking will be blessed,
When eternity's spring time comes;
She'll awake in the likeness of Jesus,
And be greeted by holy ones.
Then we'll patiently wait his coming,
The "little while" soon is past,
We shall see her again in the morning,
And greet her, immortal at last.

BARRICK.—In Fulton Co., Ind., April 26, 1872, Sr. Sevenia Barrick: aged 26 years, 1 month and 19 days.

Sr. Barrick enjoyed the blessed hope of being with Jesus in the paradise of God when death shall have been destroyed. She leaves a companion and little daughter to mourn.

Words of comfort were spoken by Br. E. C. Andrus, from Jno. 11:21. I. E. ANDRUS.

Michigan Conference.

I shall send out Blank Reports to each of the churches and ministers soon. Will all interested please fill them immediately after May 31, and return to me at Jackson at once, that I may have my report ready at the campmeeting. Do not delay, or think it will do just as well to bring it with you.

Indiana Tent.

Brethren in Northern Indiana who have subscribed towards this enterprise are notified that the money is needed as the canvass is already out. Those who have not subscribed are notified that their assistance is needed. Shall we not manifest a zeal worthy of the cause in which we have engaged? E. C. ANDRUS.

To the Brethren.

I am engaged in preparing a work, designed especially for the ministry, on the importance and necessity of preaching the second coming of Christ, as an event nigh at hand. My object is, in cooperation with the brethren, to have a copy placed in the hands of every minister of the gospel in the United States. All can see the importance of such an enterprise. If one only out of five hundred could be induced to give the trumpet a certain sound, it would pay for the labor and outlay. Of course, it will not be expected that those for whom the work is designed, will purchase it. This will be the work of our brethren all over the country to see that a copy is placed in the hands of every preacher of the gospel.

I propose then to request pledges and subscriptions from the brethren, in order to secure its publication, the amount subscribed to be repaid in books, if required. The nature of the work may be gleaned from the following outline:

The Christian minister—a watchman; the duties of a watchman; Watchman, what of the night? The time of the end; Signs of the times—Fulfillment of Prophecy; Prophecy in relation to the First Advent; Prophecy in relation to the Second Advent; Signs of the Second Advent, Celestial, Terrestial, Moral, National. The Papacy, Spiritism, Time, Tarrying Time, etc., etc.

I would also state that the work will be useful to all for reference, as it will be largely interspersed with Scripture quotations. Any who may feel disposed to aid in this enterprise, may address Miles Grant or G. T. Adams, Crisis office, Boston, Mass.; J. V. Himes, TIMES office, Chicago, Ill.; or myself at Arena, Wis.

GEO. W. MILLER, Evangelist.

In accordance with a vote of our State Conference a State Campmeeting will be held in the beautiful grove called "Cheatham's Grove," in Utica, Winona Co., commencing Thursday, June 27, and holding over the ensuing Sunday, and as much longer as deemed practicable. The ground is well fitted up for meetings, with permanent stands and seats; also a good well of water and other conveniences for those wishing to camp on the ground.

Brethren and sisters of the Advent faith throughout Minnesota, to you a special appeal is made to come out to this feast of tabernacles and work for God. Come from every quarter; come with hearts burning with the love of God, to work for the salvation of perishing souls. The signs portend the speedy coming of the Master. Shall we not improve these general gatherings, as God requires us to do, to his glory, to our own growth in grace, and for the salvation of others?

Come Christians of every name, and unite with us in the worship of God for a few days in the tented grove.

Brethren and sisters in the ministry, all who can come, at home or abroad, you are invited to come and help sound the glorious message of a soon-coming King. Come endued with power from on high, with an unction from the holy One; with words that burn, that will reach the hearts of the perishing.

The brethren that enjoyed our last Q. M. at Elkport will only need to know when the next one will be held to insure their attendance, for we all love good things, and such a feast will but sharpen the appetite for more of the same kind.

To those that were not there, we we wish to say, important business will come before this Conference, and we wish all the lovers of Jesus to be there. Come to work for God and his cause. Come filled with the Spirit, praying that God will give us souls for our hire. This is a new field, all ripe for the harvest.

The Iowa Christian Mission Campmeeting will be held on the old camp ground at New Hartford, Buttes Co., commencing June 13 and continuing until the 23d. The invitation is to all. We are anticipating a great blessing from the Lord. The prospect is better than last year for having a good meeting. Our grounds will be better fitted up. There will be wood, hay, and straw, and lumber for tent frames found on the grounds. There will also be a grocery upon the ground where all things necessary for the comfort of the people can be bought at reasonable rates. The profits accruing will go to bear the expenses of the meeting.

We are hoping to secure the labors of ministers from abroad (Particulars hereafter.) Elds. C. C. Ramsay and R. M. Thomas will be present, with many others, to preach the word.

NEW YORK.

"If the Lord will" the New-York A. C. Conferance will hold its next Annual Meeting in the new chapel in Springwater, about 30 miles south of Rochester, on the Genesee Valley R. R. Thursday eve. June 13, and over Lord's day.

Good homes and ample accommodations will be provided for all that come; and all are invited.

It is expected that all the churches desiring to further the general interests of the cause will be represented at this annual gathering. Delinquent and new churches are earnestly urged to co-operate with the body, and they are hereby cordially invited to seats (by delegate) in the convention. For their information it should be stated here that each church, belonging to the Conference Association, is required, by the constitution, to report either by delegate or by letter at least at each annual session; and, also, requested to send in, quarterly, such donations as they may be able to collect, for the General Mission Fund.

This is an important meeting and should be remembered in the earnest prayers of the church.

Persons going from or through Rochester to the Annual Meeting of the New York State Conference at Springwater, can procure R. R. tickets at reduced rates, good from the 12th to the 19th of June. Inquire at the Erie Railway office for tickets to "Adventist Conference, Springwater." J. M. WHITMORE.

At our Annual Conference June 13, we are expecting a large gathering. Let us all come together to worship God, and not to visit and feast. We shall not expect, nor wish, but two meals a day—Let the friends in the vicinity of the meeting bring in baskets of provision, so that if any one wants a lunch at noon they can get it at the church, and by so doing ease up a little on the friends in the Valley. "Bear one an others burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." Let every church be well represented by delegates, do not forget the Quarterly Collection.

Warleigh's Demonstration.

[Fourth Article.]

Our correspondent continues his forcible extracts from the Rev. Henry Smith Warleigh's works, as follows:

What is the difference then between man and the brute? we have seen it is not in the soul. Nor is it that a dumb animal has nothing corresponding to what we call mind. Let any one attentively observe their doings, and he will perceive a considerable amount of what we call reasoning and deduction in ourselves. Let him ride a restive horse, and he will have to contend with a most determined will. As to affection, everybody knows the attachment of dumb animals. Let him read Lord Brougham's volume, Conversations on Instinct and he will see that the actions and doings of dumb animals are the results of God's immediate teaching. In fact where there is life of any kind, or intelligence, there is the Great Spirit. The intelligence of dumb animals is from the Spirit. Solomon, as we have seen, does not hesitate to attribute to them the same spirit (ruach) as to man—"They have all one spirit." They have also what in us is conscience; they clearly know when they have done what we have taught them is wrong. Nor can we mistake as to their memory. Are there then no differances? Yes, verily, many and great; and they deserve carefully to be considered. [Then the author goes on to speak of man's form, great physical and intellectual and emotional endowments, etc. —contradistinguishing him from the brute by a vast precedence.] (pp. 98–9.)

And now we beg to ask our opponents not to misrepresent our doctrine and our arguments, nor to call us bad names; but to do one of two things: either to grapple with our text and arguments, and overthrow them on Scriptural grounds; or, if they cannot do this, then to receive the truth and teach it to others. This is the only consistent, staight-forward, English, Christian course. To charge, not individuals, but the general body of Bible teachers, with bearing false witness against the revealed character of God, with hindering the salvation of man; with advancing the kingdom of the wicked one. They must have done all this in ignorance; but this need exist no longer. We lay before them a demonstration of God's truth and a vindication of his character. We do this whether they will hear or forbear. They are answerable if they shut their eyes and stop their ears. If they will impartially examine and honestly refute this humble offering for their good, or failing this, will believe what the Bible reveals—to God be the praise. But if they pursue their old courses, we arraign them at the bar of humanity, and will leave them to answer at the bar of God. The infinite interests at stake require plain dealing. Great error has never been subdued with a sword without point and edge, in a velvet sheath. (p. 103.)

To our brethren of the laity we say, that we are aware that they less dread credulity than scepticism. Let them dread both. There is not a grain of either in this pamphlet. Everything said is grounded upon the Word of God.

Besides taking away the rubbish which has been thrown upon it, we have done little more than give it an opportunity of speaking for itself. Let no one hesitate to believe what it affirms, even though he may have to give up much of what he has always been taught as the truth. To believe the simple Bible, is the true faith. To add anything to it, or to make it square with man's tradition, is Pharisaism and infidelity. Many fear that if they receive the doctrine here advocated, they would fall into a portion of infidelity; whereas, the truth is, they fall into it by rejecting this doctrine. Let them consider that our teaching is founded on the literal, lexical, grammatical interpretation of its revealed contents, without any of the usual squaring of texts. Our views show the Bible to be both in real and apparent harmony, and not requiring six folio-volumed commentaries, professedly to elucidate it, but really obscuring it. (p. 104.)

And what is it for which we contend, and to which so much opposition is given? Is it anything which can be thought discreditable to God? anything harmful to man? anything perilous to his interest? One would think so, to hear the hubbub raised against us. But what do we teach? First, hear what our opponents teach. They say that the good God, who has power and wisdom to have prevented it all if he had liked, will torture millions upon millions of men in endless flames, producing more anguish and drawing forth more horrid blasphemies than tongue can tell or heart conceive; that to make them, his creatures, capable of this inconceivable agony, he will work a miracle, once for all, when he casts them into the lake of fire; or work it every hour, so as to keep the fire from consuming them; and that he will do this, thus horribly and endlessly, for sins committed in this short life. When less than this was said of Moloch we execrated him, and all thought it right to do so. But it seems the wrong was that he did it. The good God may do it. When that mistaken zealot held the fingers of a hopeless struggling child in the cradle to give her, as he said, a taste of what the fire of hell was, and a wholesome cry of indignation arose from every corner of the land—some said that the cry was a spark from heaven exhibited on earth, —for such an act was sheer cruelty. Our opponents, however, may represent the benevolent, beneficent God will inflict millions of times more suffering than this, but not a man must move his tongue, but receive it in silent faith; for what is deemed cruelty in a fallen creature is holy justice in the holy, loving God! This is the orthodox faith—so called. But, now, What do we teach? What is our heresy—so called? We say that by the just wrath of God all wicked persons shall be exterminated, and through the triumphs of the cross all evil things shall be rooted out and brought to nought; so that throughout the boundless dominions of Jehovah there shall be nothing but holiness, goodness, happiness, joy, and rejoicing. What is there in this so horrible that it must not be listened to, but be treated like a subtile, deadly poison? What is there in this unworthy of our God to accomplish? Or of an enlightened benevolent mind devoutly to wish for? To see the commotion against it, one would think it to be the very fumes of the bottomless pit let out to be a curse. To see the manoeuvering in places of public resort to avoid the advocates of it, and how persons stand aghast when they come upon them unexpectedly, one would suppose they were the pests of society, and would make one smile if it were not sad and sorrowful. "Father forgive them for they know not what they do." (pp. 105–6.) (To be continued.)

Scripture vs. Popular Misconceptions.

A FEW PLAIN FACTS FOR THOUGHTFUL CHRISTIANS.

I. SCRIPTURE DECLARES, that the "everlasting punishment" (Mat. 35: 40,) of the wicked will consist of "everlasting destruction" (2 Thes. 1: 9), after, or by means of, the infliction of "many" or "few stripes" (Lk. 12: 48), according to their several deserts. The popular theory teaches, that it will consist of everlasting pain.

2. SCRIPTURE DECLARES, that God will "destroy both body and soul in hell." Mat. 10: 28. The popular theory teaches, that he will destroy neither one nor the other; but will preserve both of them alive forever in unmitigated agony.

3. SCRIPTURE DECLARES, that "our God is a consuming fire." Heb. 12: 29. The popular theory teaches, that he is only a scorching fire.

4. SCRIPTURE DECLARES, that the "fiery indignation" will "devour the adversaries." Heb. 10: 27. The popular theory teaches, that it will do no such thing, but only torture them.

5. SCRIPTURE DECLARES, that the wicked will "perish like natural brute beasts." 2 Pet. 2: 12. The popular teaches, that there will be no analogy whatever between the two cases.

6. SCRIPTURE DECLARES, that "whosoever "will save his life," by unfaithfulness to Christ, shall ultimately "lose it" (Mat. 16: 25), in a far more terrible manner. The popular theory teaches, that no man can lose his life more than once, and that the second death is no death at all, but eternal life in sin and misery.

7. SCRIPTURE DECLARES, that "whosoever doeth the will of God abideth forever." Isaiah 40: 8. The popular theory teaches, that every man will abide forever, whether he does the will of God or not.

8. SCRIPTURE DECLARES, that if we desire "immortality," we must seek it "by patient continuance in well-doing." Rom. 3: 7. The popular theory teaches, that man possesses inherent, indefeasible immortality, and what we have to seek for is, that it may prove a blessing and not a curse to us.

9. SCRIPTURE DECLARES, that "the wages of sin is death." Rom. 6: 23. The popular theory teaches, that it is eternal life in misery; in other words, that God will inflict on impenitent sinners a punishment infinitely greater than that which he has pronounced to be their due.

10. SCRIPTURE DECLARES, that "the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. 6: 23. The popular theory teaches, that eternal life is the common possession of all men, and that the gift of God through Christ is the privilege of spending it in holiness and happiness.

11. SCRIPTURE DECLARES, that "the Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil." 1 Jno. 3: 8. The popular theory teaches, that they will never be destroyed at all, but a portion of the universe will be set apart for the eternal exhibition of them in their fullest maturity.

12. SCRIPTURE DECLARES, that Christ is to "reconcile all things to God." Col. 1: 20. The popular theory teaches, that all things will never be reconciled to God; that discord and disorder will never cease, but only be confined to one particular locality.

13. SCRIPTURE DECLARES, that in Christ "all things consist." Col. 1: 17. The popular theory teaches, that a whole kingdom will "consist" forever, although not "in him."

SCRIPTURE DECLARES, "he that hath the Son hath life, but he that hath not the Son of God hath not life, (1 Jno. 5: 12); that "if we live after the flesh we shall die, but if through the Spirit we mortify the deeds of the body we shall live." Rom. 8: 13. The advocates of the popular theory say, that the life of believers and unbelievers must be of equal duration, that the doctrine of eternal happiness, and the doctrine of eternal misery must stand or fall together; in other words, if what Scripture asserts be true, what it denies must be true also.

Look now at the practical working of the popular theory. It dishonours God. It reflects upon the justice of our Heavenly Father, representing him as visiting with infinite punishment the sins of a finite life—the "deeds done in the body" (2 Cor. 5: 10): it calls in question the love of him who is Love itself; as President Edwards asserts, he continues the wicked in being, in order to torment them forever: and it denies his power if not his desire, ever to eradicate sin from his dominions. It obscures the glory of our Saviour, as the giver of existence itself to the redeemed. It hinders the saving grace of the Holy Spirit, in that it fosters Universalism and Infidelity. And while it robs the law of its terrors by making it threaten what sinners cannot believe will be executed it damages the believer's whole spiritual constitution, by putting an unnatural strain upon it that God never intended it to bear.

Surely this is no light matter; it deeply concerns every lover of God.

Christian, is it not your duty to inquire into the reasons of your belief in these traditional doctrines? Hesitate not, because the wise and the good, of this and past ages have honestly upheld the popular theory. Many such, in and before Luther's day, conscientiously accepted the glaring errors of a corrupt church. Had he looked to their example instead of to God's word, we might have lost the Reformation of the 16th century.

Sleep and Death.

Sleep is called "the emblem of death." How often is the expression used by the living, when looking on the corpse of the dead, "He looks," or "she looks as if asleep." "How peacefully they sleep." Our evening hymn, so familiar to all, brings to our mind the resemblance:

"The day is passed and gone,
The evening shades appear;
O, may we all remember well,
The night of death draws near.

We lay our garments by,
Upon our beds to rest;
So death may soon disrobe us all,
Of what we here possessed."

There is not only a resemblance in the appearance, but in the quiet, the rest, and unconsciousness of the condition. When persons are in a state of sound sleep, they have no knowledge of anything. They have no knowledge that they ever lived, nor that they are asleep, much less that they are awake. They do not know when they are asleep how long they have been asleep. They have no knowledge as to what is going on in the world, or among their kindred or friends, not even in the house or room in which they are asleep. All to them, for the time being, is unknown. Dr. Durham says:

"Considered psychologically, I think sleep may be best defined to be a state in which volition, sensation, and consciousness are suspended, but can be readily restored upon the application of stimulus." Again he says—"Considered psychologically, sleep may be most correctly regarded as that particular state of cerebral inactivity which is essentially associated with rest, nutrition and repair of the brain substance. Every part of the body, the office of which is vital, not simply mechanical, passes through alternate periods of rest and action The heart pauses after each pulsation, and every breath we draw is followed by a period during which the nerve and muscles of inspiration repose bebefore being again aroused. The heart acts and rests seventy or eighty or more times in a minute. During the rest the tissue is nourished and waste is repaired. So also must the brain, the organ of the sense, as a vital organ, have rest. During sleep, the brain is in comparatively a bloodless condition; and the blood in the encephalic vessels is not only diminished in quantity, but moves with diminished rapidity. A woman who had lost part of her skull, the brain and part of its membranes lying bare—when she was in deep and sound sleep, the brain lay in the skull almost motionless; when she was dreaming it became elevated; and when in dreams of excitement, it protruded through the aperture of the skull."

So in death, "the dead know not anything." (Eccl. 9: 5.) They have no knowledge that they ever lived, nor that they are dead, much less that they are alive when dead! They do not know where they lie in death, nor how long they have been dead. They have no knowledge of what is going on in the world, or among their own kindred and friends. (Job 14: 20, 21.) Nor have they knowledge of anything "under the sun" (Eccl. 9: 6), and certainly not above it, for "one event" is "unto all." "They live, and after that they go to the dead." Their "volition, sensation and consciousness are suspended." "Their love, and their hatred, and their envy is now perished. ....There is no work, nor desire, nor knowledge in the grave." (Eccl. 9: 6, 10.) They are in a state of "cerebral inactivity," and at "rest." The "life" of "the soul" is gone, which is the "blood;" and the brain is in a "bloodless condition," and is unable to act or think. The "application of stimulus" may however restore the dead to a state of consciousness, and that is, the Spirit of God. (Rom. 8: 11.)—Sel.

The Ishmaelite.

"And his hand shall be against every man, and every man's hand against him."

"To supply a want long felt," a new paper, with the above title is proposed. Its aims are clearly set forth in its motto. Suffice it here to say, that it will be the special organ of those of our scribes who are blessed with the ability to say sharp, unlovely and unkind things of each other—such things in short, as are best calculated to promote ill-will, and sow the seeds of discord among brethren. In this way it is hoped to relieve the pressure on the columns of our religous weeklies, and give them more time to look after the things pertaining to the kingdom of Christ.

TERMS:

Inasmuch as a great majority of those who have a taste for the kind of literature this new paper will serve up, are too poor or too penurious to pay, no subscription price will be demanded, but a pledge will be exacted from each subscriber to turn Ishmaelite, and do what he can in his own community to "get his neighbors by the ears." Address,

Poetry.

Be Thankful and Go On.

Be thankful and go on thy way,
Thy life is at its dawn:
What e'er befall thee, trust and pray
Be thankful and go on.
Where'er ye be,
On land or sea,
By will or calling drawn,
Through all the strife
That clings to life
Be thankful and go on.

If pride deride thee, onward go;
If malice seek to tire,
Care not to make a wretch thy foe
Who is beneath thine eye.
Rouse up thy will
And mount the hill
Thou'lt reach a level lawn.
Who mocks thy toil,
True faith will foil,
Be thankful and go on.

If some have played upon thy heart
And done thee bitter wrong,
Go on and nobly act thy part
We suffer to grow strong.
A heart sincere
Thine own shall cheer,
On wealth let meekness fawn;
To bygones blind
Ne'er look behind,
Be thankful and go on.

Be thankful for the star that led
The shepherds on their way
To where upon his lowly bed
The infant Savior lay.
That guiding light
Which then burnt bright
Has never been withdrawn.
It guideth still;
Then do his will
Be thankful and go on.

Go on until he bids thee rest
His mercy is thy stay—
And think when by affliction pressed
Upon the brighter day.
Tho' darkness loom
Around the tomb,
Deem not that hope is gone;
Thy home on high
Perchance is nigh:
Be thankful and go on.

Easy to Pray, but Hard to Watch.

"And what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch!"

These are the words of the blessed Redeemer, uttered in one of his lessons of instruction to his disciples, describing the shortness of human glory, and the decay of earthly grandeur, in connection with the suffering and tribulation they must endure, in being brought before evil councils and synagogues, for his name's sake; and also the sure and certain triumph of his own heavenly kingdom, notwithstanding opposing signs and wonders, and false Christs that should rise up here and there, to deceive if possible the very elect before that great and glorious event should take place.

Of all the useful lessons imparted on that occasion, there was one idea pre-eminently above the rest, that he would have remembered the necessity of watching for the different periods and events of which he had spoken, in order that they might be prepared for the emergencies connected with them. If the duty of watching was thus made obligatory upon the disciples of our Lord, where can we with all our inferiority obtain license to pass listlessly on, fearless of the warning of those significant words? But as it was then, so it has ever been and still is, a most difficult thing to watch and guard with strong determined will against the appearance of evil. There are many to whom it appears easy to pray; and perhaps their petition, as you listen to it, savors of humiliation and importunity enough to render it acceptable. Perhaps they were fervent in the expression of their desires for personal holiness, and that God would open up before them a door of usefulness, that they might be instrumental in building up his church, in sustaining the ministry, sending the gospel broadcast over the land, making the heart of the missionary glad by the happy response and material aid to those dear to him, who co-operate and share with him in his toilsome work while laboring for the salvation of souls. Also in the fullness of their hearts they do not forget all classes and conditions of suffering, that the blessings of heaven might rest upon them and heal their sorrows.

These, doubtless, with many other things that were high and noble, good and great, characterized their petitions, and as you heard their prayers, you expected to find the man or the woman strong in all the Christian graces, and making rapid strides towards the full stature of the gospel. And as a result of this, you expected, when visiting the retirement of their homes, to behold the incense of morning and evening prayers sweetly ascending from their family altar, which should be so firmly reared, that time nor change, nor any force of circumstances would shake or overthrow it. And at the prayer-meeting, whoever else might be absent, you expected, when not providentially hindered, their places to be filled; you looked for them, both in summers and winters, to be among the little few who believe the words of the blessed Savior, that "where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst." And last, but not least, the Zion of God has its burdens to bear, its responsibilities to be met; not only are its members to join in songs of praise and rejoicing, and share in the bright anticipation of its future blessedness, its promised inheritance in the new earth, but they must labor for all this, must impart of their worldly substance, in other words their hard earned money, even as the apostle commanded, "to lay by in store every week, according as the Lord had prospered them;" not only for the poor, but to carry the gospel to the regions beyond.

But it is possible on making the demand of any or all these obligations of Christian character, upon some of those very individuals you heard so fervently pray, that there will be a deficiency, a hesitation or excuse of some kind from coming up to the work they so earnestly desired to see prosper. This is but a true picture of the way some professed Christians act; and the difficulty is just here: they forget to watch as well as pray—they find it easier to say than do.

The eyes of the world are upon us as the professed followers of Christ. They see all our infirmities, they mark our deficiencies, all of which serve as so many stumbling blocks in their way. Oh! then, may we especially who enjoy such a "blessed hope," we who are looking for the promised redemption, not only of ourselves, but the groaning earth, at the appearing of our absent Lord, live so faithfully in the discharge of all our duties, both temporal and spiritual, that all will be constrained to believe there is a reality in the religion we profess, and gladly come in with us to share the Bible feasts we are able to give them as we earnestly and prayerfully prosecute our search in the Holy Oracles to learn the will of our heavenly Father concerning us and our race.

Let our faith and love be such that though we may often weary in the work, we will never weary of it. Let us watch, according to the divine command, lest if we fail in this all important duty, our Lord "coming suddenly, should find us sleeping."

Mary A. Tibbetts.

The Discussion.

Ed. Times: It is only recently that my attention has been aroused to the discussion between Elds. Himes and Braden, as given in the Times. I thought the matter would probably appear in book form, and that there it would be much more convenient and satisfactory to read it. But a paragraph or two accidentally glanced through gave me an appetite, so that I have wholly read the last three numbers. I am glad that I have been induced to look into the debate, in the newspaper serial. I find much to convince and stimulate.

It seems that the theological difficulties in the way of the orthodox creed are the more insuperable and the more palpable as the "Doctors" proceed to build up arguments for their theory. I think that nine out of ten men of intelligence who have been brought to see the truth, by one clear view, only require to read orthodox reasonings, from that time, to build up in the perfect faith. For the artificial, studied (not scholarly) efforts of the debaters for the falsehood do inadvertantly and constantly suggest a thousand flaws in their logic for every hundred persuasive plausibilities.

I hope the readers of the Times, generally, have, first and last, been drawn to the reading of the Editor's excellent articles in dispute; or that they have, at least, considered all that his opponent has to say. Let us thoroughly understand what the most talented of the eternal miseryites can put forth for their dogma. C.

"Ages To Come."

A tract with this title came to my address from Chicago. It appears to be an attempted refutation of remarks in the Crisis by "W. S." on the question, "Who are the saints to reign over?" My object in writing is not exactly to review this tract, but to point out some of its inconsistencies and fallacies. No doubt it will fall into the hands of other readers of The Times.

It assumes to understand Rev. 20: 1–10, literally and make it the frame work of a theory. All other Scriptures must be bent, cut, and sawed, so as to fit to it. If an apostle speaks of the reign of Christ, it is at once scribed and cut to a thousand years. If the judgment is mentioned, it is stretched or spliced till it will reach a thousand years. If nations are mentioned, they must be mortal, etc.

Of all the fruitful sources of error in these last days, the immortal-soul theory is the worst: but next to it, is this one of trying to make Rev. 20: 1–10, literal: confusion and distraction follow in its wake: I speak from personal knowledge, having been conversant with its theorists and their works over twenty years.

I will here drop a thought or two. (1) There is no coming of Christ in these ten verses, nor preceeding them, to show that they follow that event, as is claimed. (2) No resurrection of wicked ones to judgment in them; and if literal, only one class of the righteous, i. e. the martyrs. Hence the phrase, "rest of the dead," refers to the remaining portion of the righteous who are not martyrs, and this would make two resurrections for the righteous, for none but beheaded ones "live and reign with Christ a thousand years." So it will conflict with other plain portions of the word. To understand symbolic language as literal, is sure to involve one in absurdity. Who would try to understand "bottomless pit literally! "A seal upon him" as literal! "A great chain" as literal! And if these are symbolic, why not the "dragon, that old serpent?' I presume no one literalizes this same personage in ch. 12. There all admit this devil-dragon to be symbolic. Why not in ch. 20? It is the same personage. Also the bottomless pit of ch. 9 from whence came smoke, out of which came locusts, all admit to be a symbol. The Bible no where else teaches a pit with no "bottom" or a "dragon" or angels with "great chains," or a "thousand years' reign." Why then accept them as literal here?

This theory claims that mortal nations are to be reigned over during this one thousand years, and they are to go into the city to the tree of life to be healed by its leaves, and bring their glory and heaven into it. But what "glory" or "honor" mortal man has got to add to this city I cannot see, when "All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass." And of these nations who enter the city, it says they are "the nations of them that are saved." Who else have any "right to the tree of life, and to enter in through the gates into the city?" For "there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth....but they which are written in the Lamb's Book of Life." How then can they enter into it, to bring in their "flower of grass" glory? Nay, nay, none but holy ones can enter through those pure celestial gates.

This theory leads to a very erroneous view of the reign of Christ, taking into its embrace many conditional prophecies of Christ's first advent, which were not fulfilled then for the reason—and the very same one—that the Israelites did not go into Canaan direct from Egypt, but wandered hither and thither for forty years. I must confess I am no Millennarian. I know of no "millennial" age. I know of only this, and one to come.

O. D. Gibson.

The Coming of Christ Near.

"Behold I come quickly: and my reward is with me to give every man as his work shall be." (Rev. 22: 12.)

Many years have passed away since our Savior blessed the world with his presence, and caused the true light to shine. "A little while" he abode with his own, instructed them in the heavenly truths, gave them power over all the devices and attacks of Satan, and strength to patiently endure the persecutions of a frowning world, and not only did he do this, but he promised them, before he returned to his Father, that he would "come again, and receive them unto himself," that they might dwell with him evermore. (Jno. 14: 2, 3.) And this blessed promise he has not only given to his apostles, but also to all those who, through their word, should believe. The evidences that we are living in the last days, and that the second coming of Christ is near, are both numerous and plain.

Who can joke and jest while the wrath of God is about to be poured, without mixture, into the cup of his indignation, and thousands of poor souls soon must weep and wail for anguish of soul when the plagues shall fall upon their unsheltered heads. Blessed be God that some are waking up and preparing to meet the coming King. May many more be aroused before it is too late. What has become of the love of Christ in the churches? Many a minister is dearly paid to speak of love, while hearts are as cold as ice. How many love God more than the world, and their neighbor's good as their own? Few, very few. "Love not the world, neither the things that are of the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." (1 Jno. 2: 15.) Yet many poor slaves of the world and of fashion, are called members of the body of Christ. Well may Satan laugh and angels weep. Wo to the shepherds of Israel! How are the mighty fallen! "Oh that my head were water, and my eyes fountains of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people." (Jer. 9: 1.)

Notwithstanding the popular Siren song of peace and safety, men in high places are looking with fearful forebodings into the future They see in the sky of the future, dark, ominous clouds. But the sun shines on the other side. Beyond all this there is a glorious golden age. But we must not forget our work here; work now, but rest by-and-by. God has said that men shall grow worse and worse; shall we say they will grow better? God says destruction is near; shall we put far off the evil day? God points to wars, earthquakes and famines in divers places; shall we cry peace and plenty? True, the good time will come; but not till after a time of trial, of trouble, of anguish, and distress, such as can be compared with nothing in the annals of the past—a fearful day to the wicked! Shall we escape it? O professed church of Christ! Why not awake? Why sleep on till engulfed in the awful vortex of ruin? Awake, and escape for thy life. Look at these things for yourself. Do not trust your souls to the preachers. O professed shepherds of the fold of Christ, why preach such vain things? There can be no mistake. God's word is plain. Why lure the flock to ruin and death? "Blow ye the trumpet in Zion. Sound an alarm in my holy mountain! Let all the inhabitants of the land tremble!" Are these hard sayings? It is God who has spoken them. But the Lord will be the hope of his people in that day. Where is your stay? Have you made God your refuge? If not, begin now to seek righteousness and meekness. It may be you shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger.

The rubbish of earth will soon pass away. Time is closing. Its best sands are fast running out, and the hour-glass will soon be empty. Eternity is before us. Are we prepared for the event?

The earth is to be changed to its Eden beauty. The New Jerusalem is to be its capital.

Saints and angels will walk its streets. Everything in the city will feast the eyes, while the golden streets will mirror back their beauty like the waters of a beautiful lake. O ye who love beauty, here it is! And this is waiting for you! God is in that city. It has no need of the sun or of the moon. The River of Life is in the midst of it; and the Tree of Life, bearing twelve manner of fruit, and yielding its fruit every month, and the leaves of the tree for the healing of the nations.

Here, dear reader, is the Golden Age. Here is where the nations will learn war no more. Here every knee will bow to the King of kings. None but the purified can enter that place. "There shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's Book of Life."

Come, saint or sinner, young or old; to you the invitation is extended. The Spirit and the Bride say, Come! and let him that heareth say come; and whosoever will, let him come and take of the water of life freely. God help you to come now, while mercy lingers. Throw away the tradition of men. Take up the sure word of God, and finally may we meet in the coming kingdom.

Norwegian Tracts.

Where are our Norwegian friends in the West, who were so anxious for me to prepare and publish one or more tracts in their language, and promised to aid in the expense? The list is opened; friends in the East have subscribed something, as they do for every good work. The first tract is written, and will be printed as soon as you and others will furnish the pledges to pay for it. Then it shall be circulated free.

We speak not only to Norwegian friends, but to friends of Norwegians.

Is Death of Nature.

[We find in the Herald of Life, the following article written by the late Prof. C. F. Hudson, sometime before his death, and addressed to the editors of the Independent.]

We often hear of death as a "debt of nature." A doctrine, this, of Christless men, a pagan notion, the theology of which is Naturalism. Death, we are told, is not strictly the penalty of sin; it is not an evil, save as all evil is incipient and imperfect good. In Theodore Parker's doctrine of a "perfect Providence," and in most Universalist schemes of human destiny, we find the same notion, that bodily dissolution is not the result of a Fall, but the natural way to an after life. Unhappily, the Scriptural doctrine of death is now so unsettled, that the Pagan idea is allowed to pass, like coins worn smooth, current by force of custom.

In your reply to an inquirer, under title of "Perplexity," (May 6,) seem hardly to have replaced this rine with coin from the king's . You say:

> re there any 'texts which seem to imply' f there had been no sin, there would been no dissolution of this bodily organ- n?....that without sin the 'living organ- would have undergone no change analo- to that which we now call death?.... it] is not in its very nature temporary, dropped when it has served its purposes ves fall from the trees in autumn, or as ck of corn cometh in its season.' Is any text which teaches more than that y sin that the dissolution of the body, departure of the spirit to its future life, nes the terror and the agony which men leath?"

ccording to this view, the sentence st thou art, and unto dust thou return" might have been literally led, though man had not sinned; that sentence became penal, simply use death became painful and ter- . The expulsion from Eden, and the tree of life, had nothing to do the dissolution of the body. The iarch David might have been hered to his fathers," and have "corruption," if the race were un- n; for the body, having served its porary purposes, must needs decay be buried. And when Christ wed man into the grave to gain a ry over his last "enemy," he ped no lower than our bodies, h like autumn leaves would have pped by the law of our original re. He has not changed the law our physical nature—he has only othed our path, or dispelled the ness that has rested upon it. He not saved us from the grasp of Death from being roughly handled by ; that is, from his enmity. By lemption, we are released from his inion, more happily, perhaps more dily; whereas, without sin, we ld still have entered his domain; without a Redemption, we should e been—we know not what.

will not say that this view of death kin to that taken by Emanuel edenborg, to which Calvin has given esigned occasion in his definition he "first resurrection." (See his sychopannychy.") My difficulty is ply this—we are not told in the ve statement, what would have a man's physical destiny, if he had sinned. What change would have mplished that which now depends the Resurrection? What was relation of the unfallen "natural ly" to the "spiritual body?" Was translation of Enoch an example of n's proper destiny, or an exception n it? Will the bodies of those are "changed" at Christ's second ning, be transformed or will they ish? These questions are impor- t as they relate to that primary doc- e of the gospel—the resurrection, ich the pagan mind can neither ck nor defy, but which is, more n any other religious tenet, peculiar Christianity. When the Scriptural trine of death is illustrated by it, r inquirer will, perhaps, be still less rplexed."

shall not offer, instead of your so- on, any of the vagaries of ancient modern Chiliasm. And I am no ychopannychist or Psycotomist. I w some of the difficulties of a true trine of the relation of matter and rit in the nature and destiny of n. I am indifferent to many points detail; e. g. whether the "tree of " had medicinal ambrosial virtue, Whately holds, or was symbolic and ramental. But I am confident that dern philosophy has obscured the ripture doctrine of man's original stiny, to the advantage of skepticim d error.

To show how the early Christians ought on this subject, I offer the lowing from Athanasius, the so- lled father of Orthodoxy, which ght be supported by various cita- ns:

"God desired man to continue in corruption. But men, neglecting and parting from the knowledge of God, d devising and regarding that which as evil, incurred the threatened con- mnation of death. They remained longer such as they were created, t contracted corruption according to eir own devices, and came under the wer and dominion of death. For y transgression they reverted to their tive condition; so that as from non- istence they had begun to be, they ust now in due time suffer the loss d destruction of their being. And at justly; for if, having once the na- re of non-being, they were called to being by the presence and good- ess of the Word, when they divested emselves of the knowledge of God d turned aside to non-entities, (for vil things are not entities, but good ings are entities, seeing they are om God, who truly is,) it followed that they must be also divested of the nature of existing forever. That is they must perish, and remain in death and corruption. For man is by nature mortal, in that he was created from non-being. Yet, as made in the likeness of the true being, to be preserved by the knowledge of him, he might have escaped the force of corruption, and remained immortal."—De Incarnat. Verbi; Opp. Ed. Commel, p. 40.

Spiritual Interpretation.

By spiritual interpretation is understood that which is arrived at without recourse to any law of language, but according to the fancy of the interpreter. It is the meaning which any expositor may guess to be hidden under language, the natural and obvious sense of which conveys no such significance. It is in opposition to this, and not to tropes and symbols, that the phrase "Literal Interpretation" is used. Says Mr. Brooks:

"I wish it understood that when I speak of the literal sense of prophecy or of a phrase, I mean that I understand the words in the primary significance thereof, and not in any mystical, enigmatical, or symbolic sense; excepting such ordinary, figurative, or typical use of them as would not affect the obvious sense of them at the time they are spoken.

"It seems to be a device of Satan, when he cannot hope to lead men altogether from the faith of Scripture, to become an angel of light and in that character to lead them to some subtlety in the way of interpretation or application of Scripture which virtually renders it useless; and among these modes is that of setting the ingenuity to work to find out what is called a spiritual meaning. (Elements of Prophecy, pp. 97, 8.)

It is through this mode of interpretation that teachings of Scripture are falsified by erroneous doctrines, and the word of God brought into disrepute. It was first introduced by Origen, Jerome and others. They were denominated Allegorizers, by Nepos, and others who wrote against them. In opposition to their principles of interpretation, Martin Luther in his Annotations on Deuteronomy, says:

"That which I have so often insisted on elsewhere, I here once more repeat; viz. that the Christian should direct his first efforts toward understanding the literal sense (as it is called) of the Scripture, which alone is the substance and the faith of Christian theology—which alone will sustain him in the hour of trouble and temptation—and which will triumph over sin, death, and the gates of hell, to the praise and glory of God. The allegorical sense is commonly uncertain, and by no means safe to build our faith upon, for it usually depends on human opinion and conjecture only, on which, if a man lean, he will find it no better than an Egyptian reed. Therefore, Origen; Jerome, and similar of the fathers, are to be avoided, with the whole of the Alexandrian school, which, according to Eusebius and Jerome, formerly abounded in this interpretation. For later writers, unhappily following their too much praised and prevailing example, it has come to pass, that men make just what they please of the Scriptures until some accommodate the word of God to the most extravagant absurdities; and, as Jerome complains of his own times, they extract a sense from Scripture repugnant to its meaning: of which offence, however, Jerome himself was also guilty." (Ann. in Deut. cap. 1. fo 55.)

Dr. Moshiem observes:

"After the encomiums we have given to Origen etc., it is not without deep concern we are obliged to add, that he also, by an unhappy method, opened a secure retreat for all sorts of errors, which a wild and irregular imagination could bring forth." And after noticing that he abandoned the literal sense, and divided the hidden sense into moral and mystical, or spiritual, he adds: "A prodigious number of interpreters, both in this and the succeeding ages, followed the method of Origen, though with some variations; nor could the few who explained the sacred writings with judgment and a true spirit of criticism, oppose with any success the torrent of allegory that was overflowing the Church." (Ch. Hist. cent. 3, part 2, sect. 5, 6.)

Milner, in his Church History, says in somewhat similar terms.

"No man, not altogether unsound and hypocritical, ever injured the Church of Christ more than Origen did. From the fanciful mode of all glory introduced by him, and uncontrolled by scriptural rule and order, there arose a vitiated method of commenting on the sacred pages, which has been succeeded by the contrary extreme—viz. a contempt of types and figures altogether. And in a similar way his fanciful ideas of letter and spirit tended to remove from men's minds all just conceptions of genuine spirituality. A thick mist for ages pervaded the Christian world, supported and strengthened by his allegorical manner of interpretation. The learned alone were considered as guides implicitly to be followed; and the vulgar, when the literal sense was hissed off the stage, had nothing to do but to follow wherever their authority might lead them." (Vol. 1, p. 469.)

The same principles of interpretation still widely prevail, and are the prolific source of unnumbered errors in doctrine and in Biblical exposition. It is therefore important that they be corrected by sounder principles of exegesis.

Looking into the Darkness.

As the light of the gospel shines into the moral darkness around us, so the light of prophecy shines into the darkness of apostasy and judgment before us. Only the eye that has been trained in the school of God can rightly do this. How great is the difference in the power of looking at natural objects as regards different persons. One will see something distinctly at a great distance which to his companion is merely a dim speck; another will discern a danger in the road which an unpractised eye would come in contact with to his injury. This holds true with respect to those future awful events which are surely coming on the earth. The apostles congratulated those who knew the times and seasons, and so stood prepared for the coming storm. (1 Thes. 5:1–4.) We are commanded to "take heed to the sure word of prophecy," which is a light shining in a dark place, till the day dawn. Yes, take heed until then. The pilot studies his chart till he gets safe into port. Sometimes the greatest danger is toward the last. "Prophecy [says one] is not intended to be like a lantern hung on the stern of the ship, shining merely on the waters behind." Such a light may amuse a sentimental passenger, but the pilot and the sailor look above, and also look ahead. Prophecy is indeed of blessed use when fulfilled, who denies that? But beware of confining it to this, lest you ignore much of God's revelation, and by your bad example teach others to do so, whose lot may be cast in more perilous times than your own.

While we wait on the Lord in the way of his judgments, let us be careful also to watch and to work. The Lord combines these three in the exhortation which he gives when predicting his coming, and the events which stand connected therewith. (Mat. 24:43–46; Lk. 12:35–38.) "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing." The subject of the Lord's coming and its accompanying judgments is most practical, and should waken us up to seek by all means to save some. Well has that loving, zealous spirit, Henry Craik, spoken: "The moment any doctrine so operates as to make us little in earnest about souls, either the doctrine is false, or we are perverting it." We believe that a fearful storm of wrath is coming, we know that a glorious salvation is come. While trusting alone in Jesus, let us tremble at God's word, and zealously testify to all, of the freeness and fulness of the great salvation.

"There are three things which sometimes dismay—looking within on our own hearts, round upon our enemies, and forward to what is coming upon the world. If you look in, and find your sin and guilt dismay, look back to the cross. If you look round, and are oppressed by the sight, look up to the enthroned Mediator. Not only look forward to the coming storm, but look beyond it. Beyond the troublous ocean of time is the continent of eternal glory, all bright with God's own light. Beyond the region of sorrow, trial, and conflict, rise the turrets of the New Jerusalem, where there shall be no more sorrow, tears, or death."—John Cox.

The Importance of Knowing the Time.

On an afternoon in summer, in the year 1865, all was as quiet as usual in the little town of Staplehurst, in Kent. Near to, or upon a bridge which spanned a small river, some artizans and laborers were busy at work. In a few moments all was changed, and tidings of a terrible calamity were flashing along the telegraph wires, summoning medical and other aid to the spot. What had happened? A few words explain all. To the utter dismay and terror of the workmen before referred to, an express train was seen coming at full speed. Efforts were made to warn the engine-driver that something was wrong ahead. He saw the warning, but it was too late; nothing could stop that swiftly moving train, filled with precious human lives. On, on it rushed to the place from whence some rails had been taken up for repairs, and in a moment or two more, engine, tender, and several of the carriages were dashed in horrible confusion over the bridge into the river below. Several persons were killed, many more wounded, and all filled with wild affright, never to be forgotten.

How came such an event to happen? It was all for want of knowing the time. The man in charge of the repairs made a mistake of two hours, and so was not ready for the coming train. Certainly he ought to have known the time. Though it was a tidal train, and its arrival varied each day with the state of the tide, yet he had plain printed directions, which he ought to have studied, and not to have depended on his own imaginings, recollection or supposition. Thus, through not studying his ample directions, many lives were sacrificed, a vast amount of misery inflicted, much property destroyed, and his own future life burdened with sad recollections of one fatal omission.

The chariot of God's judgment is on its way. Its sound may be heard in many grand prophetic utterances. The Lord himself is coming with his holy myriads—coming to execute judgment on his enemies, and to give rest to his troubled ones. The certainty of the coming of the great day of God has been telegraphed from heaven many times, in the most plain and positive way; and there is an important sense in which God would have us "know the time," and in which we may "see the day approaching."

There are three points of difference between this awfully-glorious and fast-coming event and the sad catastrophe to which we have referred. (1) All who will be in the heavenly train will be safe: the Lord will "bring them with him." (2) He will bring dismay and destruction on those who are out of sympathy with him, and who, hearing, do not heed his warning. (3) Those who are really watching and waiting for his coming do not know the exact time of that event.

How then, it may be asked, can it be said of even such, "knowing the time," and "ye see the day approaching?" It is not a chronological knowledge that is here spoken of. It is not "seeing" with any prophetic vision that is here referred to. It is a seeing with the eye of faith and hope; it is a spiritual and practical knowledge; and both these admit of indefinite increase, or they may be seriously weakened. Those "who know the time," its certainty, yet its uncertainty; its terribleness and its glory; those who, as they study "the sure word of prophecy," "see the day approaching," should be very watchful against all evil, and hopeful for all good, and should labor diligently with a view to the spiritual advantage of others, as well as for their own soul's blessing. All these things are set forth in the passages already partly quoted. (See Rom. 13:11–14; Heb. 10:23–25.)

What a mighty motive power does the coming of the day of the Lord, when rightly apprehended, exert on all true followers of Christ. We say emphatically, "his day." Let us beware of setting this great motive aside, and neutralizing all the texts which refer to "the day," by supposing that Christians have nothing to do with it. "The day" and the coming are used interchangeably in God's word. (2 Pet. 3: 10, 11.)

We have need to "watch and pray always," not only as regards the Lord's coming itself, but as it respects ourselves, and our treatment of the doctrine. Rightly to "know the time" is to be so convinced of the certainty of coming events, and the importance of their issues, as to become in some measure what God calls us to be—awake to our dangers, alive to our privileges, anxious for his glory.

In the teachings of the New Testament respecting the Lord's coming, nothing is said to gratify curiosity, to produce undue excitement, or pander to mere sentimentality; but everything spoken has a direct bearing on the state of mind and practical condition of the saints. The terms "Be ye ready," "Watch and pray always," "Be ye like unto men that wait for their lord," are used by the Lord himself. A variety of words, setting forth what should be the position of saints, in which "waiting" and "patience" are prominent, are also found in the prayers and teachings of the apostles.

"Thou knowest not the time of thy visitation." Such was the tender lamentation of the Savior over Jerusalem. How many who hear the word of the gospel now are in a similar state! How important is "the present time"—"the accepted time!" If it is permitted to pass away without seeking an interest in Christ, how fearful will be the doom which follows!

Many years ago, we started in a carriage with some friends to go by train to London. We traveled leisurely, conversing pleasantly, thinking we had plenty of time. When within half a mile of the station, the train was heard approaching. "Surely," exclaimed the responsible person of the party, "my watch is wrong." This was the case, and we arrived at the door just as the whistle sounded for the train to go on. One of the party significantly looked at the friend whose "watch was wrong," and said, "Knowing the time!" Reader, see to it, that with so clear a revelation, and so free and urgent an invitation, you are not found at last among those who "neglect the great salvation," and who hear the awful words pronounced from within, "TOO LATE! TOO LATE!" No word is so red with the blood of souls as the word "NEGLECT." Pharoah, the man of the hard heart, said, "To-morrow!" The Holy Spirit saith, "TO-DAY!"

The Bible Class.

Raca.

Raca is about equivalent to "blockhead.' the offence is not in the words, but in the anger that vents itself in abusive expressions.

The Council.

The highest tribunal among the Jews composed of the chief priests, elders, scribes, seventy in number. This number being suggested probably by the seventy elders appointed by Moses. (Num. 11: 16.) It had both civil and ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and sentenced to death by stoning, to which was added in extreme cases of disgrace of burning the body. Under the Roman sway, sentence of death could only be inflicted by consent of the Roman magistrate. (John 19: 31.)

The Judgment in Matt. 5 : 22.

Many will supppose that this refers to the great day of judgment. Such a reference would be a very serious one, and the lesson taught would need little improvement. They did not, however, refer to this great tribunal, but simply to the petty, local court of their various cities, which had jurisdiction over some infractions of civil law, and could inflict death by the sword. All its decisions were subject to an appeal to the Council, or Sanhedrim. The judgment was established, (Deut. 16: 18.) Josephus says it consisted of seven judges, and was called the council of Seven. To be in danger of this was simply to be amenable to a civil court, as though the law of murder was simply civil. Thus these teachers set aside the law of God, "teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."

Hell Fire.

To the southeast of Jerusalem was a deep and fertile valley, called 'The Valley of Hinnom.' * * In this valley (Jer. 7: 31) did the idolatrous Jews burn their children to Moloch, and Josiah (2 Ki 23: 10) therefore polluted it; and thenceforth it was the place for the casting out and the burning of all offal, and the corpses of criminals; and therefore its name, 'The Gehenna of fire,' was used to signify the place of everlasting punishment. There were among the Jews three well-known degrees of guilt, coming respectively under the cognizance of the local and supreme courts; and after these is set the the Gehenna of fire, the end of the malefactor, whose corpse, thrown out into the valley of Hinnom, was devoured by the worm or the flame. (Mk. 9: 44.) Similarly, in the spiritual kingdom of Christ, shall the sins even of thought and word be brought into judgment and punished, each according to its degree of guilt, but even the least of them before no less a tribunal than the judgment seat of Christ."—Alford.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, June 4, 1872.

The New York Tribune says:

Not one good man in ten, who repeats by rote the formulas of probable damnation, believes what he says, or takes the trouble to inquire whether he even believes that he believes. He may condemn great masses of his fellow-creatures with whom he is not acquainted to endless misery, but he always makes a reservation in favor of neighbor B or neighbor C, although neither of them thinks, in matters of faith, as he does.

In consecrating ourselves to God, our passions and lust should all be curbed and brought into subjection. We must pay especial attention to weak points, such as the passion for idleness, for evil speaking, foul words, fits of rage or bad temper, want of courage in maintaining our convictions of truth and bearing public testimony, praying our prayers, leaving out the earnest intercession for daily needed blessings. Our idolatry of objects of human love, our pride and self-seeking, the self-pleasing that sometimes crops into our works of charity—all must be sacrificed if we would be consecrated.

Foretastes.

The day of the Lord is at hand. It is "the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." It will commence, and overtake the world as a thief in the night. At any rate, from its nature, it cannot be very protracted. Judgment is the Lord's strange work, and a short work will the Lord make in the earth. Our Lord declares that, except those days were shortened, no one would be left alive in the world.

Now it is very noteworthy that of late years it has pleased God, in his infinite goodness, and according to his usual method, to give ample warning of what is coming, so that each one may prepare himself, so as to be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass.

What more could he have done, than to give us an outline of the whole coming jugments, as he has done in the book of the Revelation? Yea, we venture to add, what statement could be plainer? though now men fancy that the Revelation is the obscurest book of the Bible. Nothing will more astonish mankind than the discovery which will shortly be made, that in simplicity, directness, literalness, and plainness, the word of God, and its prophetic portions, too, excels all other books, just as much as it excels them in all other qualities.

The Lord has always given ample warning before he inflicted his judgments. In the time of the flood he sent Noah to announce it, and even made known the length of the intervening period. Men gave no heed to the warning, not only because they disliked God, but also because it predicted an event in itself unlikely, and contrary to all the experience of mankind.*

Pharaoh, and the Egyptians, too, had full warning by the mouth of Moses and Aaron. So had the Canaanites, through the precurrent judgments of Jehovah. In the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah the Lord gave some warning. And as for Judah and Israel what more warnings could he have sent? (Is. 5: 4.) So, also, with reference to the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, the Lord Jesus gave ample notice and description.

And this is strikingly true, likewise, with regard to the impending judgments of the nearing day of the Lord. God has given, has been giving, and is giving abundant warning to all those, in Christian countries, who have ears to hear, and eyes to see, and hearts to feel. Through that modern agency, the press, faithful witnesses have been raised up in all parts of Christendom, and of the mission fields, to draw attention to the signs of the times. The gospel, as we are foretold would be the case (Mark 13: 10), is preached in all the world for a witness; after which the end comes.

There is still something more impressive. We refer to the facts which, duringthe last few years, have been loudly preaching. God has four sore judgments. (Ezek. 14: 21.) In a certain sense these have always, more or less, at intervals, been sent upon the rebellious children of men, but within the last few years they have multiplied in so extraordinary a manner, as to give special foretastes of what is coming, that every reflecting mind could not help asking what they mean.

As for the sword, although peace, thank God, has not yet been taken from the earth, have not the weapons of war flashed through the whole world? After forty years of peace, the din of arms began in Europe with the Crimean war; then followed the rebellion in India; next the Franco-Austrian war; then the tremenduous civil war in the United States; then the Austro-Prussian war; then the Franco-German war. Of all the minor conflicts it would take to long to speak; hardly a nation on earth has been altogether free from them. And as for the "rumors of wars," who can count them up? Earthquakes many of them extensive and disastrous, have shaken every part of the mundane frame. Famine, too, has done its work with more intensity, here and there; especially in India and Persia. Pestilences of different kinds have appeared in various quarters. At the present writing, small-pox, which had become rare, has spread over all Europe and America. Noisome beasts have not yet multiplied to any great extent; to prepare the way for their ravages, more widely extended desolations must take place; but, no doubt, in some places, even their ravages have been felt. The present condition of Persia is caculated to nourish the scourge.

Have not the sea and the waves been roaring more than before in the experience of man? Have not, to no small extent, already, the nations been perplexed, and men's hearts been failing them for fear of what is coming on the earth? This sign is not yet fully developed, but we plainly see it manifesting. Floods and hurricanes, on a scale of unprecedented magnitude, have prevailed in all parts of the globe.

It may be said that all this grows out of natural causes operating in the physical and moral world. Such is no doubt largely the case. But why should these calamities be so intensified, and multiplied in such an extraordinary manner just at this time?

The answer is not hard to find. They are specimens of what is coming—specimens of the results of man's wickedness—specimens of the judgments of the coming day of the Lord. They are foretastes.

The day of the Lord has not yet begun; it is only impending; therefore the judgments have not yet set in in their intensity. They have not yet become general, but they are plain foretastes of what is coming. They proclaim with clear utterance that the day of the Lord is at hand. And they are likely to increase. Nor is it probable that the present will be without these warnings.

Now we remind our readers that fire, likewise, is one of the ingredients in the coming wrath? Look at the first trumpet (Rev. 8: 7); and at the fourth vial (Rev. 16: 8.) In this repect the year 1871 made a special impression upon us. Its terrific conflagrations may not have seemed so striking to those at a distance as to us in America; yet, indeed, the whole world was moved by them. As is the case with other of the preliminary judgments of God, this fire judgment, too, has ere now appeared in the world; but, surely, not often, heretofore, in such an impressive manner. Where is such a conflagration on record as that of Chicago, on October 9th, 1871? The whole world stood aghast.

But to us the so-called prairie fires were still more remarkable. These, owing to the droughts, enveloped vast regions in smoke, and caused fearful devastation. We ourselves, though living at considerable distance from the chief seats of these fires, had experience of them; and at the place of our habitation, never had the atmosphere been so laden, so thick with smoke, in every direction, within the memory of living men. All were unanimous in this opinion.

Far more remarkable, however, than even the burning of Chicago, or the previous prairie fires, was the destruction which, in the very same moment of time, fell upon certain towns in Northeastern Wisconsin, and Western Michigan, some of which were separated by the whole breadth of Lake Michigan. Peshtigo, Menominee, Manistee, etc. were, at the same instant wrapped in a sheet of flame. This most remarkble phenomenon has not received the attention it deserves. As far as we know, it is unprecedented in the records of humanity. Or if there has been a similar phenomenon, it was on a much smaller scale.

The special feature of this case consists in the fact that these towns, and others, were not consumed in consequence of a fire that spread, as ordinary conflagrations, gradually, from house to house, as the inflammable materials are successively kindled by the advancing flame; the blaze was everywhere, at the same instant. The whole air was on fire. The testimony on this point is sufficient and convincing. Many persons were almost instantaneously killed, as if they had been pierced [illegible] fiery dart. To inhale the air was [illegible]. The details are harrowingly [illegible]resting; but they are familiar, and [illegible]ll readily occur to the minds of all [illegible]r American readers.

Some scientific men have supposed that the whole atmosphere, for many hundred square miles, was filled with electricity, or with some inflammable gas, which extended quite across the breadth of the lake. This may be so. The effect produced was certainly similar to what would have arise from such a cause. But whether natural or supernatural, the effect was the same.

Since the blast that smote Sennacherib's host, has anything like this been known in the earth? The Chicago conflagration was remarkable; but the Peshtigo fire was far more astonishing.

Amid the many startling events of last year there was none that impressed us more. And the reason was, because thus the Lord has given us a foretaste of the coming fire; seemingly the only judgment of which the world has not yet had a specimen.

It ought to be well understood and noted that the earth is at present getting foretastes of what is coming upon it. The day of the Lord is not yet here; but if these foretastes, sent in mercy to arouse a slumbering world, and to lead it to repentance, fail of their object, the Lord will not hesitate at the sterner measures he hasthreatened.

Let the world hear! Let all the inhabitants of the earth tremble! God is sending foretastes of the day of judgment. Shall we harden our hearts? shall we refuse to see, and hear, and feel, because war, pestilence, famine, flood, and flame have not yet become universal? God forbid! But if any man hardens his heart they will so become.

Beloved readers, let us take to heart the admonition of the Lord by the mouth of his prophet Zechariah (2: 2, 3): "Before the decree bring forth; before the day pass as the chaff; before the fierce anger of the Lord come upon you; before the day of the Lord's fierce anger come upon you; seek ye the Lord, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment: seek righteousness: seek meekness: it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger!"

"Thus saith the Lord God: Surely in the fire of my jealousy have I spoken against the residue of the heathen, and against Idumea."—Prophetic Times.

Phantom Limbs.

It has long been known to surgeons that when a limb has been cut off the sufferer does not lose the consciousness of its existence. This has been found to be true in nearly every such case. Only about five per cent of the men who have suffered amputation never have any feeling of the part as being still present. Of the rest there are a few who in time come to forget the missing member; while the remainder seem to retain a sense of its existence so vivid as to be more definite and intrusive than is that of its truly living member.

A person in this condition is haunted, as it were, by a constant or inconstant fractional phantom of so much of himself as has been lopped away—an unseen ghost of the lost part, and sometimes a presence made sorely inconvenient by the fact that, while but faintly felt at time, is at others acutely called to his attention by the pains or irritations which it appear to suffer from a blow on the stump or a change in the weather.

There is something almost tragical, something ghastly, in the notion of these thousands of spirit limbs haunting as many good soldiers, and every now and then tormenting them with the disappointments which arise when the memory being off guard for a moment, the keen sense of the limb's presence betrays the man into some effort, the failure of which of a sudden reminds him of his loss.

Many persons feel the lost limb as existing the moment they awaken from the merciful stupor of the ether given to destroy the torments of the knife; others come slowly to this consciousness in days or weeks, and when the wound has healed. But, as a rule, the more sound and serviceable the stump, especially if an artificial limb be worn, the more likely is the man to feel faintly the presence of his shorn member. Sometimes a blow on the stump will reawaken such consciousness; or, as happened in one case, a reamputation higher up the limb will summon it anew into seeming existence.

In many the limb may be recalled to the man by irritating the nerves in its stump. Every doctor knows that when any part of a nerve is excited by a pinch, a tap, or by electricity (which is an altogether harmless means), the pain, if it be a nerve of feeling, is felt as if it were really caused in the part to which the nerve finally passes. A familiar illustration is met with when we hurt the "crazy-bone" behind the elbow. This crazy-bone is merely the ulnar nerve, which gives sensation to the third and fourth fingers and in which latter parts we feel the numbing pain of a blow on the main nerve. If we were to divide the nerve below the elbow, the pain would still seem to be in the fingers; nor would it alter the case were the arm cut off. When, therefore, the current of a battery is turned upon the nerves of an arm-stump, the irritation caused in the divided nerves is carried to the brain, and there referred at once to all the regions of the lost limb from which, when entire, these nerves brought those impressions of touch or pain which the brain converts into sensations. As the electric current disturbs the nerves, the limb is sometimes called back to sensory being with startling reality.

On one occasion the shoulder was thus electrized three inches above the point where the arm had been cut off. For two years the man had ceased to be conscious of the limb. As the current passed, although ignorant of its possible effects, he started up, crying aloud, "Oh! the hand, the hand!" and tried to seize it with the living grasp of the sound fingers. No resurrection of the dead, no answer of a summoned spirit, could have been more startling. As the current was broken the lost part faded again, only to be recall by the same means. This man had ceased to feel his limb. With others it is a presence never absent save in sleep. "If," says one man, "I should say I am more sure of the leg which ain't than of the one that are, I guess I should be about correct."

Absurd mishaps sometimes remind men of the unreliability of these ghostly members, which seem to them so distinctly material. In one case, a man believed for a moment that he had struck another with the absent hand. A very gallant fellow, who lo[illegible] an arm at Shiloh, was always acute[illegible] conscious of the limb as still present. On one occasion, when riding, he used the lost hand to grasp the reins while with the other he struck his horse. He paid for his blunder with a fall. Sensitive people are curiously moved by the mental shock which comes from such failures of purpose. In one case the poor fellow, at every meal for many months, would try to pick up his fork, and failing, would be suddenly seized with nausea; so that at last his wife habitually warned him.

How remarkable must be the sense of the existence of the part lost is to be gathered from the fact that even after twenty or thirty years men are sometimes deceived by this sensation into acts which are founded on a moment of deception as to the real presence of the limb. Naturally enough, this is apt to be the case when first rallying the senses on awaking from sleep. "Indeed," says one sufferer, writing on this point, "every morning I have to learn anew that my leg is enriching a Virginia wheat crop or ornamenting some horrible museum."

But, while most men are thus conscious of a lost limb as still in place, the spirit member is never complete. The foot or hand are most distinctly felt, and then the ankle or wrist. The parts between these, and the knee or elbow, as the case may be, are seeming by indistinct or absent, and any missing parts yet higher up are total by unfelt. In some cases half a hand is gone, and only a phantom finger or two remain somewhere in the air, with an utter abolition of every other portion of the arm. Probably some of these curious facts depend upon certain of the nerve-ends in the stump being kept irritated, while others are perfectly sound and undisturbed. In accordance with those facts, the pains referred to lost parts are usually felt in the hand or foot, and very rarely elsewhere.—Lippincot's Magazine.

Paul's Ambition.

In Rom. 15: 20 we read in our common version, "So have I strived to preach the gospel, not where Christ was named, lest I should build upon another man's foundation." In place of the words, "have I strived" Noyes has, "always earnestly desirous," the Bible Union revision, "being emulous," and Alford, "making it ambition." This then was the object of ambition which he here speaks of: to be a pioneer preacher, a foreign missionary, a founder of new missions to the heathen. This was the noble aspiration of the great apostle of the Gentiles.

Nothing Lost.

Mr. Laicus' in the Christian Union is responsible for this sensible idea: I called the other day on my friend Mrs. T., who has the finest collection of roses I ever saw. She took me out to see them—white roses, red roses, yellow roses, climbing roses, and roses in pots, the gay giant of battles and the modest moss roses, every species I had ever heard of, were there in rich profusion. Mrs. T. began plucking right and left. Some bushes with but a single flower she despoiled. I remonstrated.

"You are robbing yourself, Mrs. T." said I. "Ah," said she, "Mr. Laicus, do you not know that the way to make the rose buhs bear is to pluck its flowers freely? I lose nothing by what I give away."

This is a universal law. We never lose anything by what we give away.

Good Health as an Element of Success.

It is no exaggeration to say that health is a large ingredient in what the world calls talent. A man without it may be a giant intellect; but his deeds will be the deeds of a dwarf. On the contrary, let him have a quick circulation, a good digestion, the bulk thews, and sinews of a man, and the alacrity, the unthinking confidence inspired by these, and though having but a thimbleful of brains, he will either blunder upon success or set failure at defiance. It is true, especially in this country, that the number of contours in every community—of men in whom heroic intellects are allied with bodily constitution as tough as horses—is small; that, in general, a man has reason to think himself well off in the lottery of life if he draws the prize of a healthy stomach with a mind, or a prize of a healthy stomach without a mind, or a prize of a fine intellect with a crazy stomach.

But, of the two, a weak mind in a herculean frame is better than a giant mind in a crazy constitution. A pound of energy with an ounce of talent will [illegible]chiev greater results than a pound [illegible] talent with an ounce of energy. The first requisite to success in life is to be a good animal. In any of the learned professions, a vigorous constitution is equal to at least fifty per cent. more brains. Wit, judgment, imagination, eloquence, all the qualities of the mind, attain thereby a force and splendor to which they could never attain without it. But intellect in a weakly body, is "like gold in a pent swimmer's pocket." A mechanic may have tools of the sharpest edge and highest polish; hat are these without a vigorous

Redemption.—What is this? Is it not implied in what has already been said? No; there are two enemies yet to be destroyed, death and the grave. Christ will do this at his coming. He will swallow up death in victory, his dew will be as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast forth her dead. This will be the completion, the consummation of all. Christ is waiting for this, it is his patience. The saints are waiting for it, though some of them do not know it, for none of them will be satisfied until they awake in his likeness. The whole groaning creation is waiting for the adoption—to wit, the redemption or resurrection of the body, for then the creature itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the liberty of the glory of the children of God.

God the author of our union and communion with Christ—"Of him are ye in Christ Jesus." In eternity he gave us to Christ. In time he moved our hearts to come to him. He is the husbandman, and puts in each branch. He is the keeper; none is able to pluck us out of his hand. "Kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation." Don't we feel in our own hearts that this is true? We remember the time when we were without Christ, enemies to God, and without hope in the world. We see some of our old companions in sin, who enjoyed the same or greater advantages, still asleep in worldliness, drawn unto death, and ready to be slain. What has made the difference? Do not our hearts gratefully exclaim, By the grace of God I am what I am? But farther, it is God who makes the fulness of Christ circulate and well up into us. He has much to do in us and with us, to get us fully and freely to receive the unsearchable riches of Christ. We have all of us by nature a self-wisdom, self-righteousness, self-strength, and self-worth which are ever antagonist to the provisions of grace. It is God who graciously subdues these rebels, and makes Christ's people willing to be filled with the fulness of their Lord. "He weans us from the milk, and draws us from the breast," and so like little children, we hang only and wholly on Christ.

"A guilty, weak, and helpless worm,
On thy kind arm I lean."

There is a precious Savior, but it is God alone who can bring us to him, and make him to us all that we need. Don't we greatly overlook this truth? and yet it is God's great aim to raise up a race of beings who shall be the humblest and most dependent, and as a consequence of this, the highest, the most glorious, the rulers in the universe. Are we not apt to think that when we have found Christ, his fulness will flow into us as a matter of course? But God alone can cause this inflow. Look at the tree in winter; its root is sound and lively, yet there is no upward transmission of sap. Spring must come with its warm sun and refreshing showers, and then the juices rise to the utmost bough and leaf. And so it is God who transfers Christ's fulness to each of his people, according to their various measures.—John Milne.

Prayer.

Prayer should be connected with watchfulness. Matt. 26: 41: Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation. Mk. 13: 33: Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is.

Mark 14: 38: Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. The spirit truly is willing but the flesh is weak.

Lk. 21: 36: Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man.

Col. 4: 2: Continue in prayer and watch in the same with thanksgiving.

1 Pet. 4: 7: But these end of all things is nigh at hand, be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer.

It is the duty of all Christians to pray in secret.

Mat. 6: 6: But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy father which is in secret; and thy father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly.

Mk. 1: 35: And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, he went out and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed.

Mk. 6: 46: And when he had sent them away, he departed into a mountain to pray.

Luke 5: 16: And he withdrew himself in the wilderness, and prayed.

Luke 6: 12: And it came to pass in those days, that he went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God.

Acts 10: 9: And on the morrow as they drew nigh unto the city, Peter went up upon the housetop to pray.

Acts 10: 30: And Cornelius said. Four days ago, I was fasting until this hour; and at the ninth hour I prayed in my house, and, behold, a man stood before me in bright clothing.

Secret prayer is the grand means of maintaining communion with God and keeping alive the power of religion in the soul. Without this the ordinances degenerate into formality, and men continue devoid of life, strength and comfort in the midst of them. (Scott.) True and acceptable worship does not depend upon the particular time, or place, or posture, or company, or language, in which it may be performed. It may be offered in silence and secret, beyond the reach of human eye or ear. (Brewster). Whenever we set up any great or weighty business, we must be sure to follow our Savior's steps, in setting some time apart, proportionably to the business we undertake, wherein to ask God's council, and desire his direction and blessing in the most serious and solemn manner that we possibly can. (Beveridge.) It not being positively determined how often we are to perform this duty, it must be left to the discretion of every person to decide this question for himself. Those who have the advantage of easy circumstances and much leisure are to look upon themselves as bound to consecrate a large share of their time to the immediate service of God. But if the circumstances his providence has allotted us in this world be such that we cannot, without prejudice to the necessary business of our lawful callings, retire so often as we would otherwise do, the maxim which the apostle hath laid down in another case will hold equally true in this: If there be a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, (2 Cor. 8: 12) and not according to that he hath not. (Hole).

Christians should pray for one another.

Acts 12: 5: Peter therefore was kept in prison; But prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God for him.

Rom. 1: 9: For God is my witness, whom I serve with my spirit in the gospel of his son, that with out ceasing I make mention of you always in my prayers.

2 Cor. 1: 11: Ye also helping together by prayer for us, that for the gift bestowed upon us by the means of many persons thanks may be given by many on our behalf.

2 Cor. 9: 14: And by their prayer for you, which long after you for the exceeding grace of God in you.

Eph. 1: 15, 16: Wherefore, I also, after I heard of your faith in the Lord Jesus, and love unto all the saints, cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers.

Phil. 1: 3, 4, 9: I thank my God upon every remembrance of you, always in every prayer of mine for you all making request with joy. And this I pray that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment.

Col. 1: 9: For this cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding.

1 Thes. 1: 2: We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers.

1 Thes. 5: 25: Brethren pray for us.

2 Thes. 3: 1: Finally brethren pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified.

2 Tim. 1: 3: I thank God, whom I serve from my forefathers with pure conscience, that without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day.

Philmon 4, 22: I thank my God, making mention of thee always in my prayers. But withal prepare me also a lodging: for I trust that through your prayers I shall be given unto you.

Heb. 13: 18: Pray for us, for we trust we have a good conscience, in all things willing to live honestly.

Intercessions for the welfare of others form a natural part of prayer. The sincere worshiper is not to consider himself as a single being confining his concern wholly to himself. (Blain). If you feel for perishing sinners you will commend them, with tears, to the mercy of God. Our prayers shall be for all, especially for the holy brethren, that is, the church. (Zanchius.) Polycarp, "heartily recommended to God the state of the church throughout the world." The apostle's prayer for Philemon and the church in his house is one which we ought to use in behalf of all men, in whatever circumstances they may be placed; "Grace be to you, and peace, from, God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ," for in this he prays for the favor of God and Christ, and all prosperity to them, which the Hebrews were accustomed to call by the name of peace. (Grotius.) This comprehends deliverance from all evil, restoration to God's favor, and all holiness and happiness in time and in eternity; and there are blessings which we ought to pray for to others as we wish for them to ourselves. (Whyte.)

C. C. Marston.

The Hope of the Dead.

"Of the hope, and resurrection of the dead I am called in question. (Acts 23: 6.)

"Death is the cessation of vitality in that which possessed it. The extinction of life." (Webster.)

In death there is no consciousness. The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence. (Ps. 115: 17,) Here we are informed that those who would otherwise praise the Lord are prevented from doing so by death. Then the thought that death enables man to praise God with greater freedom is incorrect. Solomon says: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might: for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest." (Eccl. 9: 10.)

In death, "also their hatred, and their love, and their envy is now perished." (Eccl. 9: 6.) Then, though the proof from sacred Scripture is absolute that "the dead know not anything;" that their condition is one of unconsciousness, yet are they resting in hope. David said: "My flesh shall also rest in hope." Solomon says: "The wicked is driven away in his wickedness; but the righteous hath hope in his death;" not merely at his death but in his death he hath hope.

What is the hope of the dead? An answer from inspiration is most satisfactory. "Thou shall call and I will answer thee; thou wilt have a desire in the work of thine hands." (Job 14: 15.) "Though after my skin [which the boils had already taken from him] worms destroy [the rest of] this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." But, say you, this is an expression of the hope of a living man! Very well; hope is expectation and desire. An expectation which cannot be disappointed, is everlasting. It never fails till that which its possessor looks for is realized. So our expectation lives during the night of death, and in the resurrection morn is accomplished. Our desire for everlasting life, and our expectation of obtaining it, is based upon the promise of Jesus to raise the dead. Then our hope of future life—after death—is only by a resurrection to immortality. Hence the wording of our text; "Of the hope and resurrection of the dead."

The hope of the dead, then, is for life. The way to the accomplishment of that hope is resurrection. As they are entering that land of darkness, they lean on him who said: "I am the Resurrection and the Life;" who also declared: "I will raise him at the last day." It was for this hope that Paul was called in question. Everywhere this man of God declared this to be his hope. He plainly showed the untruthfulness of the prevalent philosophy, and in so doing brought against himself the opposition of the schools that claimed the natural immortality of man. The Jewish Pharisees, who professedly believed in the resurrection of the dead, were among the opposers of the gospel, because the apostles used the doctrine of the resurrection as inseparably connected with the power of the Prophet of Nazareth. Paul was regarded as a setter-forth of strange gods, because he preached Jesus and the resurrection.

For eighteen centuries the scene has changed but little. The faithful ministers of Christ, who to-day claim and preach the literal resurrection of the dead, and the necessity for the return of God's Son from heaven, to accomplish that resurrection, are among the despised of earth. But they are a God-honored band, and stand associated with Jesus, and the prophets, and apostles, who in years so long gone by, stood to defend the same precious truth. In the day when Zion's King shall come, this honored host will stand complete in him, who, in the days of their trial, weakness and mortality, was their hope; and for whose name they were so frequently called in question, and as frequently showed their loyalty to him, the dearest object of their heart's affection.

Brethren, let us emulate their example. Let us show the same fidelity to the truth and hope of the gospel till the hope and resurrection of the dead shall be accomplished, and we be gathered to our everlasting home.

" " " James Gordon Bennett died Sunday morning. He was a Roman Catheolic, and received the ministrations of that church in his dying hour. He died of old age.

" " " Central Illinois suffered from a miniature deluge Saturday night. At Springfield six inches of rain fell in nine hours. The damage to growing crops must be considerable.

" " " After a long and laborious investigation into the alleged frauds in the affairs of the Methodist Book Concern, the Special Committee made a report yesterday. Summed up briefly, the Committee's report is as follows: The business methods of the department afforded opportunities for frauds which were taken advantage of by subordinates; there has been great lack of system in the book-keeping of the house; the losses sustained are not large enough to impair the capital or financial standing of the Concern; there is no evidence that any agent or assistant agent has been implicated in any frauds on the Concern: the present methods of keeping accounts, though imperfect, are reasonable safeguards against dishonesty: purchasing paper through James P. Porter and the business transaction with Brown Brothers & Co. are both denounced as improper and unauthorized; the Committee have no opinion as to the trustworthiness of the financial exhibit made by the agents of the Book Concern to the General Conference. Furthermore, the Committee find that frauds were committed in the bindery and the manufacturing department while Hoffman was in charge. We have already alluded to the extraordinary performances of this man; and, certainly, his doings justify the charges made by Dr Lanahan. The report is before the General Conference, which will discuss it to-day. But we cannot help congratulating the Conference on the strength of that financial condition which, according to the Committee, can withstand the assaults made on it by such men as Hoffman is proved to be. —*N. " " " The reports of the fearful disaster to the Seal fishing fleet by which 4,000 men lost their lives is not confirmed. It was doubtless a gross exaggeration of a sad though much less fearful loss of life in the wreck of a few vessels.

" " " Persia—the name that once called up visions gorgeous and rich—is still suffering from the terrible famine which has raged so long. Business has been almost entirely given up, and the country is fast becoming depopulated. England sends a ship-load of supplies this month, and other countries will follow her example.

Conference Minutes

Wisconsin.

The Q. M. held in Zion's chapel, Springville, Wis., May 4, 5, commenced Saturday p. m. Some pronounced it the best they ever attended. The attendance was good but not large. The order of the exercises was as follows. At 2 p. m. preaching. Text: "I will therefore that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting." (1 Tim. 2: 8.) At the close of the sermon a Sunday School was organized. All seemed pleased with this arrangement. I may say "the people had a mind to work." Preaching again in the evening from Dan. 12: 1.

Sunday morning at 9: 30, love feast, and good to be there. Many spoke of the wonderful love of God to them, and their families, and friends, saying they took pleasure in bearing the reproach of the gospel while waiting for Jesus. Preaching from Rev. 16: 13, 14. The three unclean spirits, and their work in bringing about the time of trouble was adverted to. After the service we repaired to the water and baptised two believers in the name of Jesus.

Preaching in the evening before the communion; text in Lam. 3: 26. It is good that a man should both hope and patiently wait for the salvation of the Lord. There seemed to be a deep conviction on the minds of the audience, that the time of trouble was near, and it is therefore good to hope and quietly wait for Jesus. I had no help in the ministration of the word but the Master's.

Songs by the Way.

"The statutes have been my songs in the house of my pilgrimage." (Ps. 119: 54.)

I'm a pilgrim, and my journey were a desert one and drear,
But for streams along the pathway,—precious springs of wayside cheer;
Flowers in barren places blooming,—pictures treasured of the skies,
In the sweet home country shining, where the Father's mansions rise.

I'm a pilgrim, and at nightfall, when my weary feet are spent,
All unsandalled and ungirded in the stranger's lonely tent,
I resume my harp and sing, while my heart selects the theme—
Not from loves that grow around me—not the poet's idle dream;

But from ones whose inspiration was the breath of Zion's mount—
Bards that drank the living waters of Shiloah's sacred fount;
And I waken in the sleep-hours, and my heart repeats the strain;
Do I sing, or do I listen to an angel's sweet refrain?

I'm a pilgrim; night and morning bear me farther on my way,
To the home land of my soul, in the bright, eternal day;
But the way has rests of joy, while thy laws my thoughts engage,
For "thy statutes are the songs of my house of pilgrimage."

I'm a pilgrim, and in vision do my yearning eyes behold
Where "jasper walls" and "pearly gates" the blessed ones infold;
And I'll drop my staff with triumph as I near the latest stage,
While the victor's song shall crown all the songs of pilgrimage.

The Short Candle.

As I sat in my chamber, I saw a little girl working by the light of a candle. It was burnt down almost to the socket. I perceived that she plied her needle very fast, and at length I overheard her saying to herself, "I must be very industrious, for this is the only candle I have, and it is almost gone."

What a moral there is, thought I, in the words of this child! Surely I may learn wisdom from it. Life is but a short candle. It is almost gone and I have no other. How earnestly engaged should I then be in every duty of life! While I have the light of life, how careful should I be to perform everything enjoined by my heavenly Master!

I ought to be in haste to work out my own salvation with fear and trembling, knowing that when this light is extinguished, there is no other allowed to mortals for preparation.

I ought to be alive to the eternal interests of my fellow creatures, working while it is called to-day, striving to bring sinners to the Lord Jesus Christ; for my brief candle is soon to go out, and there can be no conversion of sinners in another world.

I ought to be unceasingly active in every act of benevolence, making as many happy as I can, relieving the miserable, and doing good to all within my reach; for this light is soon to be put out, and in the other world the miserable and suffering will be beyond my reach.

I ought to use every talent for the glory of God and the kingdom of Christ, working the works of him that sent me, while it is day, because the night cometh in which no man can work.—Sel.

Unnoticed Riches.

We remember to have heard, many years ago, a short story with a great moral. The story runs thus: When gold was first discovered in North Carolina, every man in the region roundabout began to look with new interest upon the rocks and the earth. An old gentleman had lived many years in a common log dwelling, the space between the logs being daubed—as the local term is—with mortar made of native mud. Looking one day with a careless gaze at the walls, he saw a singular scintillation here and there in the mortar; looking more closely, he discovered the shiny particles all through the mass in every cranny; a more thorough investigation revealed the astounding fact that his old log cabin was daubed with the golden mortar!

The moral is longer than the story. Our hero was rich, without knowing it or appreciating it; he has become an exemplar of a great truth without any intention. Who knows how often he had sighed at life's hard task or groaned under its burdens? Who will say that he had not looked with envious eyes upon more prosperous neighbors, and indulged in ungrateful repinings at his hopeless toil and ill-success in life? And all the time he owned a mine of precious metal, was master of coffers full to their utmost capacity, kept within golden walls. But his eyes were closed; he saw not the glitter of the treasure, read not his title in fee simple to the lavished wealth around him, perhaps dreamed of poverty in his golden abode.

Many there be like this unconscious Crœsus. The air is laden with mercies, yet they breathe heavily and complain of its oppressive impurity. The earth smiles with beauty and bounty, yet they perceive no comeliness in it, and murmur at its sterility. They call life bitter because they will not partake of its sweets. Their lot is hard because they would not have it otherwise. They never enjoy the smiles of fortune because they always look for its frowns. They call God a hard master because he demands labor while he promises wages. They live without grace and die without hope because they open not their eyes and their hearts to the light and the love of God. —Sel.

The First and Second Advents of Christ.

About the time of Christ's first Advent, both the Jews, and also many of the heathen nations, were looking for the appearing of some great personage. On this point Nevins, in his Biblical Antiquities, p. 252, says, "Not only was the expectation of the Messiah universal among the Jews, but there was, likewise, a general agreement about the period when he might be looked for. Ancient prophecy had pointed to the time, as well as the place, of his appearance. (Gen. 49: 10; Dan. 9: 24–27.) It came to pass, accordingly, that in that very age in which our Savior appeared on earth, the people were expecting the promised Deliverer as just at hand. The opinion prevailed, that the time was then come for all to look for the speedy accomplishment of the sure word of prophecy on this subject. Thus Simeon and Anna, and many more in Jerusalem, we are told were waiting. The Samaritans united with the Jews in this hope, and seem, on the whole, to have juster notions than they had of the character of the Messiah. (Jno. 4: 25, 29, 42.) Nor was the expectation confined to the land of Palestine. The Jews being scattered at that time into many foreign countries, caused it to take root in other regions: so that there came to be a general idea through the East, that a great prince was about to rise out of Judea in its low estate, who should obtain supreme dominion in the world. This fact is mentioned by two of the most respectable heathen historians of those times. It was foretold also by the Spirit, that the Messiah should have a fore-runner, to come immediately before him, and prepare, as it were, the way for his manifestation."

Doubtless God sent forth his Spirit to prepare the minds of men for this great event. These expectations were not disappointed. Christ came the promised Savior of the world.

With regard to his first advent, several points are worthy of notice. 1. It had been foretold by many prophecies. 2. Prophetic periods were given pointing to about the time when it should occur. 3. At about the time those prophecies were fulfilled, it was a universal belief, that some great man was about to appear in the world. 4. It is prophesied that a messenger should come before him to proclaim his coming. 5. That messenger came at the right time and did his work. 6. Before that time, no such messenger ever came proclaiming the advent of the Messiah; nor did the people, previous to this time, have any expectation that his coming was near at hand. 7. But when the prophetic periods were accomplished, when the messenger had come and delivered his message, when the minds of the people were prepared for it, then Christ Jesus our Lord came and fulfilled his mission.

Now if we notice carefully, I think that we shall see that similar events will occur at his second advent with a like result. 1. It has been foretold by many prophecies. (Heb. 9: 28; Matt. 24: 30, 31.) 2. Prophetic periods have been given, pointing to about the time when it will occur. (Dan. 2: 7; 8; Matt. 24; Rev. 12: 14, &c.) 3. The prophets declare that just before his coming, a message will go to all the world, to proclaim the approach of that event, as John proclaimed the first. "Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain; let all the inhabitants of the land tremble; for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand." (Joel 2: 1.) The same message is foretold in Rev. 14, 6, 7, where an angel with a loud voice proclaims to all nations, "Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come." 4. The prophetic periods pointing to the second advent have now within a short time been fulfilled. Again we find the same universal belief, or feeling, pervading all minds, that some great event is about to transpire. Thousands are anxiously looking for the advent of their Lord, as was good old Simeon of old. Nor is this expectation confined to Adventists alone. Statesmen, politicians, worldlings, infidels, learned and unlearned, rich and poor, all agree that some great event is just about to occur. This is the universal sentiment of all minds. True they do not all agree as to what that event will be: some think it is one thing, and some another; but all instinctively feel that some mighty revolution is just impending. By turning our eyes to the prophetic word, we may all know what it is: viz., the coming of Christ and the end of the world. 5. The predicted messages of warning to the world which was to usher in the end of the world, and the second advent of Christ has been sounding for over twenty-five years. For this length of time, scores and hundreds of voices have been unanimously proclaiming in tones of thunder, to all nations, that the end of all things is at hand. Papers, books and tracts by the million, have been scattered in all parts of the world proving that Christ is about to appear. These are facts which the most determined unbelievers cannot deny. 6. It is a fact worthy of attention, that no such proclamation ever before went to the world. Never till this present generation did a person or persons arise saying that the last generation had come; but now we find thousands everywhere agreeing and saying that the last generation has come. 7. Will all these prophecies, warnings, and expectations, fail? We answer, No. Just as surely as they did not fail in the first advent, so surely they will not fail in the second. Yes, Jesus is coming, his advent is nigh, he will not disappoint his people. Now is no time to be discouraged. Let us watch and pray, and hold on to our faith a little longer, and we shall obtain the victory.—Review and Herald.

From South Carolina.

Some kind friend has sent me a package of THE TIMES, I suppose for general distribution. It shall be attended to. Please accept my grateful thanks for them. All these papers, pamphlets and tracts, are eagerly sought for and read by the people, and they have made many converts, and are making many more from Plato to Paul, from the Traditions of the Fathers to the simple plain teachings of God's holy and blessed Word. None of the churches are giving the people anything to read, only at very high prices. The great majority of them are poor and not able to buy; and when you come across a religious book, its contents are based upon the same foundation that Mormonism, Swedenborgism, Spiritism, Universalism, Eternal life in torment and every heathen temple and idol worship upon the face of the earth, (viz.) Immortal-soul-ism. Let all the churches in Christendom expunge this master stroke of the devil and Plato from their creeds and teachings, and all these horrid systems of superstition and infidelity, would fall flat to the ground in one day, and the truth, life and immortality only through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, would roll like a sea of glory from pole to pole. As it is, we must be valiant for the truth, amid all these opposing and conflicting creeds and systems. We must not yield one inch from the plain common sense reading of the holy Scriptures. Said Luther, "Beware of Origen and the whole of that Alexandrian school. If you follow them you will be Sophists. If you follow the common sense of the Bible you will be divines."

I am truly glad to see my dear brother, that you are fully alive to these great matters, going to and fro here and there and almost everywhere praying and preaching and writing and traveling day and night, putting the trumpet to your mouth and blowing long and loud in the ears of a dying world and slumbering church to wake them up to look upon the signs of the speedy coming, wondrous and personal advent of the King of kings. Thank the Lord for that grace and power that so wonderfully sustains you.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

WEDNESDAY, May 15. To-day Br. Wright took me out among the farmers, and into some parts of the "burnt district." It is the greatest wonder that they were not all swept away by the flames which surrounded them. But constant care and watchfulness, by the blessing of God, saved most. The lands in all the region of Marlette are rich, and people are fast settling, and making excellent farms. The forest is slowly disappearing before the ax-man and the fire. The land is cheap, and the poor, or those who have inadequate means, can, with industry get good homes in a short time.

We visited a number of families, and spoke to them on the things of the kingdom, some of whom, we hope, will choose the good part that shall not be taken from them. I spoke at night on true Christian character, and the reward of the saints. (Ps. 37: 11.) The interest and the attention was good, and we have signs of faith.

THURSDAY, May 16. To-day Elders Durand, Hicks and Barlow came in to see and help us. They came thirty miles on foot. They are real workers. Br. Wm. C. Hicks was converted at the tent meeting here under Brn. Wright and Durand's labors. He had been a gambler and a fast young man. His conversion was thorough. He soon entered the ministry, and now has a circuit, and is doing a good work. He brought Br. Barlow with him, who has lately received the light, and will now become a fellow laborer. He has been a preacher among the United Brethren, but repudiating the doctrine of endless misery he could not remain longer with them. We hope he may become useful in this field where help is so much needed. Br. Durand is doing a good work in his field in Huron county, and is appreciated by the churches. The fire laid a portion of his circuit desolate, and impoverished the churches, so that his support has fallen off in part. But still he works on, and will be sustained.

I spoke at night on the completeness of redemption, from Is. 44: 21, 22. "I have blotted out thy sins." Brn. Wright, Paton, Hicks and Durand followed me in touching appeals to the unconverted, when quite a good number rose for prayers, confessing the Lord. It was a season of deep and solemn interest. The Lord is with us indeed. I am surprised at the work that is being done in all this region. A wide door is open, and wherever our brethren go they meet with success in the conversion of souls, and organization of churches.

FRIDAY, May 17. We have been visiting again to-day among the farmers, who much appreciate our calls, songs and prayers. It so turned in our walks to-day, that we all met at the house of Br. J. Rector, where we had a Bible conversation on the divinity of Christ, the millennium, coming of Christ, and the destiny of man. It was a kind of a "ministers' meeting," and I trust a profitable one. The young men crowded me with questions which I answered as far as I could by the Bible. These young preachers are sharp, and are ready to speak intelligently on the great themes of the Advent, and the doctrines involved. They are mostly men of "One Book." I do not wonder at their success. Br. Paton, of Almont, Mich., has the advantage of some culture connected with a consecration to unpopular truth. He will honor the cause wherever he may be called to labor. He has a clear logical mind, and can entertain the best class of hearers by sound discourses. I hope his health will allow him to fill the stations to which providence may call him.

At 5 p. m. visited Mr. Albertson. He is not a professor of religion, but has been efficient in introducing the truth here, and in building the new Advent Christian Chapel. He is a fine gentleman, and I hope is "not far from the kingdom." He took his farm here in the rough, and has made the wilderness and the forest bloom. He has now one of th farm homes. So much for persevering industry. Though a professional man, he is a tiller of the ground with his own hands.

He showed me the effects of the late fire, as still manifested all about his premises. Thick woods burned down near him and green trees from two to three feet through were eaten up in an incredibly short time by the devouring element. Husbands, wives, mothers and children all had to watch the fire; for the very air was filled with coals and brands.

I spoke at night. The interest continues intense.

SATURDAY, May 18. Rode ten miles on the road to North Branch, one of the preaching places of Br. Wright, and have called upon Br. Harry Marsh, and dined. He is located in a rich and pleasant part of Lapeer county. He and his family had attended the meeting through the week in Marlette, and enjoyed them much. The people who enjoy few advantages appreciate them all the more.

While waiting for dinner I took up a book which proved to be the life of John Randolph, of Roanoke. Having often heard the incident repeated, of Mr. Randolph's last word, "Remorse," I turned to the chapter relating to his conversion, and also to his death.

In the earlier part of his life he was not a religious man, and was said to be strongly tinctured with the infidelity of the French Revolution. But later he read the Bible, with Protestant commentators, with interest and faith. In 1818 he wrote to a friend, "I am at last reconciled to God, and have assurance of pardon through faith in Christ."

He died June 24, 1833. On his death bed, and just before his decease, he suddenly roused up, and thrice cried—"Remorse," and the last time at the top of his voice. He then said, Get the Dictionary and let me see the word. And none being at hand, he said to his doctor, write it out and let me see it. The doctor took up a card on which was printed John Randolph, Roanoke. "Shall I write it on this card?" "Yes, nothing more proper." The word Remorse was then written in pencil. He took the card in a hurried manner, and fastened his eyes upon it with great intensity. "Write it on the back," he exclaimed—it was so done, and handed him again. He was extremely agitated. "Remorse! You have no idea what it is; you can form no idea of it whatever; it has contributed to bring me to my present situation—and calmly said, but I have looked to the Lord Jesus Christ, and hope I have obtained his pardon." And after the transaction of some business relating to his last will, he ceased to live.

In this case Mr. Randolph was no doubt for the moment overwhelmed with the remembrance of past sins, but in looking to his Savior all was right again.

This anecdote has often been repeated to prove the damnation of Mr. R., and also to show that the endless torments of the lost consist in remorse. But in this case, the testimony of the dying man, "I hope I have obtained pardon," places the case before us in another light. And the idea of endless remorse, either in the intermediate state, in the grave, or after the second death, is without foundation in the word of God. (Eccl. 9: 10; Rev. 20: 13, 14.)

We arrived at the Branch, and put up with Br. Geo. Motte. He is deeply interested in the subject of the second coming of Christ, and has done all he could to spread light on the subject in this community. And he has opened the way for us to speak to-night.

North Branch is a village a few years old, and contains about four hundred inhabitants. They have no chapel as yet, but have meetings of the Baptists, Methodists, and occasional preaching by the Adventists.

I spoke by request on the resurrection. As a rain storm came up at night some were kept away. Still we had good attendance, and attention to the word, and I hope we may gather fruit after many days.

Saturday night has come again, closing another week of time, and to me it is connected with a solemn thought, as it is the last week of sixty-seven years of my mortal life. Three score and seven years ago to-night, I began to live in the town of Wickford, R. I. And so I have lived and witnessed the wonderful events of the greater part of the 19th century, from May 19 1805, to May 19, 1872. In this time all the most wonderful inventions and discoveries of the world have been made. But the most interesting things to me are those which relate to the increase of knowledge on prophecy which relates to the events of the closing of the gospel dispensation. (Dan. 12: 4.)

The French revolution, which opened in 1789, was the fulfillment of the great "earthquake," of Rev. 11: 13, and the completion of the "second woe," opening the way for the "third woe to come quickly," with the sounding of the seventh angel, which is to bring the judgment. In this revelation, the two witnesses (the Old and New Testaments) were slain and afterwards raised from the dead, and triumphed over their enemies, by their universal circulation. And this angel having the everlasting gospel, flying through the midst of heaven (Rev. 14: 6), commenced his flight and work. And the gospel of the kingdom has since been proclaimed world wide. And soon we are to witness the last advent of the Son of God, the future Ruler of this planet. I thank God that he has given me to live in these last days, amid the signs and wonders which were to precede the coming of the Son of Man.

SABBATH, May 19. To-day I begin my sixty-eighth year. And if the Lord does not come soon, I must lie down, and sleep with Job, Joshua, Moses and the fathers, to await the resurrection. "My record is on high" and I shall be ready to meet it in that day, when I hope to be saved through grace.

The past thirty years of my life have been filled with active labor, amid great conflict and strife. Opposition from the church, and the world without, has been fierce and strong. All manner of evil has been said of me, and I have been made of no reputation. At the same time, I have suffered from some who have professed the same faith. Friends have, from various causes, become the most bitter and unrelenting enemies. But I am still sustained in the position that providence seemed to place me, and I only pray I may have grace to finish the work given me to do. "I will," in the words of David (Ps. 71: 14, 16), "hope continually and yet praise thee more and more. My mouth shall show forth thy righteousness, and thy salvation all the day, for I know not the numbers thereof. I will go in the strength of the Lord God: I will make mention of thy rigeteousness, even of thine only. Oh God! thou hast taught me from my youth; and hitherto I have declared thy wondrous works. And now, when I am old and gray headed, O, God, forsake me not," until my work is done.

I spoke at 10 a. m. in the Advent chapel in Marlette. My theme was "the blessed hope." Glorious, glorious hope! Jesus is coming soon to give us immortality. In the p. m. we rode six miles into the thick forest to find water for baptism. It was a rough way indeed, but though rough and wild, it was beautiful. We found a few settlers who greeted us, among whom was Br. Smith and sons, of whose hospitality we partook, Br. Wright immersed three heads of families. We had a glorious scene at the water. God was with us.

We returned at eventide, when I spoke from Is. 26: 3, after which, administered the Lord's Supper, at which Br. W. gave the hand of fellowship to three new members. The house was filled, and there was deep interest. And more are coming to the Lord. God is with this church. It is a strong and healthy interest, and will be as "light" and "salt" in this new and wild region.

They are to finish their new chapel at once, and will be able to pay for it, and so be out of debt. The Lord bless and prosper them more and more.

MONDAY, May 20. Parted with friends from Cairo, and many other places, and the dear ones in Marlette. While in town we enjoyed the hospitality of Br. and Sr. Morris, at the Temperance Hotel. They keep an excellent house, and make strangers feel at home; in a Christian home, too. Many thanks for their hospitality to us, and many friends.

Br. and Sr. Hicks were pressed to remain and hold the meeting over another week. The interest seemed to demand it. The Lord give them great success. My acquaintance with Br. H. and wife was favorable. I look upon them as "brands plucked from the burning." And the Lord has called them to a great and good work. May they be faithful.

At 10 a. m. we left for Elk, and dined with Br. Smaifield, and in the p. m. called upon others of the flock to cheer them. At night I spoke on the signs of the near coming of the Lord, which much cheered the waiting ones. They were very anxious to have us tarry longer, and we should but for other engagements. They need sympathy and help. We were kindly entertained by Br. John Vanest.

TUESDAY, May 21. Came on fifteen miles to Brockway Center. This is a new village of a few hundred inhabitants. Brn. Wright and Mackie raised a church here about two years ago. Arrangements were made to build a chapel, which is now about completed. I am to speak in it to-night. Br. Mackie has supplied the church. As the Advent Christian Chapel is the only one in town, they intend to make an effort now to have more preaching. This is the fourth chapel that has been put up in this field of labor within the last year. It shows that earnest labor in the Advent cause is not in vain. These chapels are all of good size and will accommodate from two to three hundred people.

I have now traveled over the most of Br. Wright's circuit, and one or two places which are supplied by Br. Mackie. I am surprised at the work that has been done. A great and blessed interest has been awakened for the truth, and a healthy and strong cause has been established. The brethren need help in this department. They have too much work on their hands, and it is increasing.

The late fires affected some of this people, but not to the extent in other portions of the Advent field. Br. Wright, with all the others, is much liked for his faithfulness and promptness. Also for his love of the flocks, and tender care for them mid storm and sunshine, with or without compensation, as the case may be. The longer they remain, the stronger the attachment. Br. Wright has a wide influence outside of the Advent interest, and seems to be respected by all except the sectarian and bigoted, who feel that his influence is against theirs. I am happy to bear this testimony to Br. W. and his work. It is but justice to him and his fellow-laborers. Br. W. is a genial, loving spirit. He treats all, both friends and foes, with Christian courtesy and kindness. His life is that of a Christian, and God is with him. In his public services he is never tedious. His sermons on an average are about thirty-five or forty minutes in length. Those who hear him once want to hear him again. His audiences are generally full, and his meetings are very effective. He is almost always in a revival, and gathering souls to Christ. I wish we had more such brethren as these in Eastern Michigan. When he began work in this region, the brethren gave him a beautiful white horse for his missionary work. They call him "George, the missionary." He is strong, steady and faithful, and is looked upon as one of the laborers in his place, in helping on the cause. George carries the missionaries, and the books, and the tracts, and always makes good time. The people are always glad to see "George," as well as his master, and he always gets the best fare. I think well of "Bill," who carries Br. Whitney over the hills of West Virginia, to meet his appointments, and "George," who carries Br. Wright around his circuit, and "Old Rock," who carried me over the hills and through the forests of Arkansas. God bless these faithful servants.

In our theology we take the ground that man is not above the beast as regards his mortal nature. "All are of the dust, and all return to the dust again." And in this respect man has no pre-eminence above the beast. (Eccl. 3: 19.) But man has a higher organization. He is made a little lower than the angels, and is crowned with glory and honor, and designed, if he so elect, for immortality. But I would not object to the views of Dr. Adam Clarke, in his comments on Eccl. 3: 21, in the resurrection of some beasts at least, and especially the faithful ones who have done so much for the church.

At night the new chapel was crowded and much interest was manifested to hear while I discoursed on the prophecies relating to the first and second coming of the Lord. Br. Paton came just at meeting time, from Almont, and took part in the service, with Br. Wright. It was a glorious time indeed. The interest here is large, and must be cared for. The leading men of the town are favorable to us.

The chapel is being finished and will be paid for. This is indeed a large and important field. May the Lord provide a faithful minister, now that he has "set before them an open door."

As in all such cases of success and prosperity, we have had opposition. At the time of the tent meeting, vile persons stole from the tent, and burned a large lot of books. One professor of religion wanted to hire a rowdy boy to cut the tent ropes. But the meeting was a great success. Soon after the church was organized, and while they were building the chapel, the Seventh-day Sabbath keepers pitched their tent in town, and with three preachers kept up a meeting for six weeks, by the direction of Mrs. White, their prophetess. The Lord saved the church, as not one of them was moved away from the truth. But a small church in Greenwood, a few miles out, was perverted. Having some among them that were favorable to keeping the Jewish Sabbath, they were easily led off. And Br. Mackie, being in charge let them take their choice without a conflict. But the Advent cause stands stronger for their effort.

We live in a land of freedom. Religious liberty is the birthright of all. Our government cannot interfere with the rights of its citizens to worship God according to the dictates of their conscience. They can keep the first day or the seventh, or no day, as they please, so they do not interfere with the rights of others.

It would be a great sin, and a wrong for those who profess to be Christians, to persecute those who differ from them. We cannot do it and be Christians. But when we plant churches, it is our right and duty to take care of them. And if people come among us and profess to be Adventists, and get the sympathy of our people, and then introduce the Jewish law and Sabbath with visions of human origin as of equal authority with the Bible, then we claim the right to state the facts, and save the cause. And this we do not call persecution, but serving God, and a proper care of his cause. As Adventists, we neither conceal our name, object or doctrines. It is no part of our business to deceive the community. And when men come among us and profess to be of us, all we ask is, that they state in the beginning their views and objects. Then we shall know what to do.

WEDNESDAY, May 22. We parted with Eld. Paton, and the dear friends in Brockway Center this a. m. and rode twenty-five miles in an open buggy, in a heavy rain storm. We called at Br. Sischo's Log Cabin and ate dinner, and warmed, and then pushed our way, and arrived at Lexington just at night, cold, wet and weary. We had an appointment six miles away on the Ridge, but the storm prevented our attendance.

Our Young Folks.

A Sum in Addition.

We propose to the children the following sum in addition, and should be very glad if some of them will work them out, prove the answer and send it to us. We find it in an old book which contains some letters written a great many years ago by a good man named Peter. Perhaps some of the little girls can find the book in their Pa's library; "Add to your faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity." What will the whole make?

Albert's Conscience.

When Albert was eleven years old, his father and mother made him a present of a very interesting little book, and as soon as he had thanked them for it, he and his brother William ran up stairs to the play-room to read. A fine rest that day had all their games; even the ringing of the bell was not answered with the usual promptness.

They spent the morning and afternoon in reading, and were more than half through the book and growing very anxious about the hero, when the hall clock struck five, and in a moment Albert ceased reading, saying, "We must not read any more now, it is twilight."

"Nonsense," said William, "It is not dark yet; we can see perfectly well to read for half an hour."

"I was reading yesterday afternoon at this time," said Albert, "and mother said it was too late, and when I told her I could see, she said she knew I could, but that I was trying my eyes, and that during the next few months I must not read after five o'clock. How fast the afternoon has gone!"

"Well," said William, "she did not tell me I should not read, so I suppose I can have the book."

"You can do as you choose," said Albert. "I shall not read till the lamps are lighted."

William read a few words and threw the book aside, and said, "I will wait until you are ready to read: Albert, I would rather not do a thing that mother has told us not to do, and if she should come in the room now, I think she would tell me not to read. So let us have some fun, I am real tired of sitting still."

They were both very tired, for they had not moved from the window since dinner, so they amused themselves a little while jumping over chairs, hopping on one foot and then on the other, walking on their heels, and then on their toes, till it grew dark. Then they took the book and ran down stairs. They read till the tea-bell rang, and then the moment tea was over, they seized the delightful book again. They were now nearly through; it would certainly not take them long to finish the story, when alas! their mother said, "Now my dear boys, you have read enough for one day, you must not read any more."

This was a great disappointment, but Albert said nothing; he closed the book immediately, and very pleasantly talked to his mother about the story. Soon after this they went to the nursery, taking the book with them for they could not be separated from their little hero, not even during the night.

Nurse was a good kind woman, and when she saw the boys she exclaimed, "Well, boys; what brings you here?" Come to read, eh?"

"No," said Albert, "we cannot read any more to-night. Oh! dear, I do wish we knew the rest of the story."

"Well, why don't you come here to the table and read, there's plenty of room and a bright light."

"Mother says we must not read any more to-night," said Albert.

"Well," said the nurse, "if that is the case, I will read to you; your mother will not object to that: how far have you read?"

Albert gave her the book, and showed her where they were reading.

"Why, you have nearly finished," she exclaimed; "it will not take long to read the rest."

"But, nurse," said Albert, "I think you ought not no read it to us after mother said we must put the book away."

"Oh! she only meant that you must not read any more. If I read to you that will be a very different thing from your reading."

Nurse began to read, but before she had finished one page Albert interrupted her.

"Nurse, I don't feel easy to let you read; I know mother won't like it. I would rather wait till to-morrow, wouldn't you, William?"

"No," said William, "I would rather nurse would finish it to-night."

"Well now, Albert," said the nurse, "I dont want you to do anything that is wrong. I think your mother doesn't want you to read, because you have weak eyes; I dont believe she would object if I should finish this story for you."

"I would rather wait till to-morrow," said Albert resolutely.

"Well," said nurse, "I'll go down stairs and ask your mother, if that will make you feel any more comfortable."

"Well, I wish you would," cried Albert quickly.

In a few moments the nurse returned, but not alone; their mother was with her.

"My dear Albert," she said, "I have come to tell you how gratified I am that you listen to the voice of your conscience. Always be as careful as you have been to-night, and you will save yourself many a sorrow. I only objected to your reading on account of your eyesight. I now give you both permission to sit up untill nurse reads the rest of the story to you."—School-day Visitor.

Ministerial Failures.

In a recent sermon delivered before the students of Unoin Seminary in this city, Dr. Crosby spoke of the failures of many of his early associates. He said:

"I know some men that started out in life with me, who, so far as usefulness goes, are wrecks. I do not mean that they are not good men, for they are earnest and sincere Christians. now it is important to know why they have failed. In one man a single thing has been the cause; he could not keep his tongue; he spoke out every thing that he knew; and set everybody by the ears. This habit will always destroy, not only comfort, which is a secondary consideration, but usefulness and influence. In another man, his manner of going to church has ruined him; it is about what one would expect of a rowdy entering a bar-room. He would shie his hat under the desk, and in prayer would turn around and start for his seat before he had said the Amen.

Another good man has lost his influence because he loves and drives fast horses. Another of truly fine character and of a strong mind is powerles and cannot get a church simply because he will not make the acquaintance of soap and water. After all, common sense is what is most needed. Adapt yourselves to all circumstances. Do not be governed by preconceived theories, but let them bend to the actual wants of the occasion. Thus you can make yourselves acceptable to others."

A New Letter Tract.

We have just prepared a new letter tract, designed for Business Men and others, for short communications. Three pages contain, in print, Prof. Ives' tersely written tract—Scripture versus Popular Misconceptions.

One page is ruled, commercial note size. It is on fine paper, nicely printed, and will be a quiet but most effective way of introducing Bible doctrine.

On orders of not less than one Ream (480 sheets), we will print the writer's name and address at the head of the ruled page. $5 a ream, postal or express charges pre-paid. Without the printed name and P. O. address, $4 a ream; $2 for a half ream; $1.25 for quarter ream; 25 sheets, 50c.

A NOBLE MONUMENT.—There are few who realize the wealth of information contained in the later editions of Webster's dictionary. Its cuts, each worth a page of description, its dictionary of noted names of fiction, familiarity with which is as indispensable to a man of any pretentions to cultivation as a knowledge of history, and its numberless other advantages, conspire to mark it to day as the noblest monument to patient literary labor and enterprise of this age, if not of any. To possess and habitually use it, will alone almost compensate for the want of a liberal education.—Missouri Journal of Education.

Obituary.

DAVIS. Fell on sleep, May 26, 1872, at the residence of his father, near Denver, Ill. Henry M. Davis, aged 24 years, and 15 days.

Br. Davis moved to Illinois from Ohio, about three years ago, making his home in his father's family, and engaged with him in the labors of the farm. He was converted and united with the Baptist Church some ten years ago, but, like many others, he for a time lost his first love, and became to a degree cold. In this condition the hand of sickness and suffering was laid upon him. He again, with his whole heart, sougt and found a Savior precious. Through nearly all his sickness, which lasted some months, he was enabled to rejoice in a Savior's love; and as he neared the dark valley, his peace was like a river, broad, deep, and perfect. A short time before his death, the veil seemed to be raised, and he was permitted to obtain a glimpse of the glorious kingdom of God; but his extreme weakness would not permit him to paint the picture he had seen, for the loved ones weeping around his bed. He wished to speak to them of the glories he had seen, but could not.

He leaves an aged father and mother, a number of brothers and sisters, and a large circle of friends to mourn. God grant the dear ones grace and strength for their deep affliction and finally a home in his glorious kingdom. GEO. W. HURD.

BLACKBURN. At Toulon, Ill. May 26, Rachel Ann Blackburn, wife of Benj. Blackburn: aged 26 years, 7 months, 8 days.

After an illness of many months and prostration upon her bed for eleven weeks, she finally breathed her last with scarcely a struggle. The blessed hope was a great comfort to our sister during her illness. She loved to read about it in her Bible. She manifested her faith in Christ about two years ago by baptism: and from the evidence she gave to the last, we trust that as she was "planted together in the likeness of his death, she shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." After reading Ps. 146, and comparing it with 1 Cor. 15 to comfort our hearts, we laid her away until Jesus comes.

"Asleep in Jesus; soon to rise,
When the last trump shall rend the skies:
Then burst the fetters of the tomb,
To wake in full immortal bloom."

In accordance with a vote of our State Conference a State Campmeeting will be held in the beautiful grove called "Cheatham's Grove," in Utica, Winona Co., commencing Thursday, June 27, and holding over the ensuing Sunday, and as much longer as deemed practicable. The ground is well fitted up for meetings, with permanent stands and seats; also a good well of water and other conveniences for those wishing to camp on the ground.

Brethren and sisters of the Advent faith throughout Minnesota, to you a special appeal is made to come out to this feast of tabernacles and work for God. Come from every quarter; come with hearts burning with the love of God, to work for the salvation of perishing souls. The signs portend the speedy coming of the Master. Shall we not improve t[illegible] [illegible] gatherings, as God requires us to do, [illegible], to our own growth in grace, and [illegible] tion of others?

E. H. WHEELER'S
IMPROVED
AXLE & THIMBLE SKEIN
PATENTED JAN. 12, 1872.

THE LIGHTEST, STRONGEST, AND BEST AXLE BEFORE THE PUBLIC.

Less liable to break, and cannot spring under any amount of weight that can be put upon it.

It takes a smaller sized axle and bolster or sand-board than the same sized skeins of common style; is more simple and easier to fit, the skein being of uniform taper, without shoulders upon the inside a better fit is secured. The axle can be turned in a common lathe to fit the thimble, by putting one end out of center.

The arm, or spindle, is so made as to secure the proper set of the wheels, when moderately dished, with the bottom line of the spindle on a parallel line to the bottom of the axle, an important principle never before attained. The set of the wheels is a perpendicular or right angle to the bottom line of the axle upon the face of the spokes, upon their lower half.

This cut shows the thimble and lug for the tension rod across the bottom of the axle, from thimble to thimble, and the socket for the bolster, or the sand-board, as the case may be. I also use a sand guard to keep the dirt out of the shoulder of the hub; but it is not shown in this cut.

RIGHTS FOR SALE.

Sample thimble skeins furnished to purchasers of rights, at actual cost. For further information address E. H. WHEELER, Memphis, Scotland county, Missouri.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, June 11, 1872.

The Restitution of all Things.

1. FUTURE PUNISHMENT for the sins of the present life is universally allowed to be taught in Scripture; but with respect to its nature and duration very opposite opinions have been and are maintained as being each of them the doctrine of God's word. We speak only of punishment inflicted subsequent to the general Resurrection and the day of judgment.

2. There are three main opinions relative to this punishment. One of these makes it to be of a purgative nature, to be temporary in its duration, and to have as its end the restoration of all to God's favor and eternal happiness. This was the theory of Origen. The second opinion makes punishment to be eternal in its duration, and to consist in an eternal life of misery and evil. This was the theory of Augustine. According to the third opinion punishment is eternal, but it consists in eternal death—i. e., the loss of eternal life or existence. This death is attended and preceded by such various degrees of pain as God in his justice and wisdom thinks fit to inflict. The third of these is the opinion here maintained. Its establishment sets the others aside. Its eternal duration overthrows that of Origen; its character involving a state of death, overthrows alike that of Origen and Augustine. We rest the proof of it on the express, oft-repeated, and harmonious testimony of Scripture.

3. With respect to the eternity of future punishment we will here be brief. To us, as to the great majority of Christians, it has always appeared that, as clearly as Scripture teaches that there will be punishment, with the same clearness it teaches that punishment to be eternal—without end.

4. In the first place its duration in the very same terms as the life of the redeemed: "These," saith Christ, speaking of the reprobate, "shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." Here the same Greek word is used for the duration of these oppotite states. If we suppose the life of the righteous to be everlasting, we must allow the punishment of the wicked to be everlasting also.

5. Again: our Lord has repeatedly declared that there are persons who, at no time, and under no change of dispensation, shall have forgiveness: "Whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come." This is wholly inconsistent with the idea that such persons should, after any period of punishment, enter into the peace of God.

6. What Christ has here said of one class of sinners he has elsewhere said in equally strong language of all who reject him: "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." If, after a certain purgation, such men passed from a state of punishment into one of bliss, these words of Christ would not be true; for such men would see life—on such men the wrath of God would not abide.

7. Again: there are persons of whom our Lord affirms that it would have been better for them "if they had not been born." Such an affirmation is incompatible with the idea that they should, after any conceivable punishment was over, enter upon a life of bliss. The first moment of release would make amends for all past suffering; throughout eternity they would praise God that they had been born.

8. For these and other reasons which will appear in the course of our inquiry, we are persuaded that punishment will be of eternal duration. The judgment once passed, God holds out no hope beyond. Man now makes his choice of one or other of two conditions, each of which will be alike eternal. In this respect we fully agree with the theory of Augustine.

9. In what will the eternal state of the lost consist? This is now our question. We hold that it will not consist in an eternal life spent in pain of body or remorse of mind, but that a state of utter death and destruction is that state which will abide forever. The length of time which this process of dissolution may take, and the degrees of bodily or mental pain which may precede and produce it, are questions which we must leave to that providence of God which will rule in hell as in heaven. Scope is here provided for that great variety of punishment which the reprobate will suffer hereafter, from which in its justice is terrible to that which, with equal justice, is scarcely felt at all.

10. It will be well here to say a few words on the reason which has from a very ancient period led the majority of Christians to hold the theory of an eternal life misery, as it will be requisite to show that this reason is without foundation, before we proceed to the establishment of our own view. It will be seen that this same reason led another class of minds with a like irresistable force and with and equal propriety to the other great error here controverted—viz., Universal Restoration.

11. Before the preaching of the gospel the highest order of heathen philosophy had framed a theory of the immortality of the soul. While the great mass of mankind had absolutely no hope of any future life (Eph. 2: 12, 1 Thess. 4: 13), and while far the greater number of philosophers taught that death was for all eternal sleep, there were some few "high spirits of old" that strained their eyes to see beyond the clouds of time the dawning of immortality. Unable, as we are able, to connect it with God as its source, and with his promise as with assurance, they framed the idea of an immortality self-existing in the soul itself. Socrates and his great pupil Plato, were the chief advocates of this idea. Th y did not indeed teach it all consistently, nor do they themselves appear to have relied with any firmness on its reality, but it was at least a bright idea which kindled their imagination and afforded a theme for their logical powers. According to them the soul was possessed of an inherent immortality. It had no beginning and could have no end. What was true of one soul was true of all souls, good or bad. They must live somewhere, be it in misery or bliss. This idea, sublime for a heathen, passed early into the Christian Church. We find it pervading the reasoning of many of the fathers. Heedless of Paul's warning voice (Col. 2: 8) against philosophy, they became the feeble apes of Plato. They taught that the life of the wicked must be as eternal as the life of those here redeemed and brought to Christ.

12. A moment's reflection will show us that a dogma of this kind could not remain idle. It must influence in one direction or another this whole question of future punishment. It must mould the entire doctrine of the church upon the subject. According as men connected it with one truth of Scripture or with another it must give rise to two opposite schools of thought. Connect the immortality of the soul with the Scriptural doctrine of the eternity of punishment, and you inevitably create the dogma of eternal life in misery—i. e. of Augustine's hell. Connect it with another great truth of Scripture—the final extinction of evil and restitution of all things, and you as inevitably create Origen's Universal Restoration. For each of these opposing theories there is exactly the same amount of proof—viz., Plato's dogma and a dogma of the Bible; and if Plato's dogma could be proved to be a Scriptural doctrine, then by every law of logic Scripture would be found supporting two contradictory theories.

13. Accordingly this philosophical idea of Plato is found influencing the interpretation of Scripture from the second century down to our day. The fathers as a general rule considered the question of future punishment under the impression that every soul of man was immortal. It is true, indeed, that they did not attach to the soul the idea of an essential immortality and an existence from all eternity as Plato did. They generally acknowledged it as the creation of God, having a beginning in time, and would doubtless allow that he who had given it existence could take that existence away. But in supposing that God gave to the soul an inalienable existence—i. e., an immortality not affected by any conduct upon man's part, of which no creature could deprive it, and of which God would not deprive it, they in effect laid down a dogma which had the very same influence upon their views of future punishment as if they had adopted the dogma of Plato to its fullest extent. An immortality that never would be taken from the soul, and an immortality that never could be taken from it, would have precisely the same bearing upon the future of man: in either case man must live on forever whether in misery or in happiness.

14. Now, the immortality of the soul, whether as held by Plato or by the fathers, was a mere fancy of the human mind. As to any essential immortality which belonged to it of its own proper nature, there is perhaps not a single Christian writer or thinker who dares to maintain it. It was, as Pliny called it, a figment; and even Socrates, with all his noble longings, evidently feared that after all his favorite notion was no sounder than the figment which the Epicurean Pliny contemptuously called it. Scripture denies it. An essential immortality it does not allow to be the attribute of any creature, however exalted. To one being only—to God—does it allow to have "life in himself;" of one being only—God—does it allow such an immortality to be an attribute. (John 5: 26; 1 Tim. 6: 16.) Here, as in everything else, Scripture is the book of the highest reason. That which has had a beginning may have an end. That on which God has bestowed life, he may and can inflict death. The highest intelligences as much as the lowest must depend on him for the continuance of their life. Let him withdraw his sustaining power, and the mighty archangel becomes a thing of naught as completely as the insect which dances in the sunbeams for an hour and then passes away forever.

15. The idea that God has bestowed upon man or upon any part of human nature an inalienable immortality finds just as little sanction in the Scriptures. The expression "immortality of the soul," so common in theology, is not once found in the Bible from beginning to end. In vain do men, bent on sustaining a human figment, ransack Scripture for some expression which may be tortured into giving it an apparent countenance. The phrase, "living soul," applieth to man at his creation (Gen. 2: 7) has been by many Christian writers, utterly ignorant of Hebrew, supposed to imply such an immortality. The very same phrase, however, in the original language of Scripture, has been applied to the lower creation before it was applied to man (Gen. 1: 20, 21). The threefold description of man, as having body, soul and spirit, has been by others supposed significant of his inalienable immortality. Whatever be meant by this distinction it cannot in any measure support the inference based upon it as the lower creatures are allowed in Scripture to be possessed not merely of body and soul, but of spirit likewise (Gen. 7: 15, 22; Ps. 104: 29; Eccl. 8: 19-21).

16. But an inalienable immortality is expressly asserted by Scripture not to have been bestowed upon man at his creation. We do not deny that man was made in God's image, and that a very important part of this resemblance consisted in man's not being subject to death as the lower creatures were. Immortality was given to man at his creation. This priceless gift was one of the gifts which a bountiful Creator bestowed upon a favored creature. But it was alienable. It might be parted with; it might be thrown away; it might be lost. So he the law-giver said when in giving immortality he also added the warning, "In the day thou eatest thou shalt die." What is more, this immortality was alienated; this priceless gift was thrown away and lost. Man sinned and lost his immortality. Man, made in the image of God, lost the image. So God said when to fallen Adam he declared, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return" (Gen. 3; 19). Sinful man is not by nature immortal, but mortal. He has lowered himself to a level with the beasts that perish.

If immortality is to be his again, it must be a gift restored and not inherited. It must become his by virtue of some new provision of grace which reinstates him in the place he lost. This was the gospel of Christ. It was to give back the eternal life which man had forfeited that he came into the world; but subsequent examination will show that he does not bestow this priceless gift on all, but on some only of the fallen race (John 5: 24: 40).

17. Before we proceed to establish our view of future punishment by the testimony of Scripture, it will be necessary that we remove an objection very commonly made to it, and which has great influence with very many minds. The objection is this, that what is no longer felt to be punishment by the party who is punished is no punishment at all; that it ceased to be punishment the moment it ceased to be sensibly felt. We hold, on the contrary, that the loss of life after it has been taken is just as much a punishment as its actual infliction, and that as the life lost by the sinner is an eternal life, its loss is to him an eternal injury and punishment.

18. And here the first death affords a perfect analogy to the second. From the earliest records of our race, capital punishment has been reckoned as not only the greatest but also as the most lasting of all punishment, and it is only reckoned the greatest because it is the most lasting. A flogging inflicted on a petty thief inflicts more actual pain than decapitation or hanging inflicts upon a murderer. Why, then, is it greater and more lasting? Because it has deprived the sufferer of every hour of that life which but for it he would have had. Its duration is supposed co-existent with the period of his natural life. "The laws," says Augustine, "do not estimate the punishment of a criminal by the brief period during which he is being put to death, but by their removing him forever from the company of living men."

19. The conclusion drawn from this is sometimes sought to be got rid of by representing the real punishment of death to consist in its exposing the party put to death to those sufferings which are supposed to follow death in the intermediate state. Whatever may be believed of the reality of such sufferings in the intermediate state, it is, however, certain that human governments in their apportionment of punishments never took any consideration of this kind into their thoughts at all. Death, as a legal punishment, is reckoned the very same punishment, whatever be the character of the person thus punished, or whatever be the opinion of the condition of the intermediate state. The idea of death as the most lasting punishment has not been confined to Christian nations, or to believers in future rewards and punishments, but was accepted before the time of the gospel, and by men and nations who did not believe in a future life at all. The Sadducee, the Epicurean, and the Atheist, held it just as well as the Platonic philosopher, the Christian Father or the Egyptian priest. Justin Martyr expresses the idea well when, speaking of heathen persecutors who, he expressly states, "believed that there is nothing after death," he says, "they kill us with no intention of delivering us, but cut us off that we may be deprived of life and pleasure."

20. Now all this is readily applied to the future life and to future punishment. The loss of every year of the life which the sinner might have had but for his sin is a punishment, and because the life is eternal the punishment is eternal also. There is no straining of argument to make out a case. The argument is one which man's judgment in every age has approved as just. "May it not," says the great divine Witsius, who himself held the doctrine of eternal misery, "may it not, in its measure, be reckoned an infinite punishment, should God please to doom man, who was by nature a candidate for immortality, to total annihilation from whence he should never be suffered to return to life?" (Covenants 1. 5. 42). (To be continued.)

A Sermon.

"Let your speech be alway with grace." (Col. 4 : 6.)

The common acceptation of the word grace is love or favor. Hence, to bring this text into harmony with that idea, we should read it—"Let your speech be alway with love." The Greek word logus, here rendered speech, occurs in the New Testament two hundred and thirty times, and is rendered speech only six times; and in each of these instances it could more acceptably be rendered words, or sayings. Then this text might properly be read—"Let your words be alway with love."

Lodged beneath the folds of this text, is that principle of principles which underlies the foundation of all our blessings. It is the chief and ruling attribute of Divinity, and its adaptation to humanity is manifest in all the relations of man. Displace it and anarchy fills every heart, and the fairest clime is soon converted into a dreary waste. Disrobe Deity of this principle of love, and the purest that ever beat within the breast of man would disclose iniquity enough to guarantee its damnation.

Take this principle from him who is declared to be love, and the annihilation of man would soon follow. From it flows every blessing. No sane mind that will allow itself a moment's reflection in this direction, will fail to discover this glorious truth, that "from him cometh every good and perfect gift." This truth is seen pinnacled on every hill-top. For the "cattle on a thousand hills" belong to the Lord. The gilded grain of yonder field bears testimony to the same truth. "For he sendeth the rain and snow down from heaven, and it watereth the earth, that it may give seed to the sower. and bread to the eater." It is seen in the flowery garb of yonder trees, while faith rejoices in view of the golden fruits of a coming harvest.

Take from the courts of heaven this transcending principle, and judgments severe would be our constant lot. Let the fountain of God's love be dried up, and every hope of man is blasted at once. Let him who holds in his fist the waters of heaven withhold the rain for twelve months, and earth's granaries are emptied, and her proud sons soon fall an easy prey to famine's victorious march. Let him who bade yonder sun radiate his light and heat, spreading every orb with its gilded rays, cover his disk for a year —and the perpetual night of the polar regions would bear no comparison to the total darkness that would pervade the entire universe of God as the entire earth would be; veiled in impenetrable darkness.

Thus we see the importance of God's love in the perpetuity of temporal blessings. And when we turn our attention to the eternal blessings promised in revelation, we are lost in wonder that the beneficence of a just and holy being should thus be extended to sinful man. The eternal life; the immortal body; the companionship of angels; the re-union of loved ones; the countless congregation of the good; the everlasting reign with Christ amid trees of life in fields of glory; all earth made beautiful, and delivered up to the King of kings and Lord of lords, as his own rightful inheritance;—can such thoughts fail to disclose the love of God in his dealings with us. Now let us bring the text to a direct application to ourselves and see if we do not need its savory power in the discharge of our social responsibilities. "Let your words be alway with love." There is no relationship that man sustains to his fellows that offers an excuse for unkind words; and yet where is there a heart that does not feel rebuked by such a statement?

But few realize the importance of words. The wise man has said "Words, fitly spoken, are like apples of gold in pitchers of silver." The words of the wise are as goads, and as nails fastened by the master of assemblies. They afford a weapon by which the direct foe may be disarmed, if properly wielded. They are the index of the heart; "for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." They are the garb of thought, without which thought would die unclothed and undeveloped.

Could we but view the joy and peace choice words are sure to impart, how reluctant we should be to speak unkindly to any. How often it is the case when a tempted soul, just ready to yield to the artful foe of man, might be saved from ruin by a kind word. And yet words of bitterness more frequently fall on his ear, under such trying moments than words of kindness. By some means we are more prone to to rebuke than to pity, although doing it is like Satan's rebuking sin; for while we rebuke another, we reprove ourselves.

There is nothing so effective in winning friends as kind words. That ruler need not fear the usurpation of his throne, while he addresses his subordinates with words of kindness. Go to the farmer who always gets the highest price for his produce, and ever meets with a ready sale, and nine times out of ten he is a man of kind words. So that if policy only were our principle, it were far better to "let our words be always with love."

But when we view ourselves in the light of Christianity nothing is more unbecoming than unkind words. It cannot be expected that we shall be instrumental in causing our fellows to embrace Christianity, as a desirable thing, unless we show its advantages over the natural state of the heart; and if a heart renewed does not develop that in words characteristic of its state, through what medium shall we look for a change? Does the admonition, "Be ye wise as serpents, and harmless as doves," bespeak aught but kindness?

That Christian who indulges in unkind words betrays a spirit foreign to that of Christ. I am not speaking of chastity of address, when I speak of kind words; for the most bitter words may be presented in the most eloquent strains; and the most loving words may flow from a heart whose lips have never been trained in the school of etiquette. There is but one element that will beget within the heart words of kindness. How does that mother win the affections of her child? Is it by unkind words or acts that she becomes the most attractive being on earth to the child? Is it not rather those gentle caresses, and loving smiles, and kindly acts, that clasp the arms of the little one about her neck so closely? That unselfish love, flowing from a mother's heart, does not fail of reciprocation. Are the words of kindness she utters the result of formal teaching? or are they not prompted by the predominating element of love that reigns in her bosom? "He that loveth not, knoweth not God, for God is love." Let this principle rule in the heart, and nought but words of kindness will fill the mouth. How sweet to sit in the family circle where this principle predominates. Strangely perverted must be the taste not to enjoy such a state. Look at that unfortunate one, who in degradation sits with depressed spirits and broken heart. Think you the cause of such ruin rests only on the shoulders of the sufferer? Ah! flatter not thyself thus; awful responsibilities may rest on the heads of others for that sad state. Had a look of pity rested where scorn was seen; or had a word of kindness enjoyed the place of sharp rebuke, that poor soul might have been saved from ruin.

O that such depth of love,
As cometh from above,
Would reign in this heart supreme;
Then from it should flow,
In heavenly glow,
Salvation's healing stream.

There can be nothing more productive of good, that is so easily performed as the utterance of right words. Visit yonder hovel, whose inmates at once tell you that poverty abides there. Speak to those saddened hearts words of love and sympathy, and gild them with deeds that well compare. Soon you behold every face radiant with joy, and the sunshine of peace seems for the time to convert that hovel into a palace. Perhaps the father and companion may be in yonder field, beneath a scorching sun, where the wages of a day laborer but poorly meet the demands of an invalid wife and helpless children. But on his return home, when yonder sun is hiding his face for the night, those words of kindness you uttered are repeated, the deeds of love you done are exhibited; and could you see that careworn face, as it lights up with joy, and behold those tears of gratitude as they chase each other in quick succession down those furrowed cheeks, surely you would be thankful for a heart that bids you speak only words of kindness.

And then listen to the conversation that follows the first introduction of the events of the day. The husband inquires,

"Did you tell them how long you had been sick? did you tell them my health was poor?"

"Yes."

"Were the children crying?"

"No, every one of them were filled with joy and surprise. But I have not shown all the presents. See here. There is a dress for me and one for Dollie, and some shoes for Lizzie, and pants for Johnnie, and a new hat for Charlie;" and the astonished man exclaims,

"Good God! what am I, that I should be thus favored?"

This would not be an isolated case, were all that profess the love of Christ in possession of it. Many a desponding and sinful heart would soon be made to feel the glow of heavenly love.

"Let your words be with love." Is there a divine injunction less heeded by the mass of professors than this? And yet there is not a saying in the whole book of God more potent with good than this. And we see no way to avail ourselves of the blessings this word unfolds, save by a close adherence to the principles inculcated in this text. Why will men torture themselves with a half-hearted religion? Better by far to eat, drink and be merry, and enjoy all the good of this life, and get no more than damnation, than to half crucify self, be doubting and halting, take no comfort here, and none hereafter.

The majority have just faith enough to make them miserable. Their confidence in a coming judgment is sufficient to keep their consciences stirred up, and yet too weak to beget hope; and so they are tossed to and fro, from the furnace of trials to the garden of pleasure. Being unhappy themselves, they only envy those who are happy.

The system of redemption is one of design; the principle of cause and effect are as manifest as in the rules of mathematics. To disregard a single rule produces a false result, and leaves disjointed the whole catalogue of figures; and to omit a Christian duty will disrobe the heart of its needful strength to perform another. The weaver might as well expect the desired flower on his crapet, while he throws his shuttle the reverse of right, as for a Christian to expect the light of divine love, while known duties are disregarded.

Is it presumed that divine wisdom would dictate a system of faith, and look with indifference upon subjects who are to be regulated thereby? In other words, is the gospel a dead letter, to be viewed as convenience shall dictate? Were the apostles the only men in all the gospel dispensation required to adhere to principles of right? Let these questions be proved in the affirmative, and there may be some chance for those who are living in reckless disregard of the precepts of holy writ. But should the sequel of man's probation disclose the fact that "God is no respecter of persons," we then might feel the importance of a jealous watch-care over ourselves, lest, by some neglected duty we are forever shut out of that heavenly kingdom.

No trivial excuse will screen us when once arrayed before heaven's tribunal. But while the realities of truths we now but faintly realize shall unfold the mingled scenes of the awful and the grand, so that we "see as we are seen, and know as we are known," then it will be too late to develop this principle.

Could we but half feel the worth of words, h[illegible] would be each utterance. [illegible]rds? They are the fac[illegible] [illegible] reotyped, and placed beneath [illegible] press of interchanging thought. They come forth again, wafted on every breeze to earth's remotest bounds; and they never change their character. As they leave the womb of thought immortalized they ever revolve. Rightly adjusted, they go forth bearing the sweet fragrance of heavenly love, only to bless humanity. They are susceptible of mighty effects. By them the sword of conflict may be sheathed, and a nation saved from ruin. By them an offended brother may be restored or a wayward son saved. By their magic power a multitude may be awed to silence. Let them be uttered in tones of pity, and how quick the sobs of grief are hushed. Let them fall on the ear of the sinful in gentle reproof, and his heart responds to virtue.

The same cause existing in the heart that begets right words prompts righteous acts. And words of love are powerless, except attested by comparative deeds; or it is possible that their sincerity may be disclosed in style of utterance. Our words usually bear the character of the spirit that possesses us at the time we speak; hence, it is well for us to know what manner of spirit we are of.

Go pick from yonder ditch that wretched man; place him upon a soft couch with a pillow of rest beneath his head, that his slumbers may be undisturbed till the stifling effects of that damnable liquid be gone: and then, in words of kindness, point out the certain ruin to which he is hastening; and if reformation is a possible thing in his case, such a course will be effectual. But should you fail to restore him, rest assured that your acts of kindness are not robbed of their virtue by the failure, but will, with other like deeds, insure to you the blessed consolation of those words so full hope—"Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

The elevated effect an adherence to this text would produce, is of itself sufficient reason why we should respond to its demands. No heart can entertain the principle here unfolded without being moulded thereby into a character in harmony with such a principle. When the fountain is sweet the stream thereof will be sweet. The waters of a pure fountain may be rendered bitter, should there not be precautionary measures taken to guard against it. So the heart must be curbed and guarded, lest the bitter streams of vice flow into it, and render it productive of blasphemous and foul-mouthed utterances that disgrace almost every circle in which man acts. The heart is toned and tuned to a great degree, by its own productions; and when it sends forth words of love, they vibrate with other chords, producing a harmony that finds response only in the pure, the holy, and the good.

However much may be developed in the heart is the result of human culture, we need the direct influences of the Holy Spirit to give melody and grace to our words and deeds. Let a heart be tuned by the concert key of God's eternal Spirit, and every strain chimes with the music of heaven, lifting the soul above earth's dreary wastes, and causing it to drink in the spirit of eternal things.

While the eye of faith views the eternal regions of glory, and sees the verdure of a a renewed earth, tinged with the golden hues that light up the eternal day, the ear of faith does not fail of being charmed by the music that blends its matchless strains in one great, grand, universal concert, in which angels and men harmoniously unite, singing redemption's song. This faculty, by which man seems to throw off the chains of mortality, and lose himself amid the visions of future glory (though deceptive in its character), is one of the most pleasing with which he is endowed. Disrobe him of this, and you destroy all pleasure to him but the present. No anticipated joy will ever lift him above the groveling cares of this present life; consequently his feelings, his aspirations and hopes, are narrowed down to the limited range of passing events and present joys. The land which formed him, in the wonderful image of heaven's Ruler, has so blended each faculty of his being with the ultimate design of his existence, that the realities of present joys only beget within his heart desires for future happiness. By what he really knows of the present, he is enabled to anticipate the future in its wonderful, glorious and transcending developments. Hence the purer his thoughts, words and affections, the more perfect the vision he will enjoy of the future.

The faculty to think and to reason may be reckoned second to that by which we give utterance to thought. Thoughts uttered are doubly reflected upon the mind and heart; so that, while we indulge in evil thoughts, we train the heart to love vice; and the utterance of those thoughts will render it doubly vicious. It becomes us to let our "words be alway with love."

An objection to my position may arise in the mind of some, because it partakes largely of progressive culture. This objection is the result of misapprehending the nature of Christianity. While man is saved by grace alone, he is at the same time saved by humanity alone. For a Christian is but a man with the faculties of his being balanced, corrected, and re-adjusted, so that he may occupy a standpoint where he can view in a true light the relationship he sustains to his fellows and his God. The difference between a saint and [illegible] is, the head and heart of on[illegible], while the other is not. [illegible] nature is like an old, dirty wat[illegible] all out of repair. The index hand of morality may point down, while it should point up. He runs, but he goes wrong; and if you are governed by him, whatever his fate is you will share. He needs cleansing, adjusting, and regulating by some perfect standard; and then he is reliable. Then when he speaks you are rightly instructed, and when he acts the world is blessed. Christianity does not rob man of the functions of his natural being, and transform him into some angelic creature, but it regulates him. No faculty, power, function, or law, that legitimately belongs to him by nature, is rendered dormant by Christianity. If they have been perverted, they must be set right, not destroyed. The natural heart is enmity against God, so that man by nature is God's enemy. This is the result of perverted affections. He must be corrected, and learn to love God; and proper instruction is the only way by which this can be accomplished.

The means used to instruct are various. It may be by words of men; or it may be by the word of God; and it may be by the influences of the Holy Spirit; or, by all these combined. The circumstances of the individual will develop the appropriate means to be employed. The thunderings of Sinai may be needful to attract the attention of some; while the gentle whisperings of the Spirit will move the hearts of others.

There is nothing so well calculated to soften the heart of man, mellow his disposition, and refine his affections, as kind words, whether he speaks them himself or hears them uttered by another. The suppression of a harsh word not unfrequently saves your fellow a blow, and yourself disgrace; while the indulgence of unkind words often results in the most deadly strifes. Your heart is molded to a great extent by the music of your own voice; and while it speaks the melodies of love, and gives utterance only to words of kindness, you are forming a character that will eventually emit without exertion all the fruits to which grace is heir. Every sentence you utter only paves the way for another of like character; and every deed you perform but fits you to repeat it with greater ease, whether it be in the direction of good or evil. Your words are not spent when uttered, but created, and set in motion; and it is no easy task to tell their range, unless committed to the trust of some friend who will lock them within the recesses of his heart in safe keeping; yet such a friend is scarce. But unrestrained words, whether of love or hatred, once penciled upon the canvass of thought, are unlimited in their range.

We have as yet hardly glanced at the importance of words. Words do not grow, but they are manufactured from material treated as worthless; yet amid the transparent folds of which is lodged the life of the world. Thought unclothed is as gold undeveloped, or a diamond unfound; or may be as the poison of asps, or the sting of an adder. Better to ever remain in the sack nature has provided for it than to pain the victim who unfortunately disturbs the slimy den. Words, too, are manufactured with a wonderful machine, wrought with divine skill, and so elaborately and ingeniously constructed, that it will adjust itself to the requisite form of all kinds of words; so that it will produce hard words or soft words; bitter words, or sweet words; long words, or short words; cheering words, or terrifying words; words of praise, or words of blasphemy; words of prayer, or words of complaint; words of love, or words of hate; words of kindness, or words of envy; besides all other kinds of words, both proper and improper; presenting them in Hebrew, Greek or Latin; German, French or English; and when the world is filled with them, there is room for as many more; and the material of which they are composed is not diminished by the boundless ocean created thereby.

No wonder words are considered cheap; yet what would life be without them? Silence would reign where now the air is filled with harmonious sounds. Sorrow would sit brooding where now joyous notes drive it from the heart. Vacancy would be felt where fulness now dwells. Hearts now joyous, would break for the want of comfort. Ignorance would darken the world, where knowledge now enlightens it. Inactivity would be the marked characteristic of all. The wheel of science would cease to rule, and the hum of industry would die away in a noiseless atmosphere; while the confused throng would with astonished gaze scatter in hopeless despair, so that the history of Babel's tower would fail as an illustration. Without words, confusion would take the place of order. They constitute the instrument of power by which the worlds are made. God spake and it was done. He commanded, and it stood fast. By their magic power personalities are created, and multitudes are swayed at the will of the speaker.

They come to us as heaven's example of imitation. God talked with nan in Eden; his ear caught the ound, and the organs of speech began o play; and man in speaking was alled to imitate his Maker. Notwithstanding words are so easily produced hey are of priceless worth. The is- ues of life are dependent upon them. f adjusted in righteousness they will urnish paths of peace and plenty, and nally unbar heaven's door, with an bundant entrance.

Where do they go? They go where hey are sent, and they may be sent where they should not go. On the inions of faith they are winged to eaven, and by them we hold sweet onverse with our Maker. They are he whisperings of the heart going orth to bless, or to curse. Borne on he palms of confidence, they enter he hearts of our friends, sending back he evidence of reciprocated love. These may go forth as a beam of light, ausing all to smile with joy. They nay be sent to the stricken in heart, earing the precious ointment of con- olation. They may go to the cell of he unfortunate as a reprover, yet so ningled with love, as to wring repentance from the flinty heart; or they re susceptible of being converted into rows of death, so that with their arbed edges we can tear the mantle f charity in pieces, or storm the very itadel of life.

By them we may spread our track with ruin, and leave behind naught ut grief and sorrow. We may speak that terror shall fill the hearts of all hat hear, and make of our whole being an image of disgust. We may say hat which will disrobe our own earts of peace, and set in mo- on the fires of hell. We may so ame our words as to disperse would- e friends, and create a multitude of nemies. We can send forth the indi- sible messengers, so that to feed hem begets love, or we may clothe hem in such form, as to stir up hatred one. We may varnish the furniture the humblest cottage with them, so hat contentment shall fill the hearts its inmates, or we may so stain the tset of a palace by them, that a king ay be sorrowful. Our words may go rth with such sweetness of tone, and auty of arrangement, that the sharpt reproof shall be received with profit; they may come with that roughness form as only to harden the subject whom they are addressed.

They can be made to fall upon our llows as showers of blessings, or rush pon them as an avalanche, only to ury and freeze them. They may car- y the balm of rest to the weary, or they may weary the strong. They may furnish a meal to the beggar, or rob a king of his dinner. They may sheath the sword of conflict, or drench a nation in blood. They may fill a community with virtue, or stir up the depths of iniquity. They are susceptible of causing admiration to spring up in the heart of the savage, or of converting the land of Canaan into a wilderness. Wrong words have caused a nation to fall, but right ones responded to result in salvation.

Words! how simple, and yet how wonderful. They are eternal and ceaseless in their roll. They speed their way amid the ocean of thought, written and re-written and reiterated, finding their way into strange countries, and are transformed into other tongues. They live while the instrument that produced them ceases to exist. Like the ripple on the ocean they roll in unlimited depths. Their home is in heaven, and their record in the book of judgment. By them cometh justification, or by them we are condemned. They send us to prison, or burst the door of confinement. Through them cometh life, or by them we are sentenced to death.

They are the only heralds of knowledge with which the world is blessed. On their bright pinions is wafted the news of the day over land and under sea. Winged by lightning, or hurled by steam they go to friend or foe. They bring the tidings of victories won, or tell the sad tale of bloody defeat. They come with the sweet fragrance of friendship's wreath, or they come with the bitterness of long treasured enmity. Their sound may be like the harpings of seraph, or like the moaning of a winter's wind. But go they must, and go they will. On land or sea, in cold or heat, they constantly greet us with truth or deceit.

There is no excuse for unkind words. They only tend to harden the speaker, and demoralize the hearer. They are the honey of slander, the choice of the vulgar, the oil stone of the backbiter, and the language of fools. Their origin is from beneath, and their only tendency is downward. They are only fit to form chains of vice, by which the virtuous may be bound. They lodge beneath the folds of poverty and filth. They constitute the discordant sounds of the bacchanalian, and the bugle scream of the mob.

They abide nowhere, but as the pestilence seem to spoil the peace of all. He that will harbor them is to be pitied, They should be shunned as poison and treated with disgust. They are the bane of society, and the fruit of ignorance. When converted into slanderous weapons, they are susceptible of inflicting injuries and more damning than all earth's weapons combined. Better approach that man or woman in the stealthiness of a midnight assassin, and rob them of life so dear, in the suddenness of a pistol's flash, than to array them before the public gaze on a slanderous tongue. Ah! worse. Better innoculate them with disease that would eat them alive, and thus render them objects of sympathy, than to lift them in the arms of slander, so that they shall fall into the lowest depths of ruin, with nought but shame and disgrace to compose their winding sheet.

Were the hounds of hell all untied,
And each placed on some innocent's victim track,
A wound to compare, might be defied,
With that inflicted by a slanderous clack.

For this reason does the sin of slander enjoy for its classmates murder, drunkenness, haters of God, and inventors of evil things, idolaters, covenant breakers, implacable, unmerciful, who, knowing the judgments of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same but have pleasure in them that do them.

If any offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, able also to bridle the whole body. Some have the faculty of so bridling the tongue as not to speak even to their fellows; and yet at will they can speak of them in the most bitter terms, Listen to the description the apostle James gives of the tongue: "The tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity; so is the tongue among our members, that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature, and it is set on fire of hell." What an awful picture! and yet it is no exaggeration; it but faintly draws the dark shadows and blighting curses that an evil tongue is sure to inflict. It is not necessary that guilt should pave the way for the engine of slander to drive its thunderin g train from house to house; but prejudice, or envy, or jealousy, may constitute its only foundation; so that the innocent may suffer far more than the guilty. Let an innocent prrson once become the victim of slander, and it is easy to detect guilt where naught but purity dwells. Every act is made to indicate wrong, every look is full of suspicions, and every word is interpreted to mean only evil; and so the train of slander glides on, laden with fiendish store, fired and steamed by the coals of hell; until, perhaps, the innocent sufferer shall be overcome, and in grief fall into ruin's yawning gulf.

No sin is more damning in its tendency than the sin of slander; hence there is no sin punishable with a darker threatening by divine retribution than this. No Christian should allow himself to harbor evil thoughts, much less give utterance to them against any, without the most positive proof of guilt; and then it were better to go to such an one with words of kindness, and see if reformation is not preferable to slander or ruin.

Again we say, "Let your words be always with love." Speak kindly to the wayward, and take heed lest you fall. Remember the crimson stream can make the foulest clean. Are you clothed in your right mind? remember that it is Christ who has thus robed you, and that his righteousness alone can hide your shame. Are you blessed with hope? Remember that it is Christ who gave it thee, and who bids all to come and receive the same. Shall I despise him for whom Christ died. Can I look with a Pharisaic spirit upon yonder publican, and say or feel to thank God that I am not as other men are? Should I not fear the same rebuke long since uttered by Christ? Can the spirit of a loving Jesus possess me, and not lead my heart in the same channel in which he walked? Must he love the sinner, and I hate him? If I have put on Christ, then I must walk in him, and bear something of the fruits which characterized him; otherwise I may doubt whether I know him.

It is not the prerogative of a Christian to look with indifference upon the interests of Christ, whom he is called to represent, in completing the work he began when here. I wonder not at the reckless indifference manifest on the part of sinners relative to their eternal interests, while they in so doing only reflect the shadows that professors of religion cast upon them.

The influence of a church is salutary only while the ruling principle with them is love. Let this predominate, and from it will radiate the light of heavenly grace, causing sunshine and peace to rest within its sacred fold; while all around is felt the healing beams of salvation's glow.

Buried beneath love's boundless deep,
Let Christ's church securely dwell,
While their sacred vows they keep,
Trusting the hand that doeth all things well.

Should storms and tempests threat'ning roar,
And darkness deep becloud the sky,
As was the church in days of yore,
So are we guarded from on high.

While we each other's sorrows feel,
And for each other strive to live,
We thus shall to the world reveal
The love for which Christ died to give;

And from death's dark and dreary way
Some sorrowing souls shall come,
And from their sinning turn away,
And find with us a home.

Let words of kindness be our theme,
While longer here we stay,
And then with heavenly love serene
We'll shine in endless day.

No Christian or body of Christians cna ever develope a true Christian charter, bereft of that overwhelming and transcending principle which underlies the whole structure of Christianity. Without it we are powerless; with it we become invincible. We may have in our possession arguments that will confound the devil, and yet fail to win a single soul, without this principle of love. We may build fine houses and decorate them with unlimited wealth, dedicate them to God, and pass through all the forms of life, and yet be but a dead carcass in the eyes of heaven. That soul who dreams of future joys, while his heart does not pulsate with this principle predominating, is only painting the scenes of fancy, to be blotted out amid the folds of everlasting night.

Deceive not thyself, vain hoper; for while envy, hatred and jealousy reign in thy bosom, there can be no responsive chord that will chime with love's melodious song.

O that heaven's flood-gates would open and send down its torrents, burying us beneath its living waters; so that our words ever should be with love! WM. A. FENN.

Odds and Ends.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES: If I have your indulgence for so much quoted matter as I have sent you, I hope I shall not incur the displeasure of your readers, on a charge of attempting to make your paper too much of a scrap book? I had one principal object in view in writing out and despatching to you so many extracts from English works: I wished to have the Adventists of the country generally apprised of the fact that the doctrine distinctive of this branch of the church, which causes so much bitterness on the part of the sects is not a denominational distinction in Great Britain; that leading men in all the "orthodox churches" there are making themselves heard in advocacy in powerful rhetoric of the Scriptural truth on the Life and Death question. Besides, I did not know but many Adventists in this country would be legitimately strengthened by learning that from among the ablest scholars of England support for truth was coming in most potential form. Undoubtedly some of your Elders are better informed on this subject than your humble servant; but I think they will all agree to the propriety of the republication, in detached paragraphs, of works which I have recommended and transcribed.

I do not yield our literature to that of Great Britain. In point of perfectness of doctrine, our writers come up more uniformly to the whole truth. And in respect of force as well as fairness of statement and reasoning I will not tolerate any disparagement or "invidious comparison" as against the Editor of the TIMES, or such men as Collins, Fassett and Whitmore. But, it is comfortable—now, isn't it?—to know that in the great schools of thought in the Old World there is a revival on the main propositions which we prominently discuss. And will not a fairly reciprocal intercourse of reading promote clearness and steadfastness of conviction? We are entitled to all the benefits of a great community of sentiment and argument. Let us partake of them.

I have recently received a letter from the Rev. Wm. Griffith, of Eastbourne, England. He mentions the fact that of his able and, as Dr. Leask says, "calmly thoughtful" pamphlet entitled Man's State in Nature, a small edition was published, and that is now already exhausted. He gives his permission for a re-publ cation to any one in America disposed to such work. He says, in the same connection: "Those who defend the opposite teaching are saying all they can. Dr. Leask has asked me to review some books for him, American and English; and I expect the Rainbow will have a series of articles combatting the defences most recently put forth, and most relied upon. The first will come in June.... You may well be astonished at the opposition of good and intelligent men, but we have all learned the old doctrine in our first hymns and catechisms, and it is hard to break away from what has become so ingrained."

Now will you take a "sample' from Griffith, from his chapter on Evil and Sin in his Man's State in Nature?

"Should it prove true that the unregenerated soul must writhe forever in an agony similar to the tortures endured by living organisms when brought into contact with blazing and liquid fire, then must it be admitted that such suffering is evil indeed; evil per se, in its originating motive, in its practical operation, in its illimitable persistence. We have reason to thank God that such evil has no resemblance on earth; and, being abhorrent to the first principles of our moral nature, we may infer that it is infinitely more abhorrent to his own moral nature. Devilish attempts have indeed been made to sustain living beings in torture upon the cross, the rack, and under the nameless horrors of the 'Holy Inquisition;' but when reason and common sympathy have failed to show mercy, nature has stepped in and by death delivered the victim from the tormentor's power; or by insensibility given respite. There is nothing in the experience of earth, nothing in the healthy dictates of human consciousness which enables us to explain or justify everlasting misery. We can reconcile ourselves to death under the dark shadows of personal guilt. Many a one has felt unworthy to live; and either committed suicide or delivered himself up to justice. But no man can reconcile himself to everlasting torture. No man can feel in his conscience that any deed done, or any series of words or ways for which he is responsible, can deserve an eternity of suffering. Those who say the contrary, I believe, have no adequate conception of what an eternity of suffering means. Indeed no finite mind can make the faintest approach toward an estimate of everlasting pain. It is an idea that bounds farther from your grasp at every attempt to seize it. Men are never more soundly convicted of speaking about what they cannot understand than when they pronounce sin to be worthy of everlasting torture. No logic can shape an argument, nor inventive faculty discover reasons which would justify God in bringing into life a creature whose existence and suffering must, from whatever cause, be so dreadful. God is free to create or not to create; and he is able to create after any pattern or type. He has a full prescience of the issue of all his doing. He can control his work at every stage: or he is not independent and sovereign. The existence of one soul in a state of hopeless, endless misery, according to the Augustinian notion of hell, would be a standing condemnation of the Creator, an everlasting impeachment of his wisdom and benevolence for originating such a nature, and an eternal arraignment of the justice that could inflict so horrible and disproportionable a penalty. It has been mentioned to the disgrace of a British judge [happily of past years] that he left a man under sentence of death for stealing a horse valued at seven and six pence. What evil is any man capable of inflicting upon God or his fellows at all comparable with the unending and intense tortures of hell? —hell, that is to say, according to the orthodox teaching. To represent the Almighty as sustaining his creatures in the torturing fires of purgatory or of hell through immense and interminable ages, is to change the Lord Jehovah, the God of self-sacrificing and boundless love, into a Moloch, or demon of spontaneous and implacable rage."

It seems to me that it would be a purifying process, if the works of such scholarly Christians as Warleigh, White and Griffith could have wide circulation among brother Episcopalians and Congregationalists of these United States. Would not such distribution breed a little respect for the true faith? We have, in many communities to-day, a sullen silence on the great theme, because enough light has pierced through the walls to hint of a blaze of truth in the direction toward which the windows are shut.

There must be liberty on this question, in this entire country, and that soon. The Lord is opening the eyes of too many sagacious and courageous men to permit it to be otherwise. C.

The Bible Class.

JOB, 19 : 25.

The Bible Union renders it: "I know that my Redeemer lives, and in after time will stand upon the earth: and after this my skin is destroyed, and without my flesh shall I see God."

Prof. G. R. Noyes renders it:

"And though my skin be wasted away,
Yet in my flesh shall I see God," and applies it to this present life. Dr. Adam Clarke refers it to the Savior and resurrection; and from him we quote Miles Coverdale's translation: "For I am sure that my Redeemer liveth; and that I shall rise out of the ground in the last day; that I shall be clothed againe with this skynne; and se God in my flesh: Yea, I myself shall beholde him not with other, but with these same eyes."

Job was unquestionably a firm believer in the resurrection.—Sel.

"MY FLESH SHALL REST IN HOPE."

(Acts 2 : 26)

May I venture modestly to say that no translation of the words I have quoted (so far as I know) gives the full meaning, force and beauty of the original. The literal rendering would be, My flesh shall pitch its tent upon hope. The verb used is derived from a noun which means tent. To pitch a tent is its signification. The preposition translated in is in the Greek epi. I do not say that this preposition never means in, but I do say that its ordinary meaning is upon. There is no good reason why we should abandon the ordinary meaning in this instance. How poetical, and how transcendently beautiful the idea, My flesh shall pitch its tent upon hope! The dead body is personified and represented as making arrangements for its temporary detention in the grave. A house is not built—this would convey the idea of too great permanency—but a tent is pitched. There is to be a short stay, indicated by the pitching of a tent, and the tent is to rest on hope. The figure employed makes the body anticipate its resurrection, at which epoch in the saint's history, the hope referred to will be happily lost in full realization and blessed enjoyment. Remember for your comfort, child of God, that when you die, your body will, amid the silence and darkness and putrefaction of the grave, pitch its tent upon hope, looking for the coming of the Lord to redeem it.—*Cor. CHICAGO, - - - - - - ILLINOIS.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, June 11, 1872.

WE hope ministers will all read the notice to them under head of appointments.

THE "Querist's Drawer" is quite full, but has of late been opened only to receive new questions. We will attend to them as soon as possible. At present all our time is needed in other departments.

MICHIGAN.

As we go to press we learn that the promise of the Fair Grounds at Jackson, for the Michigan State Campmeeting has been withdrawn. The meeting will be held at another point, near Br. J. M. Snook's house.

THE DISCUSSION.

Eld. Braden's summing up on the first proposition has been received, but too late to appear in this paper. It will be given next week.

In response to many inquiries, we would say that the discussion is published in the Standard, the leading journal of the Disciple church, circulating over 15,000 copies a week, as well as in THE TIMES. And as Eld. Braden's principal design is to reach and convert his Advent readers, so we write chiefly for our audience in the Standard. Eld. Braden could hardly reach our people in any other way; nor could we reach his people so readily by any means within our control. We have reason to hope for the best results. How many readers of THE TIMES have been or will be convinced by Eld. Braden's arguments, we will not undertake to say: if he has truth, we hope all of them will be. Our only wish is that the truth may prevail. On the other hand we have good reason to belive that the discussion in the Standard is by no means lost.

The progress of the discussion has been hindered by some things over which neither party had any control, and others which might have been avoided if foreseen in time. We crave the patience of our readers, and a continued candid hearing for both parties.

Hereafter the articles will be shorter, and an affirmative and negative argument appear together.

Board Meeting.

The Trustees of the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association met on Wednesday, June 5, 1872, in the office of the Association, at Norwood Park.

After a full report from the Secretary of the history of the removal of the office, a statement of the finances of the Association, including an account of the receipts and expenditures of the past six months, an account of stock, a list of accounts due the Association, and of the debts of the Association, fully exhibiting its resources and liabilities, the Board unanimously expressed satisfaction with the condition of things and what had been done.

The following letter from Br. L. P. Fox was read by the Secretary:

BUCHANAN, May 17, 1872.

To the Trustees of the W. A. C. P. Association.

Brethren: Inasmuch as the change in the location of the Publishing Office of our Association makes it impossible for me to longer fill the office of Treasurer, I hereby resign the same.

My heart and good wishes are still with you; but some brother nearer the office should be appointed to fill the place. Yours truly, L. P. FOX.

After an expression of the appreciation of Br. Fox's services, his resignation was accepted.

Br. John M. Snook was nominated to fill the office of Treasurer until the next meeting of the Association. (He will make his residence at Norwood while he may serve.)

Eld. J. V. Himes then presented the following letter:

CHICAGO, June, 5, 1872.

To the Board of Trustees of the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association.

Dear Brethren: I have acted as Business Agent of this Association for eight years. From a very small beginning it has grown to its present proportions. I have taken the deepest possible interest in its welfare, and my life has been devoted to its success. I should be something more than human never to have erred in all this time; but whatever mistakes I may hav made have been simple errors of judgment; for my heart's desire and steadfast purpose have been to do right, and please my brethren and, especially, my God, in all things.

I now think that in view of the prospective increase of our business, with the accompanying cares and responsibilities in every department, and the absorption of all my time in other work, that it would be wise to appoint some other brother to fill the place I so long occupied.

For these reasons I respectfully tender my resignation of the office of Business Agent of our Association; at the same time assuring you that my time will still be given to the cause we all love, until the Master comes, or I sleep. JOSHUA V. HIMES.

The following resolution was then unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That while our confidence in our brother's influence and integrity remain unshaken, and we should be glad to have him continue to act as Business Agent, if he could remain at the office and attend to the duties of the position; yet as this is impossible, we deem his suggestions wise, and believe they should be adopted. Therefore, on these grounds, we accept our brother's resignation, and tender him our gratitude for his faithfulness in the past.

It was then moved that the Treasurer, Br. Jno. M. Snook, act as Business Agent, also; which suggestion met with unanimous approval.

A committee of three was appointed to carry out suggestions made concerning the changes in the Constitution of the Association.

A proposition for the purchase of the plates of the standard work entitled The Bible vs. Tradition, was accepted, and the Business Agent instructed to buy the same.

The proposed publication of Mr. Constable's new book, in event of the failure of other parties to undertake the work, was approved; and it is hoped the necessary means will be freely furnished by the friends of the Association. Adjourned.

WM. L. HIMES, Sec'y.

Trustees Report.

The undersigned, members of the Board of Trustees of the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association, having attended a meeting of the said Board at Norwood Park, Cook Co., Ill., June 5, 1872, would beg leave to submit the following statement to the readers of the A. C. TIMES.

First, that we found the office of the Association located in the pleasant and apparently healthy and thriving suburban village of Norwood Park, six miles from Chicago city limits, in a northwest direction, on the Wisconsin Division of the Northwestern R. R., and that we regard this location as much more favorable for the interests of the Association than its former location at Buchanan, Mich.

Second, that although there are some disadvantages in having the business office of the Association in Chicago, and the presses and printing office in Norwood Park, yet the consideration of the free rental of a large and commodious building for five years, if needed, together with the great saving of expense in regard to labor, and some items of living, when contrasted with city life and expenses, and the inability of the Association to pay city rents, all tend to render the present location the one to be chosen above all others (of our knowledge) in the present circumstances.

Third, that we find the former Business Agent and his supporters have labored with commendable zeal and carefulness in behalf of the interests of the Association in the matter of removal, and we believe they have acted with wise reference to the promotion of the objects for which this Association was formed, and we approve of the exchange of the Association's property at Buchanan for real estate in Norwood Park, a part of which has already been sold for the benefit of the Association, at rates in advance of cost.

Fourth, that the property of the Association, consisting of presses, machinery, plates, types, &c., is in a condition nearly new, and more than ordinarily valuable giving the Association as assets a value of more than $10,000, over and above all incumbrances.

Fifth, that after a complete investigation of the facts, we find the move, in our judgment, to be a wise and apparently providential one, and which we hope will work for much good to those interested in the promulgation of the Bible doctrine concerning the Second Advent of our Lord Jesus, which we so dearly love.

Our Minnesota Meeting.

To the question—What preachers will be at our meeting? I am able to say that Brn. Thurber, of Sparta, M. Wellcome, Collins, Bursell, have promised to be present. We hope Br. Himes, Br. Hough, and Br. and Sr. Mansfield may come, but I cannot say that they will.

But, beloved brethren and sisters, let every one of you that can come, do so, whether their preachers are present or not. We all have a work to do for ourselves and for others. God help us to come, and to come praying.

S. C. WELLCOME.

Michigan.

TO THE CHURCHES OF THE MICHIGAN ADVENT CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

Will not the churches see that the ministers all have means to attend the meeting at Jackson. I assure you it will abundantly repay the cost in the new life and zeal with which they will return to their fields of labor. They need the change and rest. Let every church and interest be represented. J. M. SNOOK, Sec'y.

Another Tent.

For a tent 9 feet by 12 feet, to accommodate 6 or 8 persons sew together 4 breadths of sheeting, each 8 yards long.

For the two ends of tent, see diagram published in TIMES of May 14.

No need of a "fly" if the roof is made steep.

For a tent 15 by 21 feet it would require about 167 or 170 yds, including a fly roof. The sheeting can be got for about 15c a yard.

Don't forget to bring straw ticks, sheets and quilts; and let no one stay away because they have no tent.

Free Speech in Rome.

New times have dawned upon Rome. The blow that broke the oppressive temporal power of the Pope, set free minds that had long been enthralled in a despotism worse than fetters of iron or the dungeons of the Inquisition. Mind was given by the Creator to be employed in the investigation of natural and revealed truth. Mind was given, said the Pope, to receive without question such dogmas and ideas as the church ordains. Independent thought cannot be tolerated. Like treason to state, it merits the severest punishment. And so long as the Papacy controlled the police as well as the priesthood of Rome, its uniform policy was to repress free thought, and to punish the free expression of opinion with promptness and severity.

Victor Emmanuel makes Rome the capital of United Italy, and the light of the nineteenth century breaks through the benighted barriers that had excluded it from the eternal city. A free press is established, and the newsboy's cry awakens strange echoes through its streets. A free gospel is permitted, and the Bible is preached where sacred teachings were not tolerated. Free speech is no longer repressed, and the priests, instead of compelling assent to their creed, have now the privilege of defending and maintaining the doctrines of their church.

During the past month a notable event has occurred in Rome. A public discussion has taken place, sanctioned by the Pope, between Catholic priests and Protestant pastors, on a topic of vital importance to Romanism. Signor Sciarelli, a Methodist minister in Rome, announced that he should deliver a discourse to prove that St. Peter has never been in Rome, challenging any priest to discuss the question with him. The challenge was accepted, and a public discussion was arranged, by which it was agreed that there should be three disputants on either side, and that the discussion should be regulated by four presidents, two from each side, and that an equal number of Catholics and Protestants should be admitted into the hall.

The Protestants were represented by three native Italian evangelists: Sig. Sciarelli, a Methodist; Sig. Ribetti, a Waldensian, and Sig. Gavazzi. The champions of the Romanists were Don Fabiana, a learned and eloquent scholar; Mons. Cipolla, a parish priest of Rome, and a young priest named Gudi, a fluent and able speaker. Each side had stenographic reporters, and the whole debate is to be published. The debate occupied two evenings, and was conducted with great order and decorum, and with great ability on each side. The correspondent from Rome of the Western Watchman, the able Roman Catholic paper of St. Louis, says: "It was a well-ordered and quiet discussion on the whole, that did credit to both parties."

The significant fact is, not that one side or the other triumphed, but that the two sides of such a question were allowed to be presented in public to a mixed audience, untrammelled and without restraint, in Rome. Thinking men elsewhere, in forming their opinions, have been accustomed to yield assent to the weight of evidence. The time has now come that authority, ever claiming to be infallible, must yield to augment "in Rome also." And although it is stated that since the debate the Pope has forbidden any more such discussions in future, he will find that with free thought and free speech, when once allowed, are privileges that will not be easily surrendered.

Mr. H. J. Piggott, a Wesleyan minister in Rome, one of the four selected presidents of the debate, thus comprehensively summarises the prominent features of this noteworthy event:

"That a Roman prince and a Methodist preacher should sit side by side to preside over a religious discussion in the city of Rome—a discussion between elected dignitaries of the Papal church and Italian native evangelists; a discussion sanctioned by the express authorization of the reigning pontiff [for such I have heard to be the case since I began this letter]—a discussion to prove the yes or no of St. Peter's very presence in Rome; that such a discussion should have been conducted with the utmost amity and decorum, for so it was; that it should have terminated in a very demonstrative shaking of hands on the parts of presidents and disputants, for so it did; that its results, caught verbatim by stenography, should be committed to the press for free circulation throughout Christendom, is an event so passing strange, that, had a prophet from God foretold it ten years ago, he would have had to make out his credentials very plainly indeed before the most sanguine among us could have 'received his support.'" —Am. Messenger.

The World in Fifty Years.

Adventists are not the only ones who can be accused of making some very confident predictions. Here is one by the Rev. R. T. Conant, in an article in the Interior—a Presbyterian paper published in Chicago:

"Judging from the present state of things in the world, and the laws of cause and effect, we would say without question that in one half century from 1871 the whole world will be Christian or atheist."

"We do not quite accept this prophecy," says the Christian Secretary, "and yet there is enough in it to arrest and hold the attention of all Christian people. Fifty years is a brief period; but as things go, it is sufficient to accomplish immense changes, and the next half century will in this respect transcend any former fifty years of history. Of this there can be no doubt. It should be observed, moreover, that infidelity is moving to take all possible advantage of the inevitable reaction, the world over, from the superstitions [of Paganism, Mohammedanism and Popery] which passed for religion, and which indeed have been the only forms of religion, so-called, which millions have known. In some respects unbelief and Atheism will occupy a vantage ground in the coming conflict. Men are prone to extremes. 'Free thinking' is with many a pleasant word, and has acquired an invidious and unprejudiced meaning. The passions and depravities of men are opposed to the restraints and purities of the gospel; and so the thoughtful believer will see that a crisis is coming, for which every man of the 'host of God's elect' ought to be ready. With the volume of inspiration before us, and the Spirit of the Almighty abroad in the earth, we cannot question the ultimate issue; but the very proposition, the whole world for Christ or for Atheism in fifty years, is startling."

So it is; and when it is understood that "the whole world" will never be subjugated to Christ till his return to judge the living and the dead, then "the crisis" that "is coming" is felt to be no ordinary one. And this is precisely what "the Volume of inspiration" teaches. It is not till "the end of the world" that those represented by the tares and wheat, the good and bad fishes, the sheep and goats, the wise and foolish virgins are separated.—Comp. Mat. 28:19, 20; 13:24–30, 36–43, 47–50; 25:1–13, 31–34. Till then "the children of the kingdom" and "the children of the wicked one" must continue together, for Christ has said it. The Man of Sin, who was to emerge from the "iniquity" which was secretly working in the apostolic age, is only to be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming. (2 Thes. 1:6–10; 2:1–8.) The last days are to be emphatically "perilous," and distinguished for scoffing and lawlessness in the midst of an unparalleled increase of knowledge. The warnings on this point are earnest and repeated in our divine directory—the Holy Scriptures—but who heeds them? Men dream that progress in knowledge is progress in piety—that civilization is Christianity—that throwing off effete forms of ancient superstition is putting on Christ! "A wonderful and horrible thing" is as truly "committed in the land" now as in the days of Jeremiah: "the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and the people love to have it so; but what will ye do in the end thereof?" "Peace and safety" is the cry of man, but, "Destruction cometh" is the cry of God (1 Thes. 5:1–3). The world's conversion is the human day-dream, the Lord's return is the true hope of the church.

Whatever changes half a century more may bring, we feel sure that it will not bring "the whole world" to Atheism by perversion, nor to Christ by conversion. Our expectation is that it will bring Christ to his church and the saints to their everlasting inheritance; that among the sublime scenes that will be witnessed in it will be the close of this dispensation, the return of our Lord in triple glory (Lk. 9: 26), the first resurrection, the binding of Satan, the destruction of the wicked, the regeneration of the earth, the establishment of the kingdom of God. For his coming the Master bids us watch and be ready—not knowing precisely when it will take place. Let us act wisely and do it, and not be so deceived by the siren song of peace that that day shall come upon us unawares.—Advent Herald.

The Coming One; And the Blessed Watcher.

"Behold I come as a thief Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked. (Rev. 16: 15.)

In the previous context, we found the girded angels issuing forth from the temple with their vessels or vials full of the wrath God. They are completing their mission of vengeance. The great Day of Judgment—the time of the end—the consummation of all things—is gradually drawing nigh. In the immediately preceding verse there is described a mustering of the forces of evil at the instigation of three unclean spirits. These, in strong metaphor, are represented as "going forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." At this announcement of Satan's final gigantic effort for mastery—the last conflict of great principles—when a bold and defiant scepticism is rampant, and ungodliness is abounding—the faith of the church may be ready to fail, and her courage to falter. But a divine voice, alike of comfort and warning, breaks in parenthetically. John, up to the point, has been the faithful recorder of the visions which were passing before him. Once more it is the Coming One whose utterances are interjected in the midst of the dreadful and dreaded figurations. It is the old key-note of the Book—the leading "Memory of Patmos"—which is again sounded. We had almost forgotten it amid the rapid rush and succession of apocalyptic symbols—amid the thunderings, and lightnings, and tempest. But the trumpet tones once more rise clear and distinct above the clang of battle. He of whom in the first chapter it was announced, "Behold, he cometh with clouds"—he who, in the closing chapter of all, announces himself, "Surely I come quickly"—makes the intermediate proclamation, "Behold I come as a thief; blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments."

We have in these words a Monition and a Benediction. Let us briefly ponder them in their order.

I. The MONITION—"Behold, I come as a thief." The second coming of Christ is to be sudden and unlooked for. It was not so with his first coming. Independent altogether of Hebrew prophecy, that advent had its dim and shadowy premonitions in the Gentile world. It was amid the hush of general expectation—when "all men were musing"—when, in the words of the great poet,

"Birds of calm sat brooding on the charmed wave"—

when the sword was sheathed, the temple of Janus was shut, and palm branches of peace strewed the pathway of the expected King—that the child of Bethlehem was born.

"No war or battle's sound,
Was heard the world around;
The idle spear and shield were high up hung;
The hooked chariot stood
Unstained with hostile blood;
The trumpet spake not to the armed throng;
And kings sat still with awful eye,
As if they surely knew their Sov'ran Lord was by."[1]

So also is it with the spiritual advent of the Redeemer to the souls of his people. That too, unless in rare and exceptional cases, is a gradual 'coming.' "His going forth is prepared as the morning." His approach is not like the abrupt and sweeping water-flood, but rather like the silent dew as it distils imperceptibly on blade and flower. Different will it be, however, at his second advent. With the speed of the lightning flash—with the suddenness of the entrapping snare, or the assault and surprise of the midnight robber; when men are asleep—when every bolt and fastening seem proof against the prowling invader—then the cry shall be heard, "Behold, the Judge standeth before the door!" Our Lord himself, in his own memorable discourse, gives a vivid description of the world at his final appearing. It shall be "as in the days of Noah." The antediluvians were pursuing their guilty revelries—listening with mocking incredulity to the strange parable of predicted wrath—seeing in the clear sky overhead no symptoms of coming disaster—when "the flood came and destroyed them all." Or it shall be "as in the days of Lot." The same tale of terror seemed contradicted by the smiling plains beneath, and the bright firmament above; for "the sun," we read, "had risen upon the earth when Lot entered Zoar." In other words, when he reached his shelter, and the hour of doom had arrived, there was nothing seen but the play of sunbeams, "sowing the earth with orient pearl." No portent was visible; the dwellers in Sodom awoke up, heedless of fears, to a new day of godless riot; when suddenly the windows of heaven were opened, and bolts of living fire descended upon the doomed capitals. So shall also the coming of the Son of Man be. "Behold, I come as a thief." The world will have rocked itself asleep on the subject of the Lord's appearing. That appearing will be among the obsolete dogmas of its creed; denounced and discarded as the currency of prating fanatics and enthusiasts. It is so in a large measure already. Outer nature, in its unvarying and apparently stereotyped laws, gives no indication of any such arrest on its appointed sequences; day follows night; summer treads on the heels of winter; autumn repays with usury the sower's vernal toil. There is no wrinkle on earth's brow—no symptom of decrepitude. It may be rather augured from the progress of science—the gigantic strides of discovery—that she is, like the eagle, moulting her feathers for a renewal of her youth. Nothing is there in the canopy above, nor in the garnered treasures hidden beneath her surface, to countersign and ratify the incredible warning of the Seer of Patmos. The lovers of pleasure—those who desire to have no higher portion than this life—are only too ready to accept these dicta of a godless and sceptic philosophy—to pursue with undisturbed avidity the paths of sin and the race to riches. Secure against invasion, avarice heaps up its treasure, and shouts its defiant boast, "To-morrow shall be as to-day, and much more abundant!"

"Nay," says Christ, as he awakes the dormant peal of the advent bell, "credit not the world's lie; for it is just when that lie has won for itself a fatal acceptance—when mankind have sunk into this state of guilty, bold, defiant indifference—that my footfall shall be heard—'Behold, I come as a thief.'" Just when the scoffer is uttering his presumptious challenge, "Where is the promise of his coming?"—when all things are continuing as they were from the beginning of creation—when the husbandman is pursuing his peaceful labors—when the groves are vocal with song, and the valleys are shouting with summer joy—when the marts of commerce are crowded, and the weeels of industry are revolving—when the ring of hammers is heard in arsenal and workshop—when white-winged commerce is tracking as aforetime the highway of nations—when the student is poring over his books, or the astronomer is registering the time of the next eclipse, or the politicion is casting up the contingencies of peace and war—when the oblivious world, little dreaming of change, is immersed in her own selfishness and ambition—then, yes, then, "Behold I come as a thief." The figure here used by the Lord, and spoken by him from a state of glory, is the very same he employed in his magnificent prophetic utterances on the Mount of Olives in the days of his humiliation. "Watch, therefore," was the solemn peroration "for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. But know this, that if the godman of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up." St. Paul uses the same significant simile"—Yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night; for when they shall say peace, and safety, then sudden destruction cometh." And to the same effect, Peter remembers the words of the Lord Jesus how he said, "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night" (2 Pet. 3: 10). It is at night—midnight—the robber's hour—when darkness has drawn its sable curtains around a silent world—that the cry shall be heard, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh! Go ye out to meet him."

II. We have spoken on the Monition: let us now glance at the appended BENEDICTION—Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked." The reference here may be the simple and ordinary one, of a man, heedless of all danger, lying down to sleep with his garments cast carelessly aside;—the thief suddenly enters his chamber, takes forcible possession of his clothing, leaves him naked and defenceless. Or more probably, according to the great commentator, Lightfoot, (Vol. 1, p. 910), the allusion may be to a Jewish custom in the service of the Temple of Jerusalem. Twenty-four wards or companies were appointed night by night to guard the various entrances to the sacred courts. One individnal was appointed as captain or marshall over the others, called the "Man of the Mountain of the House of God." His duty was to go round the various gates during the night to see that his subordinates were faithful at the posts. Preceded himself by men bearing torches, it was expected that each wakeful sentinel should hail his appearance with the password, "Thou Man of the Mountain of the House, peace be unto thee!" If through unwatchfulness and slumber, this were neglected, the offender was beaten with the staff of office—his garments were burnt—he was branded with shame for failure of duty, by being left in a state of nakedness. It was in contrast with these slumbering Levites, that Jesus may be supposed to pronounce a blessing on his true people, who watch and keep their garments, and are saved from the reproach of spiritual nakedness. Their attitude is that of wakeful sentinels, who, anticipating their Lord's coming, are ever standing on their watch-tower, pacing their rounds, having on the whole armor of God—"the armor of righteousness on the right and on the left;" so that, "being clothed, they may not be found naked." And yet, be it ever remembered, that, knowing the possibility even of his own faithful disciples being involved in this state of drowsy unwakefulness, it is to them he addresses, as the great Captain and Overseer of his spiritual Temple, the solemn words, "Watch ye, therefore; for ye know not when the Master of the house cometh: at even, or at midnight, or at cookcrowing, or in the morning, lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping." (Mk. 13: 35.)

Are we in the expectant attitude of those who are described as they that "love his appearing"?—who are waiting for "the promise of his coming?"—who are "looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God?" That second coming of Christ ought with all of us to be regarded by its apostolic name as "The Blessed Hope"—the polar star in the sky of the future. It is true, indeed, that in one sense, to the believer, death is equivolent to the coming of his Lord. But death is never spoken of in Scripture as a blessed hope. Even the Christian holds his breath as the king of terror passes by. He may be ready to slip the cable whenever his Lord gives the word,—he may be ready to enter the dark valley, and, under the guidance and grace of the Shepherd-Leader, he may fear no evil;—but it is a dark valley notwithstanding: the tear and the cypress, and the sable mourning, have ever formed the associations and accompaniments of the final hour and scene. Not so is it, however, with Christ's advent. It is a jubilant anticipation. The believercan long for it—can pray for it—"Even so, COME Lord Jesus;" "Make no tarrying O my God;" "Make haste, my Beloved: be thou like to a roe or to a young hart on the mountains of spices." Old Francis Quarles, three centuries ago, thus loved to sing in quaint but tuneful melody—

"Will't ne'er be morning? will that promised light
Ne'er break, and clear those clouds of night?
Sweet Phosphor, bring the day
Whose conquering ray
May chase these fogs: sweet Phosphor, bring the day!

Let those whose eyes, like owls, abhor the light;
Let those have night that love the night;
Sweet Phosphor, bring the day!
How sad delay
Afflicts dull hope! sweet Phosphor bring the day!

Here's all the suns that glister in the sphere
Of earth: Ah me! what comforts here?
Sweet Phosphor, bring the day!
Haste, haste away,
Heaven's loitering lamp! sweet Phospor bring
the day."

Or how often does Samuel Rutherford break forth into some such impassioned words as these:—"All is night that is here: therefore sigh and long for the dawning of that morning. Persuade yourself that the king is coming. Wait with the wearied night-watch for the breaking sky."

Nor let us for a moment suppose that this watching is some fantastic, transcendental frame of mind which divorces the Christian from daily work and duty. These vigils may be best kept not in cloistered seclusion. He watches most nobly and truly, who does so, not by abstracting himself from life's rough drudgery and needful calls, but who, in the midst of the ordinary avocations of the world—amid the fever and turmoil of busy existence—can catch up the jubilant chime wafted to the ear of faith from the bells of glory. To many such, the familiar words of the poet may be invested with a new significancy as applied to the second coming:—

"There are in this loud, stunning tide
Of human care and crime,
With whom the melodies abide
Of th' everlasting chime."

Let these inspired utterances be ever ringing their varying magnificent melodies in our ears:—"Yet a little while and he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry." "I will come again, and receive you unto myself." "A little while, and ye shall not see me; and again, a little while, and ye shall see me." "The end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer." "Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments!" Be it ours to keep this sentinel-guard over the garments of a holy character and spotless life; jealous of the invasion of sin; realizing from day to day and from hour to hour the solemn thought, "In this dress—in these garments, I must one day appear before my great Lord;" dreading the possibility, through unwatchfulness, of being deprived of any part of them, and thus of being "ashamed before him at his coming." If we expected a long absent brother or friend from a distant land, how careful should we be in our preparations to give him welcome! How house and hall would be lustrated and adorned! How would ingenuity be taxed to deck out his chamber with every tribute which fond affection could devise! How careful to efface every association or memory of sadness, and prevent the occurrence of one note of discord or disharmony that would mar the joy of that glad return! How should it be with us, in the prospect of welcoming the Brother of brothers, the Friend of friends. How should the home of every heart be "swept and garnished," decked in best holiday attire, to give to the long-absent Lord, love's most loyal welcome!

Every day is bringing that advent nearer—lessening the span of that arc of promise. The "little while, and ye shall not see me," is widening; the "little while, and ye shall see me" is diminishing. The church is like the shipmen in the Sea of Adria, who "deemed that they drew near to some country." The historian of Columbus speaks thus of the great discoverer's approach to the shores of an unknown New World:—"The admiral gave orders that the sails should be close reefed and the lead kept going, and that they should sail slowly, being afraid of shoals and breakers; feeling certain that the first gleam of daybreak would discover land under their bows." Is this true, in a nobler sense, of the "better country?" Are we thus on the outlook to "see the king in his beauty, and the land that is very far off?" Others may be voyaging on in guilty unpreparedness, having nothing but the prospect of being stranded in a night of darkness and despair. "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." Let the blessed hope impart new animation and intensity to your every Christian grace, strengthening your faith, calming your fears, quickening your zeal, disarming affliction of its sting, and derth itself of its brief triumph. Let each Sabbath, each providential dispensation, add new power to the summons—"Awake, awake! put on thy beautiful garments!"—"Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel!" So that when that glorious second Advent shall be consummated—when the Lord shall come and all his saints with him—we may be able rejoicingly to exclaim, "Lo! this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the Lord, we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord, when he cometh, shall find watching."—Macduff's Memories of Patmos.

The Illinois Campmeeting, we are informed, will be held at Amboy, the same as last year. The report that a change would be necessary because the ground could not be obtained was unfounded——Br. C. H. A live congregation has been gathered there. ——A few days since a preacher noted for his 'practical' discourses, pressing the personal virtues and none more urgently than that of patience, was riding with a brother in one of our horse cars, when his ire was stirred by a notice permitting 'smoking on the three rear seats.' He expressed his excited feelings in quite strong terms, until the brother with him remarked—"Br. ——; You tell us in your sermons that we must be patient. We can't have evergthing just right. This tobacco nuisance is one of the things we must bear—and you must be patient—don't "lose your peace." The preacher looked thoughtful.

Two-thirds of the houses in the town have been utterly ruined, including the most ancient and durable public buildings, and the remaining houses are so greatly damaged that there is no possibility of occupying them. The inhabitants, who are in great misery, are living in tents outside of the town, and are in deep grief on account of the loss of relatives and property. The sacrifice of life has been very great, 1,500 Mahometans and 250 Christians and Jews being reported missing. Close to Antioch is the Isle of Suadia, in which all the houses numbering about one thousand, are ruined. In Elonahia and Eljadida scarcely one building is left standing. Eljaba and Gallack are also entirely ruined. Three hundred persons perished in the latter place. When the earthquake took place Mount Bitias was split into two pieces, and a torrent of black water burst forth, tainting the atmosphere with a strong, offensive odor. Eight days after the earthquake occurred, a Greek priest went toward a church in Antioch to search for plate, and while among the ruins, which had accumulated to the extent of about seven or eight feet, he heard a feeble voice imploring assistance. On proceeding to the spot, he found a young lady, eighteen years of age, deeply imbedded in the debris. She told him that she and a young brother had been buried alive. The priest procured assistance, and the sufferers were extricated, but the young lady has since died, and the brother continues in a dangerous state.

Seeking Goodly Pearls.

The wealth of all the realms of bliss
Was scattered lavishly around;
But one, who shared in all the wealth,
The merchant, sought for "goodly pearls;"
For gems whose luster was not dimmed,
Or value tainted by the gross
And damning blot of sin.
He found.

One Pearl, in worth beyond all else,
And gave up all his former wealth,
The glory of his father's house,
His honor and his princely name,
And retinue of shining ones;
"Sold all he had;" for it received
A life of sorrow, curses, scoffs,
And persecution, from a world
Of sin, and even death at last.

Art thou a worshipper in truth
And spirit? Such the Lord doth seek
As goodly worshippers; then let
The Spirit of the living God
Its testimony bring to thee
That all the stains of sin are washed
Away, and thou hast now received
The spirit of adoption, by
The price that Jesus paid to bring Thee from the consequence of sin
To sparkle in his crown.

Ye are the pearl that Christ hath bought;
He gave his glory in exchange
For all he suffered here, and ye
Have by this suffering been bought
To grace the crown of royality,
When "he whose right it is" shall come
And gather all his jewels up.

Warleigh's Demonstration.

[Concluded.]

Further, what a priori pleasure or propriety can there be in showing so much eagerness to make out the certainty of all this suffering and agony? It looks as if our opponents wished it to be established, and what most they wish they easily believe. They do not go much out of the way to save the millions hurrying to their doom; and considering this, and that they have in reality but the meanest show of evidence for their side, it does seem an animus more than anything else, when they show such anxiety to secure these sufferings for their fellows. Heavenly humanity tries to prevent suffering, and it weeps over what it cannot prevent; and moreover, is reluctant to receive news of a calamity, and clings to the hope that so great a disaster will not prove true. But these—what shall we say? They seem to exhibit something like his disappointment if we show them that these endless, inconceivable miseries will never take place. We point out to them the clear lexical common-sense language of scripture, and they shut their eyes. They seem not to wish to see that ninty-nine hundredths of their fellows will not suffer endless tortures. No matter what is the plain meaning of the Judge's sentence, they have determined that the wicked shall be so punished; they will not hear anything to the contrary; and if they had their will, and they were the executioners, we might be certain that the victims of their wrath would have to endure all the anguish thus provided. Truly, David exercised a wise discretion, and made a good choice, when he said, "Let me now fall into the hands of the Lord; for very great are his mercies: but let me not fall into the hands of men." (p. 186.)

Is not this ungodlike spirit the result of their own teaching? can the worshipper of any God rise higher than the character attributed to him? They worship a God who, according to their account, saves one out of the hundred, and sends the rest to endless irremediable perdition and pain. Man's nature is unloving and selfish to begin with, and what may it become when it worships and adores such a God as this? The bloody wars that have disgraced humanity, and cursed Christendom, are accounted for. Christendom! It is a misnomer. Scores of thousands of brothers deliberately stand and shoot down scores of thousands of brothers. Kill one, it is murder; kill myriads, it is glory vindicating national honor; and he who has laid the most in the dust is surnamed "The Great." These are some of the fruits of believing in a God who takes endless vengeance for sins committed in a short life. Christendom! Did Christ, by a reward of gold, stimulate the ingenuity of men to invent engines more and more efficient to vomit out, as if from hell, fiercer fire and heavier shot, so as to slay more victims still? Christendom!—Heathendom; Barbariandom; Devildom; but not Christendom. Laity of England, laity of Europe, how much longer will you allow what is so useless, so disastrous, so destructive, and tolerate the unchristian doctrine which so greatly contributes to such results? Arouse yourselves, read your Bibles, pray to the God of love; and work vigorously and continuously for the suppression of error, for the diffusion of truth. Demand a completion of the blessed Reformation, and that they who are engaged to teach the Bible shall teach it, and nothing besides. No teaching for doctrines the commandments of men, but simply heaven's cure for the ills of humanity (107–8.) C.

Is the Time of the Second Advent Revealed in the Bible?

[First Article.]

There are a number of earnest and undoubtedly sincere persons who profess to believe, and who teach that the time of our Lord's second coming is revealed to them, in the Scriptures. It does not become me to limit or define the revelation that may be given to others; but for myself, I am entirely free to say, that the definite time of the Second Advent is not revealed to me in the Bible. While therefore, I shall not dogmatically assert that it is not therein revealed to others, I shall give some reasons for at least doubting that such revelation has ever been given or even intended to be given. This I can do without in the least reflecting upon the honesty or sincerity of those who differ very widely from me in regard to definite time. When I cannot write kindly, when I feel I must dip my pen in gall and write bitter, reproachful things about those from whom I differ, when I feel thus unkindly, why, I will not write at all, until I learn a more excellent way. I have been pained recently by reading articles on the "time question" as it is called, in which the motives of those who differed from the writer's, were impugned When writers bandy such epithets as "dumb dogs," and "false prophets," they show bad taste, bad temper and a lack of Christian courtesy that is anything but commendable. If a brother believes that he knows the time when the Lord will come the second time, do his ardent expectations justify him in calling his cooler-headed, but perhaps equally warm-hearted brother, who differs from him, a "dumb dog?" Because I do not believe that the time of the Second Advent is revealed in Scripture, am I, therefore, justified in hurling the epithet "false prophet" at one who does believe it? Soft words and hard blows, rather than hard words and soft blows should be the motto of all who speak, or write on controverted questions. Never as it seems to me, should we forget those weighty words of the apostle Paul, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." Let us remember that "love is kind; love envieth not; love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, thinketh no evil;" that "knowledge puffeth up, but love edifieth;" that though we have the "gift of prophecy" and have not love in the sight of heaven we are nothing.

If the reader will pardon this digression I will give him my reason for not accepting as conclusive any of the definite time arguments.

AFFIRMATIVE REASONS.

(1) Because our Savior in none of his recorded discourses revealed the date of his Second Advent. (2) Because none of the apostles have given us the date of the Second Advent, nor any data by which we may certainly compute that date. (3) Because none of the O. T. prophets have placed on record the precise date of the Second Advent; (4) and comprehensively, Because the Bible nowhere teaches in plain and unmistakable terms the time of the second coming.

I. Our Lord's teachings. Very appropriately I think, we may look first to the words of our Savior, and see if the definite time of his second advent is taught in any of his discourses. In Mat. 24, and in the parallel passages of Mark 13, and Luke 21, where the second advent is made the subject of special discourse, we might reasonably expect to find, if anywhere, the Master's expression on this subject. In that remarkable discourse our Lord has given the waiting church signs that would precede his advent and indicate its certainty and nearness; but it is most noticeable that he did not give a single date or period by which the time of his advent might be known.

It is also worthy of very special attention that our Lord, after giving the signs that should precede his second coming, uttered this most impressive commentary, "Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." And so, too, when he had concluded the parable of the virgins, he said, "Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh."

I know of no place where our Savior gives the date of his second coming. There are those who think he has given it, in several places; or perhaps to speak more accurately, that he has given in several of his discourses all the data necessary to accurately compute the time. Thus some think that the parable of the virgins when rightly understood throws a flood of light on the "time question."

To some minds dates are quite unnecessary in the construction of time arguments. A little ingenuity and a vivid imagination are all that is necessary to make the 24th and 25th of Matthew teem with figures and dates. In this connection it may be of interest to many readers of the TIMES to know that William Miller of blessed memory, once thought and argued that the time of our Lord's second advent could be shown from Christ's words in Luke 13: 32: "And he said unto them, Go ye and tell that fox, Behold I cast out devils and I do cures to-day and tomorrow, and the third day I shall be perfected." Mr. Miller argued that the two days in which Christ should cast out devils and do cures, were the same as Hosea's two days, that each day represented a thousand years, and that the third day would begin in 1843. This exposition strange and fanciful as it may seem, furnished the basis of one of Mr. Miller's celebrated "fifteen arguments," each of which he thought proved that the Lord would come between March 21, 1843, and March 21, 1844. I think it but fair to claim that our Lord's discourses furnish two weighty arguments against the theory that claims that the time of the second advent is taught or revealed in the Bible. (1) Our Lord's silence. He nowhere gives a date to indicate the time at which he should make his second appearance. This silence is, I think, inexplicable, on the theory that the time of the second advent was deemed a proper subject of revelation. His language in relation to the event itself is most explicit—"I will come again," he said to the sorrowing disciples. This assurance comforted their troubled hearts, though he did not tell them when he would come. The event was certain, the time of the event was uncertain. Equally explicit were his words when speaking of the resurrection, of the judgment day, of the saint's inheritance and of the life everlasting. I think the reasons why he was thus explicit about events but silent about the time when those events should occur are plain, well-grounded and exhibit the wisdom of the Master in the brighest possible light. The last question that the disciples asked their Master before his ascension, showed their state of expectancy and proves positively that then they had no knowledge whatever of the time of the second advent. "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" Our Savior's reply, I think shows very conclusively, that the time when the kingdom should be restored was not a proper subject of revelation. "He said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his power."

(2.) Our Lord's express assertions seem to me a sufficient refutation of the theory under consideraion. Speaking of the time of the Second Advent as all critics I believe agree, he uttered these most weighty words: "Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only." I know that the attempt has been made to meet both of these arguments—the one based on our Lord's silence, and the one based on his express assertions—by the supposition that our Savior was himself ignorant at that time of the date of his Second Advent. It is said that though no man knew the day, though no angel in heaven knew the hour, though the Son of Man himself (Mk. 13: 32) did not then know the time, that it was afterwards revealed to him by his Father, and by him revealed to the apostle John through the agency of an angel. The passage relied on is Rev. 1: 1. The angel has power to show John "things that must shortly come to pass." Not a word is here said, nor a hint given that the date of the Lord's coming was to be make known. John's prophetic visions it is true, reached to the coming of the Lord, and to the establishment of his kingdom; but where, let me ask, in the book of Revelation, are we told the date of the Secand Advent? That date is nowhere given; hence, the arguments based on our Lord's silence and express assertions remain unshaken and unanswered. EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

TUESDAY, May 28. I have witnessed the energy and growth of the Methodist Episcopal Church for the last half century with much interest. They have been a devoted, purging people, and have gathered hundreds of thousands of souls to Christ. Till within about forty years, their ministry has been mostly uneducated, as they had no educational institutions in this country. Their educated men were either self-taught or came from the old country. And so the great missionary work done by them was by a class of men without education, as to the schools; but they were men of prayer, called of God to go out into the "highways, and hedges," and gather souls to Christ.

Dr. Wilber Fisk was the first to make a real and effective movement for education among the Methodists. He started the Wilbraham Academy in Mass., between forty and fifty years ago, which I believe was their effective institution of learning. After that Middletown University arose. And from these two institutions a multitude have sprung up, both literary and theological. These institutions have exalted them to a high position among the religious denominations of the day and they can now wield a great power for good or evil. It is very clear that the Methodists have lost the old fire and enthusiasm of their early days, in the time of the Wesleys, Cokes and Asburys, and they have from a plain poor people, become the most wealthy, fashionable and popular. They now number millions, with the prospect of uniting the Southern branch of Methodism with the African Methodists also, into one immense body, They are now holding their General Conference in Brooklyn, N. Y., at which they have appointed eight new bishops, Drs. Bowman, Harris, Foster, Merrill, Andrews, with Gilbert Haven, of Zion's Herald, and J. T. Peck, all learned and powerful men, so that the future of this church is prosperous as to wealth, learning and talent; but the purity and power of former days is wanting.

They have made some attempts at reform, so as to separate the church from the world. In the present Conference, the committee on the state of the Church reported in favor of inserting a clause in the discipline forbidding dancing, drinking spirituous liquors, theater going, the use of sinful words or display of bad temper. A warm debate ensued on this question. But no action has been had yet, and it is doubtful if such a reform can be effected.

The Methodists originally come out from the church of England, and adopted substantially its creed. But on the doctrines of future punishment, and the immortality of the soul, they have taken more emphatic ground. While the church of England left these dogmas out of its creed in 1558, the Methodists have retained, and boldly maintained them. "Hell-fire," and the "never-dying soul" have been, and still are very important elements in their theology. But the time has come for the testing of these old dogmas of pagan and papal superstition, and a conflict is at hand, when these things will be exposed and repudiated by the people, if not by the priests.

I spoke this evening on the spirit of man. The people begin to see that the popular dogma of an "immortal spirit" in man, is not Biblical. Many of my hearers thought it was so, but on searching, behold it was not to be found. It is in the Hymn Book, but not in the Bible, where it ought to be if true.

WEDNESDAY, May 29. Have spent the day in Lexington, among the people. I found one person, a Mrs. Miller, (formerly Slocum) a devoted Adventist. In conversation with her I soon found that she was born in North Kingston R. I., in 1805, the same year, and in the same state and town that I was. And that we had attended the same meeting in childhood and youth, in Wickford and Exeter Hill, and were acquainted with Elds. Northrup and Palmer, of the General Baptists, and Priest Burge of the Episcopal church, of which my father was a member. We talked over the events of childhood and youth, after a separation of fifty-five years, as though it were but yesterday. Our interview was a very pleasant and profitable one. We now look for the same blessed hope and home, and trust soon to tread the new earth, and enjoy endless life together with all the faithful ones.

I closed all my labors here to-night with a full and interesting audience. I spoke on the time and place of reward, showing it would be at the coming of Christ, and with the righteous in the new earth. The people of Lexington have given me a candid and fair hearing, and though some reject the truth, others receive it with joy, as in all places. I trust that we shall yet see fruit.

Brn. Snook, Barnes, Eastman and Preston first preached here, and did a good work. Since then, Brn. Wright, Mackie, and others have labored here and in the surrounding region to good effect. As yet they have no chapel or church in the village, but have churches in the neighborhood of the village, and soon they will have one here.

The friends in all this region with whom I have labored the present month will receive my thanks for the kind and liberal reception they, with their pastors, have given me. I greatly rejoice with them in their prosperity. The half of the good they are doing had not been told.

THURSDAY, May 30. I took leave of Br. Arnot and family, with whom I have had a pleasant home for a few days. The Lord reward them. Br. A. is constantly doing good, and stands by the infant cause in this region. He does not sound a trumpet before him, but is doing much to help the churches, and is a friend, counsellor and supporter of those who work in this important field.

At 10 a. m. Br. Wright took me to Port Huron, twenty-two miles. The road runs near Lake Huron quite all the way, and is a very pleasant ride though much of the country is still wild. The heavy rain last night made the roads muddy and heavy, but we 'hrough at good speed. Some eight miles from Lexington, Br. W. and we all were deeply engaged in conversation, and merry as a church bell, meanwhile our team was making good speed, when the off wheel struck a stump, and before I could fairly 'hink, I was laying in the mud in the middle of the road. The first sensation I had was from what seemed to be a heavy blow on the head, which for a moment paralyzed me, but I soon recovered, and found myself in the mud and water. I was itting on a trunk in the rear of the uggy, and had no means of protection when the carriage surged, but was hrown violently with my whole weight upon the ground. I struck on my head, left shoulder and hip, while he carriage run over my left leg just above the ancle, making a flesh wound, ut breaking no bones. Being wet hrough by the water and mud I went o a log shanty near by, and made ome repairs of my toilet, and dressed my wounds, thanking God that my fe was spared, and that I came out of 'his, the worst and most dangerous fall remember to have had, simply ith bruises without broken bones. I uffered much pain all the day.

From Port Huron we pressed on to 'olumbus for our next meeting, and rrived just in season. We were hilled in the cold atmosphere, and I ound it difficult to walk, but I hobbled the meeting, and was able to speak a way soon to forget my infirmities. 'od does help us. Blessed be his ɔly name.

Here in Columbus we have a small ɔmpany of faithful ones, called out y Brn. Snook, Wright, and others. 'hey have arranged to build a chapel, ıd want a minister. This is an important field and should be cared for. 'r. Wright cannot do it. Help is eeded here.

It is hoped that he will find some ne or more true yoke fellows with im in this great field. We had a ordial welcome and home with Br. tevenson, with every comfort that pilrims need.

FRIDAY, May 31. Have had rest, ıd feel somewhat better, and thank 'od that I shall not lose an appointent by the accident of yesterday. spoke again at night, taking for my ıbject the first and second advent. f the first advent was literal, then the oond must be without doubt. All xpositions of the word of God that ake the second advent mythical or piritual, are without foundation. 'othing could be more erroneous.

SATURDAY, June 1. I took leave of 'r. Stevenson, whose hospitalities I ıd enjoyed, and Br. Burt and others the depot. And here I unexpected- met Br. Snook, who accompanied e to Romeo, and welcomed me to his ome. Here I met Br. Paton, with hom I was to go to Almont to speak. 'ut a heavy rain set in, and so we 'ere detained. I was introduced to r. J. Douglass of this place, late a eacon in the Baptist church. He s excommunicated for renouncing e doctrine of "endless misery," and ill now associate himself with those counted as heretics. My interview ith the Doctor was both pleasant and lifying. He has worked his way out the darkness alone, and seems to be ell rooted in the faith.

Five years ago I visited and held tent meeting in this place in company with Eld. Snook, who resided here. good interest was awakened, but as e meetings were not kept up, others aped the fruit, as always when we do not organize and take care of those gathered to Christ. But a few remain steadfast, and others are coming into the faith, so that the prospect for the future is brightening. Br. Paton has been requested to bestow some labor here, in the hope of good.

SABBATH, June 2. After the storm of yesterday we have a beautiful morning, and clear sunshine after rain. Everything in the vegetable world is growing with luxuriance.

Br. Paton took me to Baker's Corners, fourteen miles, for our meeting. The heavy rain prevented our going yesterday. We found a large congregation waiting. I spoke to them on the "Blessed Hope." (Tit. 2:13.) It never appeared more blessed to me. Oh, the glorious hope of immortality. I ask myself the question, Are we, the frail children of dust, to be made immortal? Are they who are now in the dispensation of grace to be put into the possession of endless life? Can this be? The answer from the inspired word is: "This mortal shall put on immortality." (1 Cor. 15:53.) It is enough. Oh, the unfathomable depths of love divine! But can I be one of the favored ones? Ah! this is a great question. And the answer to this is given in Rom. 2:7—"To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, and eternal life." These shall have it.

There is a good interest coming up at Baker's Corners, and in the surrounding region. It was first started by Dr. J. Simpson, an eccentric man. He had the truth and some good traits of mind, but was so inconsistent that he often destroyed the good he had done. But here are men who thank God that they ever heard his voice, and pray for him in his apostasy from the Lord.

Eld. Paton is much beloved, and his influence for good is increasing. My reception was very pleasant, and I trust it may prove a profitable visit to them. They did not forget that I was a missionary.

At noon we came to Almont, nine miles, and calling at Eld. Paton's, I was introduced to many friends of the truth, and taking some refreshment, hastened to the hall for meeting. Br. Snook was with us. I found a large gathering waiting to hear the word. With the infant church, which is still small, there were strangers in to hear, of many shades of opinion. My subject was the time and place of reward. (Mat. 16:27.) "Then [at his second coming] shall he reward every man according to his work." Men are not rewarded in sheol or hades, or Tartarus, but in gehenna. (Mat. 10:28.) This is after the second advent, the resurrection and judgment. But between death and the resurrection, the dead sleep in sheol or hades, the grave.

Eld. Paton was the pastor of the Baptist church here till lately. But becoming fully convinced of the mortality of man, and life through Christ, he was cut off. He has since organized the Advent Christian church, and it maintains its position amid a fiery ordeal. Br. Paton is much beloved and respected, not only by his people, but the citizens. The Lord bless and sustain him in his new position. He, in common with the rest of us, has made a sacrifice for the truth. The reward is sure.

MONDAY, June 3. Spent the day in calling upon the friends in the town and country, conversing upon the Advent doctrines, to give light and remove prejudice and doubts, which was about as hard work as preaching. Our mission is all work.

At night met with the church, and a few of their friends, to talk over the prospects of the cause in Almont. At the close several hundred dollars were pledged for a new chapel. The meeting was one of much interest, and the outlook for Br. Paton and the infant church is good.

TUESDAY, June 4. Came to Detroit. The Presbyterian General Assembly have just held their session in this city. At the instance of the Synod in Brooklyn, N. Y., the subject of woman's teaching and preaching came up, and it was decided that:

"To teach and exhort, or to lead in prayer in public promiscuous assemblies, is clearly forbidden to women in the Holy Oracles."

Before the passage of this vote, the Hon. John W. Caldwell, of College Hill, Ohio, who mounted the platform in the midst of vain attempts to cut him off, and spoke as follows:

God made man upright, looking up, male and female created he them. The word man is a generic term, embracing man and woman.

She is an helpmate, meet for man. She is not his slave, not his inferior. She obeys the law of love, as a loving companion, not as a slave. She has half the brains (at least half) belonging to the human family.

In the enjoyment of rights under the laws of the United States she is treated as a citizen. She may enter a homestead on the public lands; may register her ship in any port of the United States; may have a passport from the Secretary of State—all rights belonging to a citizen of the United States only.

In the Presbyterian church, she is entitled to her vote in the congregation. No teaching, or ruling bishop, or deacon, or trustee, can be legally elected under a rule which would exclude her vote.

She is called on to contribute to sustain the church, and, therefore, her voice shall be heard in the elections of the church.

She is taxed, and liberty requires that taxation and representation be inseparable. An instance is the Revolutionary war as 1776, which resulted in the establishment of the Government of the United States.

If in the church, she may vote; may she not teach? If she may teach, may she not preach if she desire to do so, and can find an audience?

If she may be a disciple of Christ, having herself a soul to save, may she not deliver Christ's message to a world lying in wickedness? If a people will have a woman to preach, who shall forbid? Who shall forbid a disciple to do the Master's work?

She is admitted to schools, academies, colleges and universities, in literature and science. She is admitted to the classes, receiving technical secular education—medicine and law and philosophy. Why not to theological schools? Anything which a man can learn from books, she can learn quicker. Martha was troubled about many things (house-keeping and the like), and had no time, but Mary was commended for choosing that good part of which she cannot be deprived, treasuring up the Master's message to a lost race. Why treasure it up, if not deliver it when it is called for?

This short truthful speech had a telling influence on the Assembly; but the body was committed to bigoted ideas upon the subject, and voted almost unanimously against woman's right to preach the gospel. This was an unfortunate position for this church to take, and will prove an injury both to their influence and practical usefulness.

WEDNESDAY, June 5. I met with the Board of our Publishing Association to-day. A report was made by the Secretary of what has been done during the last six months, and especially as relating to the removal to Chicago.

The subject of the basis of the membership of the Association came up and was freely discussed. There were three views considered. The first was the basis on which it was first organized, which is a financial one. The sum of ten dollars being paid into the treasury entitled one to membership. The second plan was to constitute the Association by regular delegates from all the Advent churches. This seems a fair proposition; but some difficulties were suggested. The Advent body had become so large, and occupies so much territory that it would be an impracticable scheme. For example, we now have between three and four hundred churches in the West. This would give us a representation of one delegate from a church, making three or four hundred members should all attend. But only a fraction of this membership of churches would ever be represented. And the business of the Association would be left for a few living in the vicinity of the place of the annual meeting, who would be present. This plan, it is evident, would not give us an Association in which all the body would be fairly and equally represented.

A third plan was to put the Association into the hands of a General Conference, made up of delegates from the various local or State Conferences, of which we now have some fifteen or more. These, having a common sympathy, would truly represent the entire cause.

To this General Conference, the present Association could transfer its entire property and interests, and the management of its affairs would be in its hands.

The plan of a General Conference seemed to command more confidence than any scheme yet presented for the future conduct of our publishing interest. And as this is a subject of great moment to us as a body, would it not be well for our ministers and laymen to give it careful thought. We must do something. We all desire to find the best mode for the transaction of our business, and the prosperity and success of the cause. Let all interested carefully consider the above suggestions, and let wise counsels prevail.

It was good to meet old fellow-laborers, and counsel together, and talk of duties and hopes. Our work and responsibilities are increasing. May God give us grace and wisdom to meet them.

From Virgil Hunt, Ancona, Ill.

We have no regular preaching now. We had hoped that Br. Marston would make us a visit this present month, but were disappointed, he being busily engaged elsewhere. God bless his labors. May he win many to the truth in Jesus. Br. Hoge visited us last Sabbath (Apr. 21). He preached on the Bible vs Infidelity, and delighted us with a powerful defence of the word of God. In the afternoon we went to hear another minister. He had announced two weeks previously that he should speak on the state of the dead. There was a good congregation out to hear him. When he heard that Br. Hoge was present it excited him considerably. He began by saying that he did not think when he gave out that he would preach on the state of the dead, that heralds would be dispatched all over the county to call in the Ecclesiastical Dignitarians, and the great and learned champions of materialism. (We did not do it, either.) He then proceeded to hold up Br. H. to ridicule before the people, after which he proceeded with his subject. His text was—"Who has abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."

Like another preacher I have heard of, he divided his sermon into three parts: (1) took his text; (2) left it, and (3) never came back to it. He did his best to annihilate the doctrine of materialism. After going the usual rounds, he came to one very strong point, as he thought, and said he "paused for an answer." Br. Hoge asked him if he "meant what he said." "No," said he, "this is not a debating school.' He closed by saying that he expected that "they" would try to make man nothing but a brute; but, said he, "we shall not be present; for there will be a great deal more twistification of the Scriptures than sanctification." After meeting was dismissed, Br. H. called the attention of the audience. Only one left the house. He invited them all to come out and hear him at night, assuring them that he would not indulge in ridicule, as the minister had in the forenoon discourse. And he invited the preacher to come and learn what we really did believe and teach. But he said no. At night Br. H. took the same text, and read its connections in full, and then spoke to the point for nearly two hours. It was one of the most powerful sermons I ever heard him preach. I am sure the Lord helped him. He used no slang, but kept to the subject, and did not leave a vestige of immaterialism. The people generally saw and appreciated the truth of God.

Our Y[illegible]ng Folks.

Enou[illegible]s Enough.

It was the [illegible] of July. Next door to us lived a little b[illegible]ay eight years old; and I think I never saw any one boy who had so many things to [illegible] a noise with on the Fourth of Ju[illegible]d six boxes of shooting crackers; [illegible] of torpedoes; as many as fifty [illegible] or chasers; two or three litt[illegible] pistols and torpedo jutes; and, [illegible]ng, a dozen rockets, any numbe[illegible], blue lights, Roman candl[illegible]. His father must have spent at le[illegible]ars to make his little boy happy!

Well, the [illegible]as early. The boy had scarcely slept, he was so excited. Up he jumped at the f[illegible] gun from the fort, hurried on his clothes, forgot to wash himself or comb his hair, lighted his punk, snatched out a pack of crackers and a half a pint of torpedoes, and began his pop, pop, in the back yard. Fired one at a time, his crackers would have kept him busy a day or two. But before breakfast time he had got into a crazy hurry and would dance and yell around a whole pack going off at once!

By nine o'clock he had moved into the street, with his ammunition piled on the front door step, while twenty poor boys gathered round to see, and hear, and envy the rich little maniac. How he rushed up and down those steps! How red and shiny his face as he began to sweat! How he touched 'em off without waiting to hear or time to enjoy. By hot half past ten he had burned 'em all up, ending off with a whole box at once, and smashing a bundle of a hundred torpedoes at a throw. He was a sweaty, grimy, crazy little fury.

And now his fun was all gone until after dark. So he fretted, and whined, and got whipped twice that day. He teased. They let him send up his rockets and burn his Roman candles during the early twilight, while the day was bright, and then put him to bed sick. And I think that in all New York there was not one boy so poor and ragged but enjoyed more that day than this crazy little pet who burned up at least sixty dollars' worth of pop and fiz. "I tell you I'd like to have sixty dollars' worth of Fourth of July! I'd have fun!" I hear some of the boys saying. Yes, I remember when I was about eleven years old, and off at school they used to give me just one piece of pie for desert, after dinner. It tasted so good, and was gone so soon, that I used to think of it all the way down the hill as I went to recitation, and wish that it was one big mince pie for a half mile, and I had to eat my way through it as a worm eats into an apple—eat and go. And I have seen boys start to eat up a candy cane. But before they had chewed and sucked up half of it they were sick enough of it. The confectioners understand this. And so when they take a new boy into the shop to work, they tell him to eat all the candy he wants. He never eats much but once. He gets sick of the sweets, and hates them as a fly does the molasses in which he is stuck and drowning. Here is a fable:

A man in the mint was told that he might take away one pocketful of gold, if he would run right straight home with it and not stop by the way, nor touch his pocket. So he filled his largest pocket full of gold and started for home. But as he was running down a little hill the gold hung heavy, tore off his pocket, and fell down in the road. When he had got home and found his gold and his pocket gone together, "Alas!" said he, "had I taken less I should have more."

All the real fun that we ever get we must take in by little temperate pocketfuls. If we overload once or twice, that ends the matter. That pocket will never hold any more fun at all.

"It is such fun when the holidays come, and we don't have to go to school!" Yes, that's so. But did you ever stop to think that one good thing that school does for you is to make you hungry for holiday and vacation? The hardest work in the world is to do nothing all the time. We never get a good appetite for dinner if we keep on nibbling cookies and eating apples all the morning, just for fun.

I think if I could find a long, long hill—say one hundred miles long—and covered with snow, packed and shiny from top to bottom, and start a lot of boys to coast down it all day—all down and no up—they would get their pockets full of coasting very soon. Pulling a sled up the hill makes us hungry for the slide down. Work first and then play. Earn it and then enjoy it. Get hungry and then eat. Get tired and then sleep.

Sometimes when a girl has grown up to be a woman, and the right man has come, and they are married, the rich and loving father gives her a splendid new house, and a conservatory, and stables with horses and carriages. There is new furniture in every room; there are pictures on the walls, piles of household linnen in the presses and table-ware in the closets. No rent to pay; nothing to do but just be happy. Dear, fond old father, what has been the happiness of your own life? Has it been the having, or rather the wanting, the earning, the expecting, and at last the having? Why then deny to your child all that has ennobled and rewarded your own life and labor?

What men really enjoy is not that which is stuffed into them of sweetness growing sweeter and sweeter to a surfeit, but what they really need, and go out to find, or win, or earn by labor and well deserving.

See those pale-faced children huddling round the stove or over the fuming register to get warm just before breakfast! See those other boys who have been out to the barn and fed the cattle and hens; or those girls who have stirred around and set the table, and swept off the snow from the stoop and steps of the house. Which are the warm ones? Those who are soaking up warmth into their lazy bones and bodies, or those who are making the fire of health to burn inside? Which is best, a good appetite, or rich food? Which is best, a little pleasure daily, lasting as long as our lives, or a few years of surfeit, and a lifetime of querulous dyspepsia?

He who aims to do all his duties perfectly, will surely find all the pleasures that he can enjoy. The duty shall whet his appetite for pleasure, and the pleasure rest and recreate the man for duty. Enough's enough.—T. K. Beecher.

Obituary.

IRWIN. In Buchanan, Mich., April 16, 1872, Nancy, wife of James Irwin: aged 69 years, 5 months and 16 days.

She was stricken with paralysis suddenly upon her return from church where she had just borne a faithful and remarkably interesting testimony. She was, as she said, all ready for the kingdom. Her sleep is sleep in Jesus. The mourning circle—husband, children and friends, is a very large one. Many will miss her. But the good will all meet her in the resurrection at the coming of Jesus.

Services by F. H. Berrick.

MULFORD. In Rochester, N. Y., April 8, Charles Mulford: aged 79 years.

He was one of the earliest Adventists, and did much for the cause. He has been a great sufferer for many years. He was known in Rochester as a man of clear convictions, firmness and consistency, always acting fully up to his views of duty, and independently of class or sect. He was a friend of the poor and the oppressed, always an earnest opponent of slavery, and of undoubted and inherited patriotism. For thirty-four years he lived in the house where he died, No. 4, New Main St.

Services by Dr. Shaw.

WEAVER. In Hesperia, Mich., [date not given, Ed.] Emma, wife of L. D. Weaver: aged 27 years, 1 month and 27 days.

Thus she follows her sister, who died in March of the same disease, pulmonary consumption. Our loved one is taken away, and we mourn until the resurrection shall restore her again in immortal bloom and beauty.

L. D. W.

CARLISLE. At Lenox, Kane Co. Ill. May 24, after an illness of several weeks, terminating in derangement of mind, Mrs. Permelia Carlisle: aged 77 years, 2 months and 17 days.

Sr. Carlisle was a mother in Israel. She had for many years been a member of the regular Baptist Church, but for the last few years had expected to live to see the coming of the Lord in his kingdom. She leaves four children, many grand-children and friends as mourners.

Sermon by the writer from 2 Tim. 1: 10, to a very large assembly. A. A. CROCKER.

PATTY. In Victoria, Knox Co. Ill. April 30, 1872, Nora S. daughter of Br. and Sr. Obed Patty; aged 10 months and 26 days.

Little Nora was a precious flower, but death has torn her from our embrace. Praise be to him who is able to restore, and cause her to bloom again in a fairer clime than this.

Brother, Sister, weep not o'er the dead,
Thine eyes from tears now refrain,
Little Nora shall come from her low dusty bed,
You'll greet her on Eden's fair plain.

Sermon from 2 Ki. 4: 26. "Is it well with the child?"
